Now what are the liberals going to do? Were we or were we not correct in blaming the Junkers and talking of the Huns? And what of the effects of German philosophy and theology?—Christian Standard.

THE NEED OF CONFIDENCE

Despair never solved important problems nor improved distressing conditions. Every thoughtful person we know says our greatest trouble today is lack of confidence. Hard as conditions are, a student of our national history learns that there have been times when worse conditions prevailed. Loss of material supplies is bad enough and we do not minimize it, but loss of spiritual assets is far worse. Wickedness is worse than poverty. We do not know what the future has in store, but retaining our faith in things unseen and eternal, we will not be wholly lost. Plans of men may be helpful, but it is God who can raise us out of our distresses. It is a time to trust him. In his time and in his way he will bring solution and deliverance. We can get out of our perplexities most rapidly by sincere repentance and turning to God. Churches should be crowded as they have sometimes been in other hard periods. So far as we can see there is no widespread turning to God in our nation. We turn to beer, we turn to our governmental authorities, we turn to discussion, but not to him who alone can save us. Pray for a great awakening of all our people.—The Presbyterian.

TYPICALLY MEDIEVAL

The little man on the Tiber has proclaimed 1933 a "Holy Year" to celebrate the nineteen hundredth anniversary of the passion and death of Christ. On April 2, with much paganistic ceremonial, he took a gold hammer (would that not look incongruous in the hands of the Galilean carpenter?) and knocked loose some bricks in a blocked-up door of St. Peter's Church at Rome to inaugurate this special year.

The Romanist authorities in New York City, conceived the brilliant idea of seizing upon President Roosevelt's "New Deal" and some of the phrases in his inaugural address and tying them into this "Holy Year" with a special ceremony utilizing not only the splendid new Rockefeller Center, but also the customary trick of a Catholic-Protestant-Jew sponsoring committee. So they got John D. Rockefeller's great hall, and they got Mr. S. Parkes Cadman and Mr. Harry Emerson Fosdick and Mr. Nicholas Murray Butler thus to do homage to the power and authority of the Roman hierarchy and the temporal sovereign who rolls in the pile of wealth on the Tiber.

Of course, the pope is behind the times, as usual. We celebrated three years ago the nineteenth centennial of Jesus' great work of establishing his church. But the papacy a few decades ago announced its infallibility and since it had some centuries ago adopted the erratic chronology of Dionysius Exiguus, a Catholic priest of the sixth century, of course the Roman hierarchy can not afford to make any correction now. It must stand by its figures which are at least three years off.

That error on the matter of the date is but symptomatic of the medievalism of the whole proceeding.

Mr. Butler, Mr. Cadman and Mr. Fosdick are educated. They know what it all means. They know about the indulgences already proclaimed for this year. They know about the superstitious pilgrimages to the seat of the pope already urged upon the faithful. They know how utterly out of keeping it all is with what Jesus set out to do. They know it is a relic of medieval religion. But it serves their political purposes and their developing desires for unity at any price, and particularly through hierarchy and forms of ritual, thus to do the bidding of the Holy See.—Christian Standard.

CATHOLIC FRANCE IN LOUISIANA

"A lost French nation right here within the borders of the United States." So does Maurice Aguilard describe the people of Southern Louisiana. "The priests are losing control of them; they are coming to our services and being converted right along. We have calls from everywhere to preach to them. For three hundred miles along the river, a belt one hundred miles wide, ninety per cent of the people are French, and in all the parishes they have never heard the voice of a true prophet.

"There are over a half million of them. Many speak no English. Only a fraction have ever seen or heard of the Bible, but a great change is coming over them. They are being educated and their eyes opened. They see that there is nothing in Catholicism, and are leaving it in large numbers. But unless they are evangelized in the next twelve or fifteen years they will turn to infidelity and all kinds of isms. They are in such a state now that they can be shaped into Christians, but if left alone they will become so hardened that no kind of hammering will move them. I dare say that there are no other people on earth more ready for the Gospel than these French people."

There is a call for the Faivre Annotated French New Testament for them. These little Testaments are in themselves evangelists. If there are those who wish to collaborate in this effective type of work I suggest they communicate with Pasteur Fernand Faivre, 191, Rue Mouneyra, Bordeaux, France. Pastor Faivre is also preparing to publish a Spanish edition of his Testament. The value of this Testament for Romanists, and for untutored minds generally, is that the notes in the text make clear the way of slavation. —S. S. Times.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humbert

(Study Number Seventeen)

Studying this Book

For a further study in the Book of Revelation, I would advise the three books by Joseph Seiss and "The book of Revelation" by Clarence Larkins. However, the one great source of blessing is to be found in "reading" (Rev. 1:3).

When I was a small boy, I read the book several times. I have now read it some fifty times, memorized large portions, read from many conflicting writers, and prayed for the leading of the Holy Spirit into the correct understanding. How far I have come from the correct interpretation, I cannot tell. I only know that, with my eyes upon the warning (Rev. 22:18, 19), I have striven to find its true meaning and application. These studies are given with the supposition that the reader has the Bible open at the passage.

Chapter Seven

We have come to chapter seven in our studies. Six seals have been broken, bringing great judgments upon the earth. One more remains to be loosed and the title deed will be open. Christ will then descend and take possession of the earth. But the seventh seal is not merely an event, it is more a series of events including the trumpets and the vials. It also includes the parenthetical chapters, that is, chapters that do not carry on in matter of time but turn aside to give another view.

Canaan and the Jew

The land of Canaan belongs to the Jew, the deed is written in heaven (Gen. 17:8). The Scriptures, however, reveal three dispossessions and restorations. Abraham's seed was to be a stranger in another land and serve that nation for four hundred years. When the time of their deliverance drew nigh, Moses was born (Acts 7:17-20) and after terrible plagues were visited upon Egypt, the Israelites came out of the land (Ex. 12:41).

In the second dispossession the Jews were to be out of their land and serve the king of Babylon for seventy years (Jer. 25:11). Near the close of this period Daniel, who was in the captivity, read what Jeremiah said and set his face unto the Lord. Over one hundred years before, Isaiah had prophesied that Cyrus would issue the decree to rebuild Jerusalem (Isa. 44:28). Cyrus was born, grew up and became king and sent Ezra to rebuild Jerusalem (Ezra 1).

The warning of the third dispossession was given in Deuteronomy 26:64, and fulfilled when Titus destroyed Jerusalem in 70 A. D. and scattered the Jews "among all people". This third dispossession continues at this present time and will continue "until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:24). The Jews will then go back to their land and possess it during the Kingdom Age (Jer. 23 and 30).

The book of Exodus gives us the history of the return after the first dispossession, the book of Ezra is concerned with the second return and the book of Revelation deals with the third.

God Makes a Difference

When God was bringing the Jews out of Egypt, he visited great plagues upon that nation and in the final restoration, some of the same plagues will be visited upon the entire world. During the time of most of the plagues in Egypt, God made a difference between his people and the Egyptians, his people being spared (Ex. 8:22, 23).

It will be thus in the last restoration. Chapter seven of the book of Revelation shows God making a difference in one hundred forty-four thousand Israelites.

There is a lull in the storm of events. Earth seems on the verge of ruin but, as over and over in this book, God pauses before a great judgment to give comfort to his people. During the coming troubles, one hundred forty-four thousand Jews will be immune because they will have the seal of God in their foreheads. Contrast this with the condition of those who have the mark of the beast in their foreheads, who "have no rest day nor night" (Rev. 14:11).

Let us not charge John with ignorance when, speaking of the four directions, he calls them the "four corners of the earth" (Vs. 1). The "Circle of the earth" was well known even in Isaiah's time (Isa. 40:22).

Evangelizing the World

People often wonder if anyone will be saved during the Tribulation. In this chapter we see an innumerable company out of every nation that will come up out of the great tribulation (Vs. 14).

The "gospel of the kingdom (not the gospel of grace) shall be preached in all the world" (Matt. 24:14). The gospel of grace (unmerited favor) was given to Paul by special revelation (Eph. 3:2, 3) but the gospel of the kingdom (the king is here, receive him) was proclaimed by John the Baptist and the twelve apostles (Matt. 3:2 and 10:7). They went to Israel only (Matt. 10:5), but in the final proclamation, the whole world will hear (Matt. 24:14). Those who proclaim this gospel and declare God's glory among the Gentiles, will be righteous Israelites (Isa. 66:19). I am uncertain as to the time element here but since the hundred forty-four thousand are kept by supernatural power (Rev. 9:4), it may be that they are to be those who proclaim this message. At any rate, the Jews are in every nation. They know the language, the customs and are used to the climate. It will merely take a special endowment of the Holy Spirit to enable them to evangelize the world almost over night. Turn a hundred forty-four thousand Pauls loose on the world and something will happen.

The 144,000 Sealed Ones

The innumerable company of verse nine may be their converts, who have given heed to the message and been martyred. Whether the hundred forty-four thousand are finally killed as the two witnesses (Ch. 11:7) or may be translated, I am unable to say but in chapter fourteen they are safe in heaven, singing a new song before the throne, having been "redeemed from the earth". Many went from the dispensation of law to grace without dying and it may be so with the hundred forty-four thousand, who are to be preserved as a nucleus of the coming kingdom.

"Not defiled with women" (Ch. 14:4) does not mean that they are all unmarried men, nor "they are virgins" does not mean that they are young women. If this is the same company that Isaiah 66:19 mentions as escaping the judgment upon the ungodly swine eating bunch of verse 17, we can easily see the reference here. At any rate, a man or a woman untrue to their wedding vow is an adulterer or an adulteress and a Christian who seeks friendship with the world is a spiritual adulterer, (James 4:4) for his relation to Christ is as a husband and wife, (Eph. 5). This group in Revelation fourteen will not be defiled by seeking world friendship but will, like John the Baptist, be absolutely separate from it and calling it to repentance (Rev. 14:4, 5).

Evangelistic Evangelicalism

The Note of Sin

There is, first of all, the note of sin. Has that dropped out of our preaching? Under the title, "The Confessions of a Church Goer," a writer in a certain magazine says, "It would appear as though we in the pews no longer have sins worth talking about. We have mental complexes, distorted points of view, and all that sort of thing, but as for the Garden of Eden variety of sin, it seems to be as scarce among us as the dodo. They say some of the so-called fundamentalists talk about sin, and that among certain other 'schools of thought,' long since decadent, it is an accepted subject. Perhaps it is, but it is a shame that such an expressive word should be confined to the vocabulary of controversy, and not used in the field of practical living."

Is that a true indictment? Then it is time we got back to reality and faced the fact of fallen human nature and the only way of recoverability, by the cross of Christ. To deny man's lost condition is simply to bite on granite, and to ignore it is the crown of folly. If man is not a sinner, Christianity is a farce; but if Christianity is a reality, it is because sin is a fact.

The Note of Redemption

Another major note in the music of the gospel is redemption by the sacrifice on Calvary. The great thing in Christianity is that the death of Christ was propitiatory, expiatory, reconciling. On the cross, "guiltless blood for guilty men was shed." The love of God, which is set forth in the New Testament, is not just divine benevolence, but suffering love, bleeding love, dying love, atoning love, the love of Calvary. This, of course, is an offense to many; they say that a sanguinary religion repeals them; but such should think again, and make the great discovery that the cross is not aesthetic, but moral; it does not appeal to our sense of beauty, but to our consciousness of sin; it was not erected to satisfy the canons of taste, but to make possible the forgiveness of our transgressions, and though Cowper's hymn has been severely criticised on several grounds, the church continues to sing, as expressive of a deep spiritual experience,

There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Emmanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains.

Say, if you will, that that is untheological and unrefined, but the experience of a countless multitude will affirm that it is true; for "without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." The gibbet displays the glory of God, the glory of his righteousness, and the glory of his love, and this is the only way of salvation.

The Note of Judgment

Other great notes in the divine harmony are repentance and faith and forgiveness and holiness and, unwelcome though it may be, judgment also. Yes, that is a note in the divine harmony. "And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever." Think about that, and about this phrase also, "The wrath of the Lamb." I know of no more terrifying phrase in human language than that. But do we preach it? We may smile at the hell of the Puritans and early revivalists, but with all our progress and pride we have not got rid of hell. Modernism may reject the hell of medievalism, but it cannot get rid of the element of righteousness in the moral government of the world. Many men and women walking our streets are now writhing in the lambent flame. As long as man is moral and sin is loved, there must be hell. "No one fears God nowadays," was the sigh of Dr. Dale shortly before he died. But fear is still one of the great human emotions, and God will be feared sooner or later.

The Revival of a Spiritual Passion

These, then, are some of the "grand particularities," as Chalmers would say, and if we would have a great spiritual awakening in our land and over the world, we must return to faith in these, and to the faithful proclamation of them. In his Confessions, Thomas De Quincy speaks of his minister-guardian as a preacher "sincere, but not earnest." He had 330 sermons, and these were all very ordinary and ethical and passionless. But one day De Quincy heard quoted two lines which strangely moved him. They were,

I preached, as never sure to preach again;
And as a dying man to dying men.

"This couplet," he says, "which seemed to me, equally for weight and for splendor, like molten gold, laid bare another aspect of the catholic church—revealed it as a church militant and crusading." Yes, that is what the church must become again. Our intellectual misgivings and scholastic theorizing have paralyzed our practical usefulness, but we must get back to a few convictions, and preach them with silver-trumpet certainty and melody. Evangelical theology is not a philosophical concept, but an experimental science, and if it be proclaimed as such with conviction, tenderness, and joy, we shall see again a day of God's right hand upon us.

"There is a sound of the feet of the rain-storm" said Elijah. Have you heard it? Can you hear it now? It would not have tarried so long if the church had believed more simply, and prayed more earnestly, and labored more diligently to bring to Christ the souls for whom he died. Formalism on the one hand, and worldliness on the other hand have almost destroyed the church as a soul-saving agency. Our business as churches is, in the first place, to bring men and women and children face to face with Christ the Savior, and thereafter to teach them, and organize them for service in the embrace of the will of God.

If we are not doing that, we are failing. Too many churches are just religious clubs, and not too much religion about them at that; but with revival all that will be changed; indeed, the change will be revival. God provides his Spirit, his Word, and his throne, and he asks us to trust him to finish through us his redeeming work. No revival can ever come, apart from prayer, the Bible, and the Holy Spirit, but by these the church of God becomes invincible. What is to be your personal and your church's answer to the present challenge?—The King's Business.

A Walk to Bethlehem

Escorted by a Student of the Land and of the Book

By Herbert H. Tay, San Dimas, California

Bethlehem! What a host of memories and emotions that name stirs within our breasts! The watching shepherds, the angelic message, the guiding star, the virgin mother, the Son of God—all these memories flood our minds and swell our hearts until the Christmas season is, to us, the most blessed season of all the year. How we wish we could have been there on that first Christmas Eve! How thrilling it would have been to be a part of the milling throngs which surged back and forth in the streets of the City of David that memorable night! If only we could have been in the field with the shepherds and gone with them to the manger cradle, what spiritual rapture would have been ours! But the first Christmas has passed, and it can live for us only in memory.

Yet it is possible to visit the site of the Savior's birth, and to look upon many of the same scenes which the holy family witnessed over nineteen hundred years ago. Through the providence of God, the Holy Land has changed very little since that day.

It has been inhabited by a people who have cared little for modern mechanical progress, and who have been content to live in the same way as have their ancestors for countless generations. They look like the people who lived in the days of our Lord. They think the same, they act the same, and they have left many of the sacred spots just the same as they were then. Let us then walk to the Bethlehem of today, which so much resembles the Bethlehem of yesterday, and let the message of God in the roads and the hills and the houses and the trees speak to us of that happy event of long ago.

We begin our walk at Jerusalem, and traverse the path along which the Galilean carpenter and his virgin wife walked in the days of old. The Jaffa Gate, through which we make our way, pierces the gray city walls on the westward side. We follow the road down across the Valley of Hinnom, and out upon the slightly rolling plain that stretches away to the south toward Bethlehem. The fields on each side, barren and rocky during the summer and fall, are now becoming softened by the tender springing grass. Here and there a scattered olive tree breaks the monotony of the landscape, and along the roadside, the early winter flowers are beginning to lend their color to the scene. The pungent odor of the earth dampened by the recent rains, and the welcome warmth of the winter sun shining (Continued on page 14)

Lesson Text: Mark 10:13-31

The Two Great Commandments. Matthew 22:34-40

Previous to the advent of our Lord mankind had a very meager conception of loving human relationships. The Jewish people were more or less familiar with the Ten Commandments in their religious life, but as to their social implications, I am afraid they gave little heed to them.

It is so easy for men to become selfish. They may sincerely feel that the one and great commandment is "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, etc., but until Jesus raised the standard of love to one's neighbor up to the point where it can be said to rank next to one's love to God, too little thought was given to the importance of this great human relationship. Could this great truth be impressed upon the minds of the majority of professing Christians it would provide the cure for many of the social ills of the present day.

TUESDAY

The Standard of Divorce. Mark 10:1-12

It is a trite saying that the strength of a nation is no greater than the strength of the home life of that nation. Not only had the Jewish people forgotten God in a very large way, but this was reflected in their personal and family life as well. Because their hearts were hard the law had permitted them to issue bills of divorce, but from the beginning it was not so intended.

America, as well as many other nations of the world, needs to take heed to this new standard that Jesus raised. The loose marital practices of America are leaving their mark upon the youth of our country.

Some years ago the writer was in charge of a Chautauqua in a beautiful little city in Michigan, when on one day the business men took their cars and brought one hundred and fifty children from a nearby state institution to hear one of the programs. As I stood before these children they had a rather depressing effect upon me. Some of them were exceptionally handsome from a physical standpoint, but there was that about the expression of their countenances that caused me to feel fully ninety percent of them were sub-normal. I called the attention of the principal of the high school to the matter and he agreed with me. I then spoke to the superintendent of the institutional school and asked him whether the children were incorrigibles that they had been placed in this institution. Now listen to his reply, "No, not many of them are delinquent children. Most of them are children of parents whose homes have been broken up by divorce."

WEDNESDAY

The Child-like Spirit. Mark 10:13-16

Too many parents fail to realize the responsibility that is theirs when children come into their homes. Too many are really not fit to be parents. Children never received the consideration by their elders before the coming of Jesus into the world that they have since. He was and is the children's friend, and he placed a new emphasis upon the necessity of all men and women developing the simplicity and trustfulness of a little child, if they would inherit his kingdom.

THURSDAY

Complete Obedience Demanded. Mark 10: 17-22

Eternal life seems to be the great desire in universal mankind. Many people sought Jesus that they might learn the way of this life. Not every one found the way or found the life, because, like this rich young ruler, admirable in character though he might be, they were not willing to go all the way with Jesus. They were not willing to render ABSOLUTE obedience to his will. The fully surrendered life is the standard Jesus set for his followers.

FRIDAY

Danger of Trusting in Riches. Mark 10: 23-31

It seems to me that men have trusted in riches to a larger extent during the last decade than in any other like period of the world's history; but what has been the result? Confusion and disaster on every hand. Yet good may come out of the present distress. Men may learn to place a right value upon the real things of life. Recently a banker said to me, "No material thing is stable any more. Houses, lands, stocks, bonds, money, nothing is stable. After all is said and done, only the spiritual things have real value." Millions of men who have been trusting in riches have been swept from their moorings, and they have learned, if they have learned anything, that their only security is in Christ Jesus.

SATURDAY

Living with Others. Matthew 5:38-48

It is hard for some people to get along peaceably with themselves, and it is doubly hard for them to get along peaceably with others. But we must learn to live with others. Even Robinson Crusoe on his lonely isle found he must take into consideration the wellbeing of others when his good man Friday came into his life. It is not always easy to live with others. The apostle Paul recognized human limitations when he wrote to some of the early churches; but Jesus shows in the verses of this lesson how this may be accomplished in the most successful manner.

SUNDAY

The Mind of the Master, Philippians 2:1-11

"Have this mind in you which was also in Christ Jesus," says the apostle Paul, and what better advice can be found anywhere? Some of us might be better than we are, if we had the mind of Confucius, or of Plato, or of Socrates, or of Martin Luther, or Wesley, or of Alexander Mack; but the mind of no man can fill the need of the human heart like the Mind of the Master. Happy indeed are they who can say as Paul said when he wrote his first epistle to the Corinthians, "But we have the mind of Christ." Such a possession can not be improved upon, but it can be enjoyed more and more as the years come and go.

A Forty-five Minute Prayer-Meeting Program

Proposed by the Extension Department, Philadelphia Christian Endeavor Union

(Stanley Healy, Extension Secretary)

This is but one of the many varieties of programs for the young people's devotional meeting. The program should be changed frequently to create interest and to offer new opportunities of training for young people. From this outline it is hoped you may develop some original and novel programs that will increase interest in every meeting.

Pre-prayer service. Five minutes previous to the devotional meeting, in charge of the chairman of the prayer-meeting committee or the Quiet Hour chairman, and given to definite prayers for the success of the meeting, for the leader, and for the development of the devotional life of the members.

Opening of the devotional meeting. Always begin promptly at the specified time.

Seven minute song service. The hymns when possible should blend with the topic of the meeting.

Three minute announcements. Brief and to the point, and only those that are essential should be permitted. If announcements followed the leader's talk, as is the practice in some societies, they might detract from the spirit of the message and the later discussion.

Three minute Scripture period. More emphasis should be placed on the Scripture reading. Endeavor to create greater interest and more reverence. Vary the method of reading, the leader and the group alternating, or the girls and the boys.

Four minute special music period. Provide a soloist or an instrumental number bringing a devotional message. Endeavorers should take part whenever possible.

Seven minutes of prayer. A prayer circle or season of prayer, which should be definite in purpose when possible. There is greater power in united prayer.

Three minutes for hymn and offering. We are offering to God our substance to be used in his work. Let the offering period be one of reverence and significance.

Five minutes for presenting the topic. The speaker should select one thought, using not more than five minutes to develop this.

Ten minutes for participation. None should be lengthy in his remarks. Every member should participate. When societies are too large for every member to participate within a reasonable time, the matter of dividing the group, at least for the presentation and discussion of the topic, should be seriously considered.

Three minutes for the closing hymn and the benediction. Vary the benediction, using the Mizpah benediction, a selection from the Psalms, the Lord's Prayer, or other appropriate verses.

Societies that conduct their devotional meeting preceding the evening church service should always close the meetings on time, so that every one will have ample time to go into the church service.—C. E. World.

A VERSE FROM ONE OF OUR YOUNG PEOPLE

MY PRAYER

Guide me, kind Father
Along life's path,
Strengthen me daily
To turn from all wrath.
Show me thy love,
Understanding, and peace;
In patience and goodness
May I daily increase.

—Virginia Smith, Arnold, Pennsylvania.

John Frost, another Crow Indian, had only gone through seven grades of education but when he was converted he at once began to preach. He had never even read the Bible but a good woman who knew her Book, taught him to apply himself and before long he was given charge of a station among his own people. He has accomplished more for his Lord than many a college and seminary graduate with long training. Listen to him plead with an Indian congregation.

"At one time," he said, "all of us worshipped the eagle. Some part of his body was good medicine to us. Not long ago when I was visiting up in the mountains, at the home of a Christian friend of mine, who did not worship the eagle, I saw that he and his boys had caught a young eagle and had chained it to a small platform. I told him that he ought to let it go free for God meant it to soar in the clouds and not be tied down. After some talk they cut it loose, but it did not seem to know that it was free to fly. It walked around eating scraps of meat that had been out of its reach. They tried to scare it away but it would not go. Finally one of the boys took off his coat and whipped it. It looked surprised and then tried its wings and was off. It soared in the air and finally lighted on the topmost peak of a nearby mountain. That is like a lot of our own people. They live tied down to earth by sin, eating scraps of food that they can pick up by the way. They do not know that Jesus has paid the price to set them free from sin, but some are finally startled into action. They find that they are really free and raise their wings to fly aloft."

Sherman Coolidge, a full blooded Northern Arapaho Indian, was found by General Coolidge on the battlefield. The general adopted him and in due time sent him to school. Later he was graduated from college and from Seabury Divinity School, was ordained a priest in the Protestant Episcopal church, and served as a missionary to his own tribe for almost twenty years. He became a rector of a white congregation, and was advanced to the position of Canon in the Episcopal Cathedral of Denver where he served until his death in January, 1932. His story is told in Who's Who. He was known far and wide for his gentle Christian spirit, fine ideals and earnest purpose to serve his Lord.

Chief Left Hand, a war chief of the Southern Arapaho, was converted late in life. He made a touching Jesus talk at the Northern Baptist Convention in Oklahoma City in 1908. As he sat down a white haired old preacher arose and said, "Forty-four years ago I lived in Denver and enlisted in the army to fight the Indians then on the war path. At the battle of Big Sandy, Left Hand led the Arapahos. I sought his blood that day, but today I am his blood brother in Jesus Christ, our Lord." These words created a profound sensation so that the great audience called the preacher to the platform and those two old men, one time warriors and enemies on the field of battle, embraced each other with joy. That is what the Gospel does for the Red Man, and for the white man too. Bob Burdette, describing this scene to one who had not witnessed it said: "It impressed me so much that I believe I will be telling that story over and over again after I have been in heaven a million years."

Twice-born Indians I Have Known

By Bruce Kinney

The American Indian is an interesting character, but needs the Gospel of Christ, just as do all other classes and races of people. We are glad for these glimpses of our red brethren who have found Christ and are engaged in His service.

White Arm is a Crow Indian who thirty years ago had never heard of the Gospel. In fact it is not known that any of his tribe was then living the Christian life. When he first heard the story of Jesus it sounded good to him; he gave up his allotment for the use of the missionary and took another not as valuable. Several years passed before he could make up his mind to walk in the Jesus Road. Finally he went to a great convention with the missionary and was so impressed that he accepted Christ. Some Indians there, not of his own tribe, helped him to understand the Gospel by means of the sign language.

White Arm was asked, through an interpreter, how he knew that he was a Christian. The Indian has a habit of thinking before he talks much on any important matter—not a bad habit. After considering he told the following experience:

"I knew I had a bad heart. It was not necessary for the missionary to tell me that. But I did not know how to get rid of it. The missionary told me to pray to Jesus and he would give me a new heart. I prayed and prayed but it did not seem to do any good. I believed the missionary would not tell me a crooked story so I kept on praying. It was like a dark room, no windows, no light. I could not see. I kept on praying and all of a sudden, just like a man strikes a match, I could see."

White Arm had never read God's Word in any language. He had never heard "The entrance of thy word giveth light," and other similar passages. But this untutored pagan described in his own language the change that had taken place in his soul.

Buffalo Meat was a Southern Cheyenne warrior who led his people in the "last outbreak" of that tribe against the white man. He was considered so dangerous that, when he was captured, he was taken in chains and kept a prisoner in the fortress at St. Augustine, Florida, lest he incite his people to new wars. When finally he was released a mission had been established near his home and his keen mind was not long in detecting the difference this influence had made in his people. He became a Christian and for years led an exemplary life. He was elected a deacon and could be seen serving the Lord's Supper with dignity.

Gotebo, long a Kiowa warrior, standing on a chair at a great meeting, speaks to more than a thousand Indians of different tribes assembled together. Holding up a walking cane, he says, "When I cut this stick in the forest it was so crooked that it looked as though it could never be made straight. I wet it and twisted and bent it and put it in the sun. Then, after it had been in a vise for a long time, I whittled and polished it. Now see how fine and smooth it is.

You see me. I led a crooked life for a long time. I used to go on the raid with my tribe and would attack an Indian camp or a white settlement and plunder it. When I found a sleeping baby of an enemy I would grab it by the heel and throw it into the air and catch it on the point of my spear. Then Jesus took me in his hands and twisted me. How it did hurt at times! Finally he made me straight enough so that I could walk in the Jesus way. I do not see how Jesus could forgive a man like me but he did and he will forgive you if you follow him. When I was young I never heard of the Jesus Road and the forgiveness of Jesus. Perhaps that was some excuse for me. But you have heard it so that now you have no excuse. Don't put it off longer but take him today."

Hugo Bonna, a full blooded Yavapai, has some education. He found Jesus Christ as his Savior and for many years was a faithful employe in the smelter at Clarkdale, Arizona, winning the confidence of white and Indian employees. For several years he studied under a nearby white pastor five or six times a week, and for three years now he has devoted his whole time to Christian work. He has two organized churches and drives thousands of miles seeking otherwise neglected groups of Indians.

Time and space limitations do not allow me to tell of David Owl (Cherokee), Gabe Parker (Cherokee), Henry Roe Cloud (Winnebago), Arthur Parker (Seneca), Ruth Hicks, Richard Aitson and other outstanding Indians who have done great things for God and humanity because of their love for Jesus Christ. A great host are graduating from schools and colleges or are taking graduate work to fit them for teaching, preaching and other forms of useful service, all in the name of Christ. One such teacher wrote: "For a long time I was in doubt what I should do. Today, in this governmental Indian school, I have 100 young Indians in my classes in the regular day school and in Sunday school. I have found my life work and when I see their eager brown faces looking up into mine, I am thrilled at the opportunities to lead them into better ways."—Missionary Review of the World.

number who are engaged in the work of missions. The program was excellent. All of the auxiliary work continues strong under capable and spiritual leaders. We have at present but one Christian Endeavor society, This is not an ideal arrangement, but seems best for us at present. All ages attend and participate with very good results. The Sunday school continues to grow. We are feeling the need of more room. The average attendance for the year 1932 was 215. More intensive work should be done, such as leadership training work and Bible study groups. Some plans are being considered. Brother Percy Yett was with us recently for an evening. A large audience was in attendance. This lecture did much to further enlighten our people and thus link us more closely with the South American work. Our prayers follow Brother Yett.

A special season of revival meetings was enjoyed from March 5 to 19. This was our most largely attended meeting, the average attendance being, over the period of two weeks, 236. The music was in charge of choir director, Robert M. Wagaman. In addition to the singing of two large choirs, there was special music at each service either by our own or visiting singers. Much time was spent in prayer and personal work. The pastor was ably assisted by a people keenly interested in the work of the church and alive to their opportunities to lead others to Christ. The visible results of the meetings were 16 added to the church by baptism and 13 renewals, and one has been added by baptism since. Prior to the meeting 10 had been received by baptism and one by letter.

Easter Sunday was a red letter day. In spite of a steady rain the attendance was large at all of the services. Goals were not quite reached but the communion in the evening was the largest in the history of the church, 186 participating in this blessed service. A goodly number were detained on account of sickness and weather. But numbers were not all. The service throughout was deeply spiritual, and a sense of oneness in Christ was keenly felt. Three devotional services were held during passion week.

We rejoice in the victories which are being won for Christ and the church. May we ask that you remember us at the throne of grace.

We have some good news to report from this field, and we are sure that the entire brotherhood will rejoice with us in the same.

Making use of the Easter season, we have been stressing evangelism at all of the regular services of the church and all of its organizations for several weeks, as well as by personal visitations.

The two Sundays preceding Easter we had confessions and baptisms, and on Easter Sunday evening we had five more baptisms, making ten in all, received by baptism.

We are following up and expect to reach others as several are interested in their soul's welfare.

Nine of the churches of the city held union meetings for two weeks at one of the large churches, at which the pastors took turns in bringing the message, and all stressing the note of evangelism. While this was a splendid fellowship, as far as I know none of our accessions were from that meeting. In fact there were no confessions at the union meeting.

SEMINARY NOTES

The Boys' Gospel Team of Ashland College, during Easter vacation, had teams in Muncie, Indiana and Osceola, Indiana, five meetings in each place. Also five meetings were held in Krypton, Kentucky. 14 meetings in Lost Creek, Kentucky, 4 meetings in Louisville, Ohio, and one meeting at Sullivan.

Recently the Girls' Gospel Team has sent deputations to Fremont, Madisonburg, and Greenwich, Ohio, and have scheduled meetings at Wooster and Shreve, Ohio.

Prof. A. J. McClain delivered the Good Friday address under the auspices of the Ashland Ministerial Association in the Christian church of our city, speaking on Galatians 2:20.

Prof. M. A. Stuckey conducted a Bible Conference last week at Rev. J. Gingrich's church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, for the Cambria County Young People. At this writing we have no information as to the Conference attendance.

The members of the Seminary faculty have given various addresses in nearby churches during the Easter season.

For our Seminary library we received a fine number of books from Dr. Mather, of Lincoln, Nebraska. We shall be glad to welcome other gifts of a similar nature, that our library may be still better equipped.

The report of the Secretary-Treasurer of the Seminary indicates that we have received this year $276.77 from the following sources: Long Beach church, Fair Haven and Canton, Ohio, churches, Ira Wilcox, Bible Conferences conducted by the Seminary faculty. Also we have received $50.00 from the National Sunday School Association for our library. Our books indicate a balance on hand April 1st, of $515.50, which means we have not touched the $500 granted us by the College Board last Spring.

The California Quartette has been frequently called on lately, indicating those churches hearing them during the summer will receive a splendid treat in sacred music. Easter week they conducted a revival at our Fair Haven church, doing both the preaching and singing. They gave a sacred concert the week before at our Smithville church, and recently in several other nearby churches.

As there has been no report from our little group here, we thought you would be pleased to know that we are still carrying on the good work. The Sunday school is progressing well under the efficient leadership of our Superintendent Mrs. O. S. Baer, who with great energy, tact and love keeps the wheels running smoothly. She is assisted by a corps of workers, who, as Paul admonishes the Philipians, are "striving together for the faith of the gospel." We have both Junior and Senior Christian Endeavor and a flourishing W. M. S.

On Easter Sunday after the Sunday school hour we had a good Easter program by the Junior Department, aided by the Young Ladies' class. A collection for Foreign Missions was taken at the close of the program and a very generous sum was raised which was swollen by contributions from faithful non-resident members. Immediately after the program the church held a business meeting followed by dinner in the basement. The dinner, while not too elaborate, still bore no evidence of the great depression about which we all complain. May God help his little band in Beaver City to be faithful workers in his vineyard.

It has been some time since we have reported to the Evangelist family. So long, indeed, that only a general statement of activities can be made. Our people have been active with the result that there has been marked numerical and spiritual growth. A number of records have, in recent months, been broken, and we have great reason for encouragement. Financially there has been a falling off, but this people has done very well when local conditions are considered.

The observance of special days has been a revelation of increased interest and growth in efficiency. The Sunday school put on two special programs, one in June and the other at Christmas time. These were rendered before large audiences and there was much favorable comment. The joint meeting of the four missionary societies brought to our attention the large

However, I am sure that it did generate a splendid atmosphere in the city for confessions.

Of course, by personal visitation, we interested some in our whole Gospel plea and prepared them for confession at the regular service. Our Sunday school teachers were also faithful in bringing to their pupils their need of Christ.

On Easter Sunday evening, after the baptism and the confirmation service we observed the Love Feast and there were 44 at the tables and about fifteen were there for their first time. It seemed to all of us, a very suitable memorial of our Lords' Resurrection.

Despite the depression and unemployment, which is the worst ever known here, we are endeavoring to keep our hopes bright and our spirits in harmony with the conquering Gospel of good cheer.

Remember us at the Throne of Grace.

A WALK BY BETHLEHEM

from a cloud-flecked, azure sky, quicken our spirits and fill us with the joy of living.

The plain which our road traverses gradually rises toward the south, and at length, after a walk of about two and a half miles, we come to its highest point, from which we have a most inspiring view of the surrounding country. Toward the north the narrow ribbon of road over which we have come wends its way between low, loose-rock walls until it slips through the "Needle's Eye" of the Jaffa Gate and disappears. Above the turreted walls of the Holy City, the sky is pierced by the spike-like minarets of the mosques. Between them may be seen the shining dome of the so-called "Mosque of Omar." It stands upon the site of the ancient temple, and we can well imagine that Joseph and Mary looked back upon it with reverence as they stood upon this spot almost two thousand years ago. Immediately to the east of the city rises the rounded dome of the Mount of Olives, while far to the north upon the horizon, the buildings of the village that once was Mizpeh of old can faintly be discerned.

As we turn toward the east, we gasp in amazement at the spectacle before us. The hills upon which we are standing seem to break away in serrated waves of wild and precipitous declivities which end in an awful gorge that seems to penetrate to the very bowels of the earth. At the bottom of this trench, almost thirteen hundred feet below the level of the Mediterranean, can be seen the gleaming blue waters of the Dead Sea, shimmering in the morning sunlight. Beyond the sea, softened by the purple haze of distance, the mountains of Moab rise in a blank and forbidding wall. Between us and the sea is a scene of wild desolation. Not a tree can be seen. The hills are barren and desolate and are cut by innumerable dry, rocky watercourses. In the daytime, the sun glares down mercilessly upon the weary traveler, while at night, the air is rent by the shrill cries of wild beasts. There is no more distressing sight in all Palestine than this barren stretch of God-forsaken country. It is the Wilderness of Judea.

Before we continue our walk to Bethlehem, let us look toward the south and west. How different this region is from that upon which we have just been looking! The summits of the rocky hills are softened by the silvery sheen of the leaves of olive trees. Here and there can be seen little patches of cultivated ground among the trees. The principal crop is grain, but occasionally one sees a vineyard. The hillsides are dotted here and there with little villages, the walls and dome-shaped roofs of the houses showing through the gently swaying branches of the olive trees. There is much more grass here, and occasionally we can see a shepherd, taking advantage of the natural growth of this region, leading his flock to another pasture. This is the hill country of Judea.

Crowning the summit of a little hill about two and a half miles to the south of us, like a gleaming gem in a silver setting, rises the little town of Bethlehem. How quiet and peaceful it looks in its lovely surroundings! It is just far enough from the bustling mart of trade and the hum of industry to afford an excellent spot of seclusion to which one may come for quiet meditation. As we continue our walk, we soon come to an ancient sepulcher known as the tomb of Rachel. It was here, we are told, that the wife of Jacob gave birth to Benjamin, and in the giving gave her life. She was buried here by the roadside, and her tomb is revered to this day by Christian, Jew, and Moslem alike.

Just beyond the tomb of Rachel, the road branches. The chief highway continues toward the south and west to Hebron and Beersheba. We take the less traveled road to the right, ascend the hill, and find ourselves in the City of David. How clean everything is! The houses are of hewn stone, and are in excellent condition. Many of them are surrounded by walls, and by peering through the gateways, we can see shrubs and flowers growing within. There are few streets, but those which are not used for vehicles are paved with cobblestones, worn smooth by the feet of devout pilgrims. As we wander through the narrow streets over which the buildings are often arched, we think of that memorable night long ago when Joseph and Mary walked these streets, looking for a lodging place and finding nothing but a stable.

We would like to spend hours just walking these historic streets, but other places of interest draw us on. As we are skirting the eastern side of the hill, we see about a mile or so to the east of us a little level valley. Making our way carefully down the winding trail, we come at length to our objective. It is the Field of Boaz. Since it is the only extensive piece of grain land near Bethlehem, it is probably the same as the one mentioned in the Old Testament. It is still planted with grain, and raises excellent crops. The little valley is now divided into several fields, and we notice with interest the whitewashed stones, used as landmarks, which are set here and there to mark the boundaries of the separate fields.

Let us go now to the village, that we may look upon the site which has been revered by Christians for hundreds of years as the place of the incarnation. We make our way up the rocky path to the Church of the Nativity. Stooping to pass through its low doorway, we find ourselves in a sort of vestibule. On the opposite side of this room is another doorway. Passing through it, we find ourselves in the church proper. The shadows cast by the age-old columns in the dusky aisles seem to emphasize the antiquity of the edifice. We walk quickly across the smooth flagstone floor to the chancel, from which we descend by stairs to the grotto of the nativity. The whole is overlaid with the ornaments and trappings of the ecclesiastical sects which own the church. As we brush aside the richly embroidered hangings of the walls, we discover the bare, rocky walls of a cave in the earth. They are blackened here and there by the smoke of many fires. In such a stable as this, Mary found lodging that night in which she brought forth her first-born Son. It was just a cave in the hillside. A temporary shelter for the beasts of the field became the palace of the Prince of Peace.

We stand for several moments with heads bowed in prayer and meditation. Then with slow steps, we leave the place with a new realization of the humiliation of the incarnation. He who existed in the form of God was willing to take his place with the cattle in the stable, in order that through suffering, climaxed by the agony of the cross, he might bring mankind to God. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."—From The King's Business.

PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION ON REPEAL

(The Christian Statesman has the following to say about the Repeal machinery being set up in Pennsylvania, which we republish for our large constituency in that state. The same admonition applies to many other states—Editor.)

Representatives of those opposed to the repeal of the 18th Amendment held a meeting in Harrisburg, March 13th to protest

AN EVENING MEDITATION

Arthur R. Baer

*Master, Was that a faithful promise thou didst make To him whose safe abiding place is found in Thee
In whom Thy Word, the Bread of Life doth daily break;
Who as a child in faith and trust shall make his plea?*

*Tell me again, I know thy promise still is true,
Thy promise does not waver 'tween a yes and no;
But firmly states to faithful hearts, "That will I do."
To fainting hearts, thy silence seems to come as no.*

*Thy help comes not in answer to a faithless plea.
When prayers come back from leaden skies upon my ears;
May I have grace to look at self the fault to see;
A doubting heart where faith should be,
then calms my fears.*

*For thou a Changeless God, must ever faithful be.
Now may I know thy will and ever pray aright,
And through Thy Word and Spirit that abides in me
Give faith with power before thy gracious throne this night.

against the McClure Bill providing for a Convention on Repeal in Pennsylvania passed by the Senate and now before the House, and to take steps either to have this bill amended or another bill introduced to provide for a convention so constituted as would be fair to both sides in the issue involved.

These representatives oppose particularly the provisions of the McClure Bill that 17 of the delegates be elected at large, and the rest, 34 in number, one from each of the Congressional districts of the State. They oppose the election of any delegates at large, of delegates chosen on the basis of Congressional districts and ask that the Convention be made up of 208 delegates chosen from the established districts from which the 208 members of the lower branch of the Legislature are elected. A Committee was appointed to convey their wishes to members of the Legislature.

Members of the House have signified their intention of offering an amendment to the McClure Bill in accordance with the above.

The reasons given for a Convention so constituted follow:

I. The Constitution provides for its amendment, not by POPULAR VOTE, either by the people of the United States as a whole, or by popular vote BY STATES, but by Congress submitting proposed amendments to the States, to be acted upon either by their Legislatures, or by Conventions, called for this specific purpose.

To elect pledged delegates to these Conventions, AT LARGE, is equivalent to state ratification by POPULAR VOTE, which is contrary to the spirit, if not the letter of the Constitution.

II. If the delegates Pennsylvania chooses to act on this matter were to go to Washington, there to sit in conference with delegates from other states to determine whether we shall repeal or retain the 18th Amendment, then it would be logical to choose our delegates with Congressional districts as the unit. But they do not. States are each to act for themselves in this matter, independently of all other states. Therefore, the delegates to our State Convention should be chosen from established state districts, not from congressional districts.

III. To make the Convention a truly representative convention, which is in accordance with our representative government and the provision of the Constitution, the delegates should be chosen from the established districts, from which we choose members of our Legislature, who represent and act for all the people in other matters that concern us as a state.

If election from these districts is the best method of giving expression to the will of all sections of the state and of all classes of the people, in other matters, it is the best method of giving expression to their will in this matter.

IV. The election of the larger number of 208 delegates from the 208 districts from which members of the Lower House are chosen, will insure that they will be well known to the people. It will tend to bring out a larger vote, and insure accurate expression of the sentiment of constituencies.

V. The provisions of the McClure Bill for the election of delegates at large are particularly objectionable as giving undue advantage to our large cities, controlled by machine politics.

VI. We call attention to the fact that by the unfair methods and the haste with which the Wets are attempting to get the 18th Amendment out of the Constitution, they are setting precedents for changing the Constitution in other respects, which elements opposed to our American ideals and form of government may later take advantage of, to the sorrow of some of the moneyed interests supporting the Wets.

We ask our Pennsylvania readers to communicate with the Assemblymen and Senator from their district urging that this change be made in the McClure Bill and any other changes which may be necessary to provide a Constitutional Convention in harmony with the intent of those who framed our Constitution and fair to all parties concerned.

The principles set forth above apply with equal force in other States where Legislatures have under consideration the enactment of laws regarding conventions to act on the proposed Amendment submitted by Congress.

THE ONLY LADDER THAT REACHES

The story was told of a ladder run up against the Woolworth Building in New York. It reached to the fourth floor—the fire was in the forty-third! It was only thirty-nine stories short! There is no other way of salvation from hell hereafter and from sin now than through the blood atonement of Jesus Christ. Imitation of the sinless life of the Son of God even cannot save. The Bishop of Durham used to say, "A Christ not quite God is a bridge broken at the farther end."—From Doran's Minister's Manual.

THE WAY OUT

the Gospel according to St. John. Again it is Jesus Christ that is speaking, but now he has told his disciples that the end of his earthly career is near at hand. Naturally they are sad, but the promises he makes in that chapter are sufficient to dispel their gloom and the despair of all others when the crowning assurance is reached in the words, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me."

Here is the way out. There is no other. A system of economics is not enough, nor a science of government nor even a philosophy of life. The way out is a divine personality, even Jesus Christ. He shows the way: He empowers us to walk in the way. He is the way.—The Bible in New York.

ORIGINAL SUBSCRIBERS' CLUB GETS MORE ADDITIONS

Dear Brother Baer:

I have meant to write you for some time and tell you that Mr. Gnagey and I also belong to that group who have always read the Brethren literature. I cannot think of a day when I did not see the church paper in my father's home. And I always read it, at least as much of it as I could understand, and as far back as my memory goes. I united with the church when I was about 16. I would feel much lost if I could not see and read the church paper.

We began with the Progressive Christian in our home after our marriage in 1879, and since that always the church paper has been in our home. The day the Evangelist comes I read most of it. It always seems like an old friend coming in. I like your editorials; they are always good.

We had a week's services preceding Easter. Mr. Gnagey preached on the "Seven Sayings of Jesus from the Cross". We had inspiring meetings and two confessions. Sunday services were well attended, beginning with early sunrise union prayer meeting in our church. The choir rendered an Easter cantata and Mr. Gnagey preached a short sermon on "A Garden, a Sepulchre and an Angel." There was a deep spiritual atmosphere in it all and every one seemed happy. Baptism will be administered in the near future. There are prospects for more confessions.

THE MAY BASKET PARTY

By L. E. Flack

"Oh, aren't they lovely!" Althea looked in at the attractive display of May baskets with shining eyes. "My, I wish I could buy one."

Doreen nodded.

"Wouldn't it be fun to hang one of those beauties on a door handle, and run!"

"We're going to make May baskets Saturday," Norma Carr said. "Aunt Murial's coming over to visit, and she has just piles of ideas."

"Oh-h!" breathed all the girls.

"Come on over tomorrow afternoon, all of you," Norma invited. "Aunt Murial won't mind. If you'll just bring materials, we can make them together."

There was an excited burst of voices.

"Oh, won't that be fun!"

"What sort of things shall we bring?" Norma laughed.

Oh, just anything you have, crepe paper, all colors, tinsel if you have any left from Christmas, and ribbons."

The group broke up at the corner, and promptly at two o'clock Saturday afternoon the little guests began to arrive at the Carr home.

"So it's a May basket party, is it!" Norma's Aunt Murial laughed pleasantly. "Well, suppose you girls play a game or two first, while I put all the supplies brought on the table, and then we'll begin."

It was fifteen minutes later that the little guests, red cheeked from exercise, were called into the large dining room. Aunt Murial had made a place for each around the dining room table, and when every one was ready, she began.

"How many would like to make a match box May basket?"

There was a flurry of hands.

Aunt Murial smiled.

"Well, it's good we have plenty of boxes. Norma, run out in the kitchen and get one for each girl.

"Now the first thing we'll do," she turned to the others, "is decide what color we wish our baskets to be."

"Pink." "Yellow."

"I like red."

There was a buzz of excited voices. as Norma passed out the match boxes.

"First cut a piece of crepe paper the size of the bottom of your box," Aunt Murial directed. "Leaving about half an inch to turn up all around. Paste that on. Then cut a long strip to cover the sides. Be careful as you turn the corners that the paper is flat so there will be no gathered places. Make your strip about an inch wider than the width of the box so that there will be a tiny ruffle at the top. You can easily flute that by stretching the paper with your thumb and first finger."

Fingers flew as the girls began work on their boxes, and soon the strips had been cut and pasted on.

"Oh, look at mine." "Isn't it pretty, Miss Carr?" "That yellow one of yours is darling, Doreen."

"You may line the insides with another color," Aunt Murial suggested. "Yes, light blue will go nicely with yellow, Doreen. I think this cream will look pretty with your pink, Althea."

When the baskets had been covered and lined, Aunt Murial nodded approval. "And now," she smiled, "the next is the handle. You may cut small holes in two opposite corners in which to tie the ribbon handle."

"But," Doreen protested anxiously, "a ribbon handle won't stand up stiff."

Aunt Murial smiled pleasantly.

"This kind will. You see, we're going to use wire. Here are pieces eight inches long; fasten them in the corners. Now select the color ribbon you want, something to match either the lining or the outside of your basket will be pretty. Narrow ribbon is the best. Watch me now. See, I'll wind the ribbon round and round the wire until it is entirely covered. Then fasten the ribbon at the ends. You may cover the place where the wire is attached by placing little bows of the ribbon there."

The girls were very busy, and soon the ribbon handles were ready.

"Mine's all done," Althea said brightly as she placed a dainty pink basket on the table. "Oh, isn't it darling?"

"Just a finishing touch left," Aunt Murial smiled. "Measure around your basket; cut a piece of tinsel the length you need, and paste the tinsel around the edge, just below the fringe. There, yours is ready."

There were excited exclamations as the girls put the finished baskets in a row on the table.

"Aren't they the prettiest things!" "Isn't that blue one cute?" "Norma, your red basket is a beauty."

"They're all lovely," Althea said. "And when they're filled with real flowers! Oh, won't some people be surprised on May Day!"

"And to think," Doreen added with a happy little laugh. "To think they are really made out of old match boxes!"—The Presbyterian Advance, Seattle, Washington.

thing, though many of them do not seem to be reading much. This very naturally raises the question, Are the things they are reading of the greatest benefit to them? or are they spending their time in useless effort?

I would not condemn all light reading as either harmful or useless, nor would I say all heavy reading is of the greatest benefit to the reader. But as church members or Christians we are devoting enough of our time to reading that which has for its primary aim the building up of the human soul or the strengthening of the spiritual life?

Just a casual glance at the Magazine racks in any of our news stands will reveal in a moment the character of the reading that appeals most largely to the American people.

I know that the temper of the American people is such at the present time that interference with personal habit or personal practice is very commonly resented. In the mad hysteria after beer we have had dinned into our ears for a number of years the saying "you can't tell me what I shall eat or what I shall drink." And their eternal persistence finally broke down the resistance of the temperance forces, until now we have, or they have their beer on sale in a number of states.

For many years the church leaders have been trying to persuade the Christian people they should give more heed to the character of the reading they do; but the results have not been entirely satisfactory. Church papers have been losing subscribers for a number of years now, and many have combined in order to preserve their usefulness, while a number of others have been compelled to suspend publication entirely. Of course the blame is laid at the door of "hard times;" and doubtless this is really true in many cases; but I have been made to wonder if it may be possible that a number of folks have not become imbued with the idea "I am not going to have any one tell me what I shall read or what I shall not read," and thus they may not take kindly to the suggestion that they ought to read their church paper. They may have no taste for it, but many people have no taste for spinach when they first try it, but upon the assurance that it is good for their physical health they learn to like it. The same may be true in the matter of reading religious or church papers. In fact we know there are many people who have no real taste for such reading, but that does not imply they have no need for it, and that they can not learn to appreciate it as they learn to appreciate anything else.

It is largely a matter of education, and Christian people should be educated along this line.

Where the Preacher Comes In

There is more truth than poetry in the old saying, "Like priest, like people." And we are quite sure, if the preacher really likes to read the publications of his church, it will be difficult for him to keep still about it, and if he talks about it and the things in it that are of interest to him, this will quite naturally arouse some interest in the minds of his membership; and then, if he has really caught the vision his next step will be to suggest and also urge his members to become regular readers of the paper, and if he is too busy to receive subscriptions he will see that some one in his congregation who is also interested in their church paper is appointed to receive these subscriptions and to send them in to the publishers.

Now, how about this pastors? Have I stated the case fairly? or have I not?

Now Is the Time

Just now the pastors will find this a splendid time to speak of this matter to their congregations. Within the last week we mailed notices to nearly six hundred subscribers to The Brethren Evangelist whose subscriptions are past due, and we need the money, and we feel they need the paper yet some are sure to feel they can not afford to renew their subscriptions, while we feel they cannot afford not to renew them, but it may take some persuasion to convince them of this fact. Here the preacher can help.

Subscribers Take Notice

The "galley proof" or the "transcript" of our mailing list that is taken periodically to use in checking the list some times has the expiration date somewhat blurred, and a mistake is easily made in making out the notices that are mailed to the subscribers, so, if you receive a notice by mistake, do not be alarmed, but just drop us a card and prompt attention will be given the matter.

Sold Out

That is an unusual statement to be made by publishers of Sunday school literature, but such is the case with the Brethren Publishing Company this quarter. By the opening Sunday in the quarter we were entirely sold out of our entire list of quarterly publications. We presume this is the first time such an occurrence has been the experience of the Publishing House. We were glad for the increased demand and were sorry we could not supply every order from our own publications. However we are glad to announce that the good Brethren at Elgin, Illinois, in a spirit of brotherly helpfulness, kindly consented to supply whatever we lacked, so we trust none of our schools were disappointed, and we wish to thank the Brethren at Elgin for their kindness.

We are planning to increase the number of copies of all our quarterlies for the next quarter to such an extent that it will be practically impossible to again run short, and we only hope we will not be "let down" in our anticipation of the demand, and thus be left with a large number of unsold quarterlies on our hands.

R. R. TEEFER, Business Manager.

P. S. Since writing the above we have received another mail, with a number of renewals to The Evangelist, and some requests for cancellation.

Some of our subscribers are profuse with their expressions of appreciation of our liberality in continuing to send their paper even after their time had expired. Some others seem somewhat grieved that their paper was not discontinued immediately upon expiration.

One good brother from Pennsylvania rather rebuked us on a typewritten postal card for continuing to send him his paper, but he failed to sign his name, so we are at a loss to know just whose paper is to be discontinued so suddenly. If he will give us his name we will do our best to accommodate him.

INTRODUCING CAMP JUNIATA

A New Brethren Young People's Camp Being Established for the East

A RESOLUTION

Adopted Unanimously by the Board of Trustees of the Foreign Missionary Society of the Brethren Churches at a Special Meeting held at Ashland, Ohio, April 27 and 28, 1933

RESOLVED: in the matter of the REPORT OF THE COMMISSION OF APPRAISAL of the LAYMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONS INQUIRY, that we regard this Report as one of the most amazing utterances that ever emanated from any body of men professing to represent the Christian Church, and also one of the most deadly attacks made upon the historic faith and missionary enterprise of the Church in modern times. The only possible good which can come from this report may be that it will make perfectly clear to the various denominations that the difference between Modernistic religion and Evangelical Christianity is finally the difference between light and darkness, and that there can be no compromise between them

1. The personnel of the Commission itself was wholly unrepresentative. Any informed person reading the names of the members could have forecast in advance what its general conclusions would be. It appears that the evangelical Christian position, to which the vast body of Protestant laymen adhere, had not a single voice on the Commission, and therefore the name, "LAYMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONS INQUIRY," is utterly misleading to the public. The Report should properly be regarded as merely the expression of a small group of men at war with the Christian Faith, and whose work was financed mainly by the Rockefeller millions.

2. The Commission's method of publishing its findings was studiously unfair, if not definitely unethical. The Report was handed to the various denominational Boards last September as a confidential document, while at the same time the Commission inaugurated a cleverly planned campaign of publicity through the press, featuring certain extracts of the Report which were apparently intended to discredit the present work of foreign missions.

3. A careful study of the Report shows that the religious point of view of the Commission is frankly Unitarian. We believe that those holding this viewpoint have a right to express their opinions, but we deny without qualification their right to speak as representatives of the Protestant and evangelical churches. In asking the various missionary bodies to accept the viewpoint of the Commission, we are being asked to accept an ideal which, historically represented in the Unitarian denomination, has never founded or maintained so much as one foreign mission.

4. Speaking as a Board with some years of experience in dealing with missionaries and those devout laymen who support them, we affirm our conviction that the acceptance of the Report's finding and recommendations would spell the doom of the foreign missionary enterprise, from the standpoint of volunteers and financial gifts; and that a program which proposes to reduce Christ to the level of Buddha and Mohammed could be of no possible spiritual value in saving men from sin or in producing worthwhile missionary sacrifices in terms of life and money.

5. Therefore, we as a missionary Board reaffirm our belief in Jesus Christ as the eternal God who became incarnate that he might die as the Substitute for sinners, and who rose again that he might bring life and immortality to a lost world. What he is and what he did is our only Good News, and his Commission is our only missionary program. We repudiate the finding and recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry as in no sense representative of the Brethren Church, and we commend those Societies and Boards which have done likewise. We especially urge that the Foreign Missions Conference of North America separate itself wholly from any attempt to foist this Report upon the various denominational institutions, even under the guise of a missionary study source.

6. If this expressed attitude of our Board seems to be severe, we can only point out that the very bases of Christian Faith and its missionary program are at issue, and also that nothing we would say could possibly exceed in severity the attack of the Appraisal Commission on the Christian Gospel which we regard as our only hope and the hope of the world.

Dr. Miller Writes of "A Real Crisis"

The undersigned as the spokesman for the entire Board which he represents in this communication comes to every reader with a heavy and burdened heart. This is an open and frank statement addressed to every reader of the Evangelist. Let me come to the issue at once.

The Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana is in dire straits due to the lack of support. This support has hitherto been given by the churches and individuals. Beginning some months ago various individuals made personal appeals through the Evangelist for help. With what result? That Since January 1, 1933, twenty-six individuals (26) have given $96.78.

About forty (40) churches including a few individuals have given $538.24. This makes a total of $635.02 received. Brother Rinehart the treasurer will have a report of this in next week's Evangelist.

2. What is the situation now? The answer to this question will bring the whole matter before every reader. Here are the facts:

The Brethren Home can not be sustained on offerings so small and so few. In former years we received around five or six times as much.

We owe unpaid accounts, including fuel, salaries due Superintendent and Matron, payment due the Land Bank on one of the farms, interest due on a loan on property which the Board accepted from one of the ladies admitted to the Home. Doctor and funeral expenses and several minor accounts,—that is, we owe now a total of unpaid accounts about $2,000.

There is in addition to this the necessity of keeping the Home running and caring for the members, inmates, who are there.

Frankly the Church must arise to this occasion and help meet this need or the consequences will be the total loss of this fine property and the defeat of this project. THE BRETHREN HOME SEEMS TO BE THE FIRST OF THE GENERAL INTERESTS OF THE BROTHERHOOD TO BE DRIVEN TO THE PRECIPICE OF DESTRUCTION.

We the members of the Board are helpless. General Conference elects us and we assume the duties imposed as servants of the Church. This work belongs to every pastor, to every member of the whole brotherhood, just as truly and as much as it does to the Board of Trustees. UNLESS THE PASTORS AND MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH COME TO OUR HELP WE ARE DEFEATED, HELPLESS AND LOST.

A LAST SUGGESTION

The undersigned consulted with every member of the Board, and with other influential members of the Church. I put the suggestions made before the reader:—

1. Small loans or larger loans too should be made the Board by men and women to help meet the pressing unpaid claims to prevent lawsuits and foreclosures. Unless some of these accounts are met soon court proceedings will be instituted. That means added expense and as I view it irreparable loss.

2. Will not as many as a Hundred men, women, congregations, Sunday schools or Sunday school classes, mens' classes, or Women's Missionary Societies arise with pledges to carry this work through the immediate crisis? Such pledges should be made for a monthly payment of One Dollar or more. Pay this pledge until canceled by the makers of it. Let these pledges run say for the next ten months to tide us over. SURELY 100 SUBSCRIBERS TO SUCH A PLEDGE TO SAVE THE CREDIT OF THE CHURCH AND TO SAVE THIS HOME SHOULD IMMEDIATELY RESPOND.

Do not delay this. It is urgent. That is all I can say. Send a letter or postal card, DO IT NOW, making your pledge on the above terms. Take it up with your friends. Pastors and friends, please do not fail us. WE MUST HAVE HELP. Send such a pledge to me as soon as it is possible to do so. TAKE ACTION AT YOUR SERVICES SUNDAY. Let the pledges run for $1.00 per month and up. We must not fail. More I can not say. A further appeal would be needless. Any questions will be answered. Let me hear from you now. Address as below. Sincerely, FOR THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE BRETHREN HOME.

J. Allen Miller.

Mothers and Religious Instruction

Christian mothers are the greatest teachers of religion that the world knows, and on them rests more than on any others the responsibility of sowing the seeds of religious faith in the hearts of children. Without a doubt a child needs two Christian parents, but if he must get along without one, he can better do without a Christian father than without a Christian mother, particularly during the first ten years of his life. No one is so intimately bound up with the child's every want and activity as the mother; no one is so indispensable to his welfare; no one's influence is so vital and far-reaching; and no one can so effectively impress its mind and heart with religious truths.

Of course, we are not failing to keep in mind the importance of a Christian father also to the child's welfare; but our purpose is to acknowledge the place of incomparable influence held by the mother during the first years of life. But two Christian parents are most important. That child is unfortunate that does not have both a Christian father and a Christian mother, both of whom take a vital interest in his spiritual future. It is a handicap that he can never outrun, and it is to the everlasting discredit of the great body of religious teachers of our day that there are so many homes being established by the unequal yoking together of young people—believers with unbelievers. Here is an instance of the widespread need of specific Christian instruction concerning the practical problems of life, instruction concerning the requirements of Christian standards and relations. In practically every congregation young people are allowed to form contacts and to build up life relations that are certain to work against their highest good, spiritually and socially, without so much as a suggestion of light from the Word by those who are set to be watchmen on the walls of Zion. If there were greater faithfulness at this point, there would be fewer unhappy homes and fewer children who must suffer the handicap of unequally yoked parents.

But the world has reason to be thankful, and particularly the church of Christ has reason for such gratitude, for the great number of Christian mothers, who—many with and many without the cooperation of Christian fathers—are proving themselves God's faithful ministers to the young souls committed to their care. Many of the noblest and greatest workers for Christ throughout the world are able to look back to the instruction and example of a godly mother as the beginning of their course in the way of righteousness. Christian people of every position and qualification in life are indebted to such mothers (And not a few to fathers too, of course), for the finest things that have entered into their lives. From the lip and life of mother they have learned faith and reverence for God and his Son Jesus Christ. From her they have been led into a knowledge of and a faith in the Word of God. At her knees they have learned to pray; by her reproofs and counsels they have learned to respect conscience, and to recognize the eter-

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Indiana district statistician, Brother Frank Gehman of Osceola, is still calling for cooperation on the part of the churches, and three in particular. Read his announcement.

We are publishing in this issue the program of a Sunday School Institute to be held in the Meyersdale, Pennsylvania, church on May 11th. A well balanced program has been arranged to be participated in by pastors and Sunday school leaders from western Pennsylvania.

The normal sale of the Bible averages 36,000,000 copies a year, including Testaments and portions. No one has yet succeeded in turning out a book, or a group of books that comes anywhere near the annual sale of the Book of Books. It continues to be the world's best seller.

The program for the Indiana Ministerium is to be found in this issue. It is to meet at Shipshewana Lake, May 15 and 16. Our ministers of that district have set before themselves for consideration some important problems and it ought to be an interesting and worthwhile meeting.

Brother S. M. Whetstone, pastor of our church at Goshen, Indiana, adds this note to a personal communication to the editor: "Our work continues to move forward in a mighty fine shape. Our Sunday school has averaged 527 for the past two months and of course all other attendances have come up with it."

A postal card from Brother Floyd Sibert, pastor of the church at Masontown, Pennsylvania, says in part: "We closed a wonderful Sunday School Institute here with approximately 125 present during the day and a full house at night." The speakers, aside from the pastor, were Brethren Studebaker, Presnell, Clough and Gray.

Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, reports the number and amounts of all White Gift offerings received during and since the 1932 Christmas season. The total amount is $1,404.62, not as large, we understand, as the needs of the Association and the great work it is seeking to do demand, but perhaps there are still some schools planning to get in on the offering.

Brother George A. Copp, treasurer of the Southeastern district conference mission board, gives the apportionment and membership of the various churches of that district, and he urges churches to endeavor to have their apportionments paid by district conference time, which is in June. The district conferences have no more important duty than the building of churches, and the progress of the mission work depends largely on the readiness of the churches to meet their obligations to that end. And that applies to the Ohio district and the Indiana and Pennsylvania districts and every other district, as well as to the churches of the Southeastern district. May God prosper our home mission work in all the districts under both district and national auspices.

From La Verne, California, comes a report of splendid progress under the leadership of Brother A. L. Lynn. All departments of the church and Sunday school are in good condition. Nine new members have been added to the church during the past quarter. The Sunday school attendance has increased to an average of 197 and two new class rooms have been built to accommodate the growing Beginners' department. A Good Friday communion service was held with 175 communicants present. This church has decided to observe the Holy Communion quarterly, a custom which already prevails at some other churches and which appeals to us because of the opportunity afforded to bear more frequent testimony to the great and vital truths set forth by this wonderful service and the added spiritual enrichment thereby made possible.

Brother George C. Pontius writes of his leaving of the West Alexandria, Ohio, pastorate and of his first two months as pastor at Roann, Indiana, where he has gotten into the work very actively and successfully. A revival meeting was soon launched after their arrival and it developed into a real blessing to the church. There were eleven received by baptism and three by letter during the meetings and two came by letter later, making a total addition of sixteen. An early sunrise meeting on Easter morning was a new feature for Roann and it was largely attended. The church gave generously to Foreign Missions, increasing their offering over recent previous offerings. The attendance at the three services on Easter Sunday, in spite of the rain, was more than 750, according to a personal note from Brother Pontius.

The Ashland Theological Seminary commencement exercises are being held this week at Ashland, Ohio. They began on Sunday, April 30th with the baccalaureate sermon preached by Dean J. Allen Miller, instead of Prof. M. A. Stuckey who was hindered from preaching according to schedule because of illness. Preparatory chapel services with communion message by Prof. A. J. McClain was dated for Tuesday morning at the chapel hour. Seminary communion service was to be held on the evening of May 4th, and the graduation service on the morning of May 5th with Dr. K. M. Monroe delivering the address on "The Place of the Christian Minister in Modern Life," and President Jacobs conferring the degree of Bachelor of Theology on Elmer Keck and Arthur Carey, the two graduates. We congratulate these two young brothers and pray that God may guide them into a fruitful ministry in the name of Christ.

We are cooperating with the National Sunday School Association and the Sunday School Board of the Pennsylvania District in introducing CAMP JUNIATA, the new young people's training camp for the East, that corresponds with Camp Shipshewana for Indiana and environs. The promoters of this enterprise are to be congratulated on the location and the splendid arrangements announced in this issue. Recognition is given to Brother George H. Jones, director of the Johnstown Boy Scout Organization, for his good offices in securing this equipped camp free of charge. A well-rounded program has been arranged, taking care of the physical, mental and spiritual needs of the young people, while the costs have been put at such a low figure that no young person, who is at all interested, can afford to stay away. Prof. M. A. Stuckey is to be dean; Rev. N. V. Leatherman registrar; and these two brethren together with Rev. W. E. Ronk and Rev. Floyd Sibert are the instructors, while Rev. W. C. Benshoff will be athletic director and dean of boys and Mrs. Stuckey dean of girls. There will also be a camp nurse in the person of Mrs. Orpha McGee and the cooking will be in charge of Mrs. D. C. White. The date is June 14 to 24.

President E. E. Jacobs gives an extended report of the College Board of Trustees' meeting, as well as some other items of interest. An important feature of that meeting was the president's report, which showed increases in last summer's and Saturday's attendance, but a decrease in the regular college enrollment for this year of 12%. This of course is in line with the attendance at most colleges throughout the land, and is obviously due to the depression, but strenuous efforts are being and will yet be put forth to enlist a larger number of students for next fall. This suggests an opportunity for Brethren pastors to cooperate. No one can do more than they to encourage worthy young people to secure their higher education in their own church school. And such encouragement would be a service to the young people as well as to the college. It is good to be assured again of the sound investments made of college endowment funds, that nothing has been lost from that source, during these times when so many investments once thought sound are failing. The Board appointed a committee for planning a campaign for Educational Day offerings, and it is well for pastors and other church leaders to begin themselves to plan for that event. With so considerable a portion of a college endowment in the form of "temporary endowment" as is the case with our college, it is easy to see the great importance of maintaining these annual gifts to the required amount. If the churches fail at this point this coming Sunday in June, it will be a serious blow not merely to our college but to the future of the church in many respects.

Mothers' Love

SOMEONE in his imagination has seen an angel coming down from heaven that he might carry up to the Father the most beautiful and imperishable thing of earth. He took a baby's smile, some flowers of the field, and a mother's love, and started back, but ere he reached the gate of heaven the flowers had faded, and death had stolen the smile; but the mother's love, as fresh and beautiful as ever, the angel laid as the sweetest and most imperishable gem of earth on the Father's bosom. Oh, a mother's love! the height, the breadth, the length, the depth of it! How like God's?

During the Civil War a woman in Maine received the following message, "Willie is sick and we fear he is dying." She said to her husband, "I must go and see Willie." "But," said her husband, "you cannot go; between you and him there is a row of bayonets." "I know it," she said, "but Willie is sick and I am going to him." "Well," he replied, "I don't know what will come of this but if you will go you shall have all the money you want."

The woman took what money she thought she would need and went down to Washington. The man who sat in the executive mansion and who had a heart as tender as any woman's, wiped away a tear as he wrote and handed her a paper saying as he did so,

"Madam, that will take you as far as the enemy's line, but what will become of you after you get there I do not know." She took the pass and going to the enemy's line handed it to the picket. He looked at it and said, "We don't take that thing here." "I know it," she said, "but Willie, my boy is dying in Richmond and I am going to him; if you must shoot, do it, but I am going on until you do." But who could shoot in the presence of a mother love like that?

Smuggled through the lines she went to the hospital and the surgeon said: "Madam, you will have to be careful; your boy will survive no excitement." She crept past cot after cot until she came to the one where her own boy lay, and kneeling at its foot she prayed in smothered tones, "O God, spare my boy! God, spare my boy!"

Mother's Day

*Let every day be Mothers' Day—
Make roses grow along her way
And beauty everywhere.
O never let her eyes be wet
With tears of sorrow or regret,
And never cease to care!
Come, grown-up children, and rejoice
That you can hear your mother's voice.
A day for her? For you she gave Long years of love and service brave.
For you her youth was spent;
There was no weight of hurt or care
Too heavy for her strength to bear,
She followed where you went;
Her courage and her love sublime
You could depend on all the time.*

—Edgar A. Guest.

But the sound of her voice had gone clear down into the valley of the shadow of death, where the soul of the young man was slowly going out in its ebbing tide, and as he raised his pale hands from beneath the sheet, he said, "It's mother's voice; it's mother's voice." She crept closer and laid her soft hand on his feverish brow. He opened his eyes and said, "Mother, I knew you'd come; I knew you'd come."—From Later Evangelistic Sermons, By Dr. W. E. Biederwolf.

The Believer's Kenosis

By W. H. Schaffer

(Prepared to be delivered to the Pennsylvania District Conference October 8, 1931, Ministerial Session, and by vote was requested published)

Part II

"I have been crucified . . . and the life which I now live . . ." When the mother of our Lord saw her Son dying upon the Cross and witnessed the Roman soldier pierce his side with a spear, then were the prophetic words of old Simeon fulfilled as addressed to Mary with the infant Jesus in her arms, "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thine own soul also." She was pierced with Christ on the Cross. Had it not been for the faith and love that Mary had in and for her Lord and Savior, the spear that cut deep into the side of Jesus would never have touched her soul. So it is with us, if we believe that the awful death of the Cross was voluntarily chosen and endured by Christ in love for a sinful humanity, with that belief there springs up within the soul a new affection for the suffering Son of God, a love so pure and tender that the pangs of Christ's Cross pierce our own souls, once hard-hearted, cold-hearted and sinful. Thus self is crucified with Christ.

We have never seen the death of Christ on the Cross of any advantage to us unless we have experienced the spear thrust of conviction in our own souls. Has the fact that Christ was wounded and bruised for our own iniquities ever made a wound or bruise in your soul? If through hardness of heart and unbelief we refuse to identify ourselves with him, then we can have no share in his suffering and cannot know the power which is his in resurrection. Indeed if the crucifixion of self is such a definite and painful experience surely the effects will be marked and well defined.

Preaching Too Many "Dont's"

Might we not at times be too negative in our preaching? After the first child came into our home I, of course desiring to be a "perfect father," read all the literature the Commonwealth of Kansas offered for proper child-rearing. Among the warnings was that the negative side of instruction should be minimized as much as possible. After the boy was old enough to be getting around and into things I began to follow instructions. It was not long before the "no" came in very handily. I discovered however that it took so much more time and patience to teach the positive way, that I gave up in despair. To be honest-with ourselves, have we not been preaching too many "Don'ts"? Not that occasionally they are not necessary, but I do believe that we can accomplish our objectives through other channels.

Now here is the aim of this discourse as relating to pastors. Perhaps the following incident will make it clearer: While a student in the Seminary the Dean suggested to his class of prospective ministers that we attend a ministerial session to be held that afternoon in a down-town church. A few of us found our way there. As I remember the discussion centered around the sins of the laity and before it closed an elderly pastor arose and announced that last night he preached against cards, dancing and the whole category of such besetting sins and never mentioned one of them during the course of his sermon. He used for his text that evening I Corinthians 3:15. That struck me as a splendid way of preaching but after I found myself in the harness it seemed so much easier to preach the "don't's." After hearing how it sounded from other pulpits I decided that from henceforth I would endeavor to preach what I have tried in my feeble way to present to you here today.

"World Crucified Unto Me"

The flesh most certainly does like to exalt itself and it is this self I would remind you that "has been crucified." Now turning to my other text, Galatians 6:14, "But God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." In the experience of Paul the world had been stripped of all its glory and had been hung as a helpless, shameful thing on the Cross with Christ. The zealous patriot will cry out, "You live here on this earth, which you cannot deny, and you must necessarily be affected by the happenings and circumstances of this earth and you cannot remain wholly indifferent to them." In answer I ask, "Where in the scriptures can we read of the true followers of the Lord or in early Christian history, that Christians were opposed to good government, law and order? On the other hand we find them teaching others to "be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God, etc." Most certainly we have to deal with the things of this world but it is a different matter to be so engrossed in its affairs that we are bound by them and expect at the hands of the world to receive all our glory and honor.

To Paul the world had been stripped naked and was as a dead or dying thing, without power to tempt his soul. The glory of the grace of the crucified Savior had so filled his eyes with the vision of heavenly things that the world and the things of it held no more attraction for him. "If any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him." The workings of the principles of this world found, as it were, their climax in the crucifixion of the Son of God. Since the world by wisdom could not find out God it crucified him and by "wisdom" this present age is seeking to do the same thing; therefore its ungodly spirit should be as a crucified thing to us.

"I am Crucified to the World"

Not only is the world crucified to me but "I am crucified to the world." The death of Christ has not only separated me from the world but it has also separated the world from me. The Cross of Christ has come between me and the world and has crucified it to me and me to it. That "old Self", which loved the world and sought a share in its glory and honor "was nailed to the Cross with him, in order that our sinful nature might be deprived of its power so that we should no longer be slaves of sin" (Romans 6:6). The first act of self in Adam was to long for the forbidden thing. This is the self that has been emptied of personal gratification—that self that would long for anything outside of the will of God. Although the self in Christ was perfectly human yet "he pleased not himself." He delighted to do the will of the Father. The demands of the flesh are many and varied and demand constant attention but every time self is pleased and honored the Cross of Christ is denied. Every time selfish desires are put before our plain duty and allegiance to the Lord, we deny the power of his Cross. Excuses come in handy on many occasions and we endeavor to cover up selfish ambitions with excuses. One of the messages that come through the Cross to us is, "I have died for you, in order that that self-life of yours might die in me." "Except a corn of wheat die it abideth alone." The self-life must perish. But it cannot ever bring forth fruit. We, not the "self-life," will bring forth fruit if we die and rise with Christ.

Surrender Must be Voluntary

We must notice that all of this surrender of self must be voluntary. If the believer is not willing to empty himself of self then he cannot say, "It is no longer I that live, but Christ that lives in me." But if self has died, then there is no hindrance to the life of Christ being manifested in our mortal bodies. Paul in writing to the Corinthian Church in II Corinthians 4:10-11 writes thus: "Always bearing about in the body the putting to death of the Lord Jesus that the eternal life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh." So one of the clearest proofs that we are dead to self is that we are "alive unto God." The measure of our life and liberty for God is the measure of our freedom from the power of sin and self. Self spells bondage, not to Christ however. If Christ lives in me then he has taken this "me" that he might sanctify it, fill it and use it to glorify his own Name. To seek our own praise and honor is to deny him who lives within. If Christ lives in me then all his unsearchable riches are within my reach for his service among men. "The Cross, as a moral event belongs to all time," said Dr. Gordon, "therefore its power to crucify self, and prepare the way for resurrection life is ever present with us."

"I am crucified to the world." Dead to the world? yes, a continual death, "always bearing about in the body the putting to death of the Lord Jesus." Now as to the ways and means provided for the daily crucifixion of the flesh, we realize that it is not always possible to keep from instructing negatively and so we find Paul instructing in Romans 6:13, "Neither yield your members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin . . ." If we are guilty of using our members as instruments of unrighteousness we ought to cease operations at once. "But I can't." Yes, you can! "Sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law but under grace." In the face of persecutions, ship-wreck, famine, pestilence, infirmities and reproaches, if the Apostle Paul could shout with a note of victory what the Lord told him about his troubles,

"My grace is sufficient for thee," then who are we that we should underestimate the power of God? He will not suffer us to be tempted above that which we are able to bear."

It is not enough that we cease doing wrong when there is much good to be done, but we are commanded to yield our "members as instruments of righteousness unto God." By continually delivering ourselves over to the Cross to be crucified in order that the dross may be sifted out, we are enabled to yield our members over to a risen Lord for eternal service.

In conclusion, then, does it not behoove us to daily examine ourselves as ensamples to the flock that we be not lords over God's heritage and examples of believers in the Word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith and purity. All this is possible through that personal relationship between the believer and his Lord who was willing to empty or divest himself of self that we might have life. As followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, our Savior, is it asking too much of us to hide self behind his Cross?

The life of the unregenerate is, "I, not Christ;" The life of the regenerate is, "Not I, but Christ!"

Life of Joseph

By June Chaffee

How wonderful is the way in which God works for those who fear him! The history of Joseph teaches us this truth.

Joseph had one younger and ten elder brothers. The name of the younger brother was Benjamin. Jacob was the father of them all. Jacob loved Joseph more than all his other sons, and made him a coat of many colors; but his elder brothers hated him, and one day, when far away from home, proposed to kill him. They cast him into a pit instead, and afterwards sold him for twenty pieces of silver as a slave to some merchants who were traveling from Gilead to Egypt (Genesis 37:28). In comparison we might recall that Jesus was sold for thirty pieces of silver by Judas (Matthew 27:3). When they returned to their father, they took Joseph's coat of many colors, which they had dipped in blood, and brought it to Jacob, saying: "This have we found: know now if it be thy son's coat or no." Jacob knew the coat; and thought Joseph had been killed by some wild beast, and mourned for him many days. People generally do suffer because of other people's sins. If we could just keep in mind Matthew 5:44—"But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." I am sure that there wouldn't be so much suffering in this world.

The merchants carried Joseph in Egypt, and sold him to one of the king's officers, named Potiphar. But though a slave, he was not forsaken by God. No, God was with him, and made all that he did to prosper. His master placed him over all his house, but his mistress wanted him to commit a great sin (Genesis 39:8-9). When he refused, she accused him unjustly to his master, and Potiphar had him cast into prison (Genesis 39:20). Jesus Christ was also tempted many times by Satan (Matthew 4:3-6-9).

God was with Joseph in the prison, and gave him such favor with the keeper that he set him over all the other prisoners. Among them were two; one who had been the king's butler, and the other his baker. Both had dreams which troubled them much, but Joseph was enabled by God to interpret their dreams for them. By-and-by Pharaoh, the king, dreamed a dream. He was standing on the banks of a river, and saw seven fat cows come up out of the water and feed in a meadow; afterwards seven very lean cows came up and devoured the fat ones. Then Pharaoh awoke; but he dreamed again, and saw that seven very poor ears of corn devoured seven that were full and good. In the morning he was greatly troubled. What could the dreams mean? He called for the magicians and the wise men, but they could not tell. At last it was told him how Joseph had interpreted the dreams in the prison; so he sent for Joseph, who came from the prison, and stood before the king.

Pharaoh said, "I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it; and I have heard say of thee, that thou canst understand a dream to interpret it." Joseph answered, "It is not in me: God shall give Pharaoh an answer of peace" (Genesis 41:16). Then Joseph told Pharaoh that the dreams had been sent by God, to show him that after seven years of great plenty had passed there would come seven years of famine. He also advised Pharaoh to lay up corn in cities during the years of plenty, so that the people might be fed during the years of famine. Pharaoh saw the great wisdom God had given Joseph, and made him ruler over the land of Egypt. The corn was stored up; and after the years of plenty the famine came.

During all this time Jacob and his sons had been dwelling in Canaan; where, through the famine, they were now in want of food. So Jacob sent his son to Egypt to buy corn.

The Bible tells us, in the book of Genesis, how they came to Egypt, and all that befell them there; and how at last Joseph, the ruler of the mighty kingdom, made himself known to them as the brother they had cruelly sold for a slave. But he forgave them, and sent to fetch his father Jacob, saying that all were to come into Egypt, where he would provide for them. Now, Joseph could have just as easily not let himself be known. But his love for his family was so great and he was a good and godly man.

Jacob could not at first believe the good news his sons brought; but when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to carry him and the little ones, he said, "It is enough; Joseph my son is yet alive; I will go and see him before I die." So he journeyed to Egypt, with his sons, and all that he had; and as he drew near Joseph went to meet him. When Joseph met his father, he fell on his neck, and wept there. And Jacob said, "Now let me die, since I have seen thy face, because thou art yet alive." He was so full of joy that it seemed to him there was nothing else worth living for. Afterwards Joseph presented his father to Pharaoh; and Jacob blessed Pharaoh, who allowed him and his family to dwell in the land of Goshen.

After the death of Joseph's father, all the rest of the brothers were afraid that Joseph would hate them, so they sent a messenger to Joseph to tell him that before their father's death he asked that they be forgiven. And Joseph said unto them, "Now therefore fear ye not: I will nourish you, and your little ones. And he comforted them, and spake kindly unto them." Gen. 50:21.

Joseph died when he was a hundred and ten years old. And such a great spiritual life he lived. I think that if everyone would live a life as Joseph did, this world would be better than it is today.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The retrial of the famous—or infamous—Scottsboro case may or may not have resulted in a miscarriage of justice, but certainly it has presented to the nation an unedifying spectacle of race hatred and intolerance. Fiery crosses, references to “Jew money,” and threats of violence between whites and Negroes over a sordid case in which the only question should have been whether or not the defendants were guilty of the serious charge against them, are humiliating indications that America is not, in spite of our Fourth of July oratory, uniformly a land of freedom for all and equality before the law regardless of race or color. Germans and Soviet Russians, who only a week or two ago read the stirring words of protest against racial and religious persecution in their lands, must wonder how we Americans reconcile those brave words with the shameful exhibition of anti-Negro, anti-Jewish, and anti-white hatred brought out by this case. For our part, we do not see how they can be reconciled.—The Living Church.

LETTING DOWN STANDARDS

A great number of bills have been introduced in legislatures of various states to repeal restrictive laws, most of which have stood for a long time. It is proposed, in addition to the repeal of laws prohibiting liquor selling, to make race track gambling permissible in some states; to allow all sorts of commercialized sports on the first day of the week. The standard of conduct is apparently lowered. No doubt these restrictive laws were evaded and violated, but the practices were at least outlawed. We are sure that this is a time to tighten, not loosen, harmful and sinful practices. To legalize gambling in any form will be a moral and financial hurt from which the next generation will suffer more than we do. Gambling and Sunday sports are always demoralizing. They bring a great train of evils, and no one ever derived permanent good. We long to see a higher grade of men elected to make our laws.—The Presbyterian.

FROTHING YET OR AGAIN?

Both, if that is possible. How could any self-respecting person feel otherwise when he has been sold out for a mere mess of pottage? The fact is we have sold out cheaper than did Esau when he sold his birthright. Chicago is still celebrating “New Beers Day.” The “wets” have reminded us that if we don’t like it we ought not to complain, for the Government is getting a great deal of revenue out of it—$10,000,000 in the first few days. Brisbane puts it well: “Uncle Sam has an excuse. He wants beer to balance his budget. What our ‘best financial minds’ have not been able to do, the humble, but industrious, beer drinker is expected to accomplish.”

The great billion dollar budget-balancing prophecied on the revenue from beer has come down to a measly $125,000,000. Aren’t we a cheap crowd? This means that we are selling out for about a dollar a year a head—about two cents a week for every man, woman and child in the United States. So we have sold ourselves to a group of the most conscienceless profiteers and corrupters of human life and welfare that the world knows, for two cents a week. Somebody has said that we are fools for the want of sense. That must be what afflicts us in dealing with the beer business.—R. W. G. in The Congregationalist.

A BEAUTIFUL DEATH-BED MESSAGE

The Living Church, organ of the Episcopal Church, reports the following beautiful death-bed message from one of their seminary teachers, a message that will be of interest to many because of its strong assurance:

When Dr. W. Cosby Bell, professor of Theology at the Virginia Seminary, was told that he was dying, he gave his wife the following beautiful message to his students:

“Tell the boys that I’ve grown surer of God every year of my life, and I’ve never been so sure as I am right now. Why, it’s all so!—it’s a fact—it’s a dead certainty. I’m so glad to find that I haven’t the least shadow of shrinking or uncertainty. . . . I’ve been preaching and teaching these things all my life, and I’m so much interested to find that all we’ve been believing and hoping is so. I’ve always thought so, and now that I’m right up against it, I know. . . . Tell them I say ‘good-bye’; they’ve been a joy to me. I’ve had more than any man that ever lived, and life owes me nothing. I’ve had work I loved, and I’ve lived in a beautiful place among congenial friends. I’ve had love in its highest form and I’ve got it forever. . . . I can see now that death is just the smallest thing—just an incident—that it means nothing.”

Any comment on such a truly Christian deathbed message would be superfluous. It will never be forgotten by those to whom it was addressed, the future clergymen who knew and loved him so well; and we doubt not that it will prove to be the most valuable lesson he ever taught them.

FAITH RESISTS RUSSIA'S ATHEISTS

The Central Council of the Society of Militant Atheists of the Soviet Union a short time ago made quite informative reports concerning the situation in the movement favoring Godlessness in Russia. These reports, on the one hand leave no doubt of the progress of this movement which is fostered by the State and makes itself evident externally through determined governmental activities; but on the other hand they show just as plainly the stubborn, quiet opposition with which the people meet the attempt to destroy both church and religion. In January, 1932, the membership of the Atheist Society had reached the 5,000,000 mark. At the same time, the subscription list of the main Russian publication fostering this movement, reached 500,000.

According to a reckoning of the head of these Russian Atheists, Jaroslowski, a quite trustworthy witness, there still remain in organized female labor at least a third who will believe and another third who are still connected with religion. Likewise, a fourth of the male workers are still religious. Fundamental religious life, which belongs to the world of hidden things, simply cannot be grasped by governmental investigations. With the overthrow of ecclesiastical organization and the setting aside of liberty in cultus, the number of weddings, baptisms and church burials fell very rapidly. According to reports of the registration department in Lenin-Royon, in Moscow the following numbers and percentages of newborn children were baptized: 1928—61.5 per cent; 1929—53.9 per cent; 1930—40.5 per cent; 1931—34.1 per cent; 1932—31.2 per cent. For the second five-year period of the socialist development, the task was set to free the last third of the people also “from the control of religious traditions.” According to the words of Jaroslowski at the Ninth Labor Conference, “one dare not think that this is going to be accomplished smoothly, quietly, easily”; rather, religion “will only yield after the severest assault of our ideological campaign.” Thereupon there is set for the second five-year plan a single objective—ennity against religion.—Evangélicische Presse Dienst.

MINISTERING MOTHERS

“And when Jesus was come into Peter’s house, he saw his wife’s mother laid, and sick of a fever. And he touched her hand, and the fever left her; and she arose and ministered unto them.”

Matthew’s words could be translated into any tongue and heard by any generation in any age, and the story would be complete and reasonable to all. Here is a natural meeting of the forces of love; the Savior comes to bless and to heal; the mother recovers strength and health only that she may minister as mothers invariably do. It was a high privilege to welcome this tall young stranger, who came with the light of high purpose and deep understanding of human life within his eyes. But Peter’s wife’s mother would have ministered according to her ability to the humblest of guests and to her own folk as well.

What a word it is—“ministered!” Modern translators may change the form of these verses, but they do not change that verb. It is a word of high significance. “Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister,” said Jesus. “The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.”

Making the house a home is the mother’s ministry. Helping the boys and girls to find their best work for life, to develop strong characters, and to make Christ the captain of their spirits is among her customary works. The church is a power when the homes are true to God, and the mother gives the spiritual expression in the average home. It is not sentiment alone that causes grown-up sons and daughters to seize upon Mothers' Day as a time for heartfelt tributes to mother. Rather, reason has taught them that the mother continues her helpfulness for all of life if they will so accept it; and that distance does not break her ties of love and concern.

A ministry it is indeed, and it is fitting that the churches should make much of this day, the second Sunday in May. Ministering mothers remind us that the God who made them has thus given us one more witness to the fact that unselfish love is the most powerful force in creation.—Bert H. Davis in "C. E. World."

BEER ADVERTISING

The country was warned that the return of beer would mark the inauguration of high pressure beer advertising. That prophecy is being abundantly fulfilled, with a good part of the advertising being furnished free as alleged news. There have been many highly-colored stories of the enthusiasm over the return of beer and of the amount of revenue which was flowing into the coffers of the federal and state governments. Just recently we have been regaled with the story of thirsty congressmen and their secretaries drinking 720 bottles of beer of the new beer in the House restaurant, where real beer was last sold thirty years ago. The story will not add to the esteem and confidence in which the representatives are held, but it is good advertising for beer.—The Presbyterian Advance.

No Salvation For Procrastinators

Let no one presume upon the goodness of God. It is true that "God is love" (1 John 4:8) but it is equally true that outside of Christ "our God is a consuming fire" (Heb. 12:29). Let no reader of this paper put off salvation until the tribulation period, for the day of grace will be over for him and even God himself will send a "strong delusion" and he will believe a lie (accept the antichrist) (2 Thess 2:11). Let us note that this strong delusion from God will be only on those who "received (past tense) not the love of the truth, that they might be saved" (Vs. 10). That is, people who now in the church age reject the Lord are doomed in the tribulation, but there are millions even in the United States who do not know the true way of salvation. To these, God's mercy will still be extended.

Chapter Eight

When the Lamb took the book out of the Father's hand, the courts of heaven rang with joy and adoration; when the first four seals were broken, the four living creatures thundered "Come"; when the fifth seal was broken, the martyred souls cried out; when the sixth seal was broken, there were voices of terror, but when the seventh seal is snapped, there is dead silence. It is the awe of heaven at the arrival of the last great climax.

The Seventh Seal

Christ is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world (Rev. 13:8). We are chosen in him before the foundation of the world (Eph. 1:4). Our salvation has its roots in the eternity that is passed. Man has rebelled and has turned toward the enemy of his soul. Christ has redeemed mankind at the cross. He has taken the book, the title deed of our redemption, and has snapped six seals. The whole creation cried out in joy when he took that book. Now the climax has come. One more seal and sin's long war with God must close.

Creation stands aghast and in breathless silence awaits the next event. Man has defied his Creator. The kings of the earth have set themselves against the Lord and his anointed. The time has come when he that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh (Ps. 2). He who has loved humanity to the extent of giving his Son for their redemption; he whose longsuffering has so long borne with their sin; he that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh. What exhaustion of grace; what draining of the springs of mercy, when he, the God of all mercy, laughs at man's wickedness.

"And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censor; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne" (Ch. 8:3).

When Moses was given the plans for the tabernacle, God warned him that it was to be according to the pattern showed him in the mount (Heb. 8:5). The earthly tabernacle was a figure of the heavenly (Heb. 9:9) and it was at the golden altar of incense that intercession was made. In chapter eight an angel comes to the golden altar in heaven to present the prayers of all the saints.

We are not informed as to the identity of this angel but no doubt it is our Lord in his office as high priest. Let us remember that we are now on Old Testament ground and that we find Christ as he was manifested in Old Testament times, that is, as the angel of the Lord. Christ, as head of the church, has received his bride to himself but, being rejected of Israel, he is still manifested as the angel.

A difficulty presents itself, "there was GIVEN unto him much incense." We might ask why this incense was given to him and why it was not already his.

Answered Prayers

This golden altar is the highest altar in the universe. The prayers are approved and endorsed by Christ himself. They are perfumed by the incense of his own meritorious favor and thus rendered savory before God.

These are the prayers of the saints. Under the fifth seal we have a prayer for vengeance (Ch. 6:10). Here their prayers are presented before the throne and God hears and answers them. The fire ascended up before God and the censor is immediately turned earthward. The seven angels then prepare to sound, bringing on more judgments in answer to the prayers of the saints.

Thy Kingdom Come

But these are the prayers of ALL saints (Vs. 3). Might it include those of Abraham, Noah and the godly of all ages? The essence of much true prayer may be summed up in the words, "Thy kingdom come". When we pray for the salvation of a friend or the spiritual quickening of the church or for foreign missionary effort, we in fact are praying for his kingdom.

For many ages, saints have been longing and praying for God to rule. The time has not yet come for God to take the reins into his own hands, so the prayers of these saints have been kept in golden vessels (Ch. 5:8) waiting for the time to come when they will be presented, accepted and answered.

The First Trumpet

The first four trumpets "hurt the earth and sea" (Ch. 7:2), while the last three are "woe" trumpets (Ch. 8:13). The first four effect only one-third of the object of their mission.

"The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up" (Vs. 8).

When the hail fell in Egypt, it brake every tree of the field (Ex. 9:25), but here only one-third is effected. No hail pelted the Israelites in Goshen (Ex. 9:26) and so here, the hundred forty-four thousand are safe from these judgments.

Little can we realize the awfulness of this judgment. One-third of the earth will be charred, houses burned, meadows and fields laid bare, crops ruined, shade trees killed, forests and orchards destroyed. This should have a great effect upon humanity, but even in our own time, two million Chinese may starve and hardly cause a ripple of comment among the other nations of the earth.

Introducing Camp Juniata to Our Young People

We are here introducing Camp Juniata, the Brethren Young People's Camp. A number of the Brethren of the East have felt for some time, that because of the distance from Shipshewana Lake, we should have a Brethren young people's camp nearer home. The Sunday School Board for the Pennsylvania District set about trying to make such a camp a reality. With the full assistance of the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church, plans have been perfected to make this dream come true. The Association has contributed both funds and council, both of which are greatly appreciated.

The Board has endeavored in the planning of the camp, to keep in mind the physical, mental and spiritual needs of the young people. A glance at the daily schedule will reveal this fact. There is a danger in such camps that either the mental or physical needs, or the mental and physical needs should receive excessive attention to the neglect of the spiritual. We have made ample provision for both of the former, but we shall insist that the spiritual shall have first place. The spiritual life should rule over the whole life. Let it be so here.

DESCRIPTION

The camp this year will be held on a hill overlooking the beautiful Juniata river. The camp has been secured for our use from the Johnstown Boy Scout Organization through the courtesy and help of Rev. George Jones. This location is ideal in many ways. The place is "a place of beauty" with the camp on the hill among the pines, overlooking the river, and with the mountains stretching away in the distance. It is a place of quietness and seclusion, away from the rush of life. There is a splendid bathing beach, and ample provision for boating.

The camp itself consists of a "Mess Hall," "Administration Building," and fifteen cottages each capable of accommodating eight persons. The water is pure and the camp is sanitary. The camp thus combines the qualities of utility, seclusion and quietness. The frog pond and the echoes lend a touch of charm to the whole.

LOCATION

The camp is located but a short distance (about two miles) off the Huntingdon-Everett Highway. It is eighteen miles from Huntingdon on the William Penn Highway, and thirty five miles from Everett on the Lincoln Highway. The point where one leaves the highway is a macadam road turning into Entricken. Suitable signs will be placed where the road turns off.

TIME

The school will open Wednesday morning, June 14th, but every one should be on the grounds Tuesday evening for supper and ready for school activities on Wednesday morning. The camp will close Saturday, June 24th.

INVITATION

This is a young people's camp of high school age or older. We have no facilities for caring for children. A representation from each Brethren church in the East is solicited.

COSTS

Knowing the present economic stress, arrangements have been made to keep the cost of Camp Juniata low enough, so that even in these days we have an economic appeal for students. This is made possible first of all through the budget of the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church. In the second place the excellent camp site and concession is granted us free of cost. The faculty members receive no salary. The cooking will be done by volunteer ladies. The cabins and beds are free. The meals will be served at cost. As nearly as can be figured we anticipate the minimum cost of the meals to be $7.00 and the maximum cost probably $8.00. So each camper will be asked to pay to the treasurer upon registration $8.00 for the meals. If they can be furnished for less the amount will be refunded. A small registration fee of 50c will be charged, making the total maximum cost to the campers of $8.50. We urge each Sunday School to arrange for the transportation of their own young people interested in attending this camp. Visitors will be charged 25c per meal.

EQUIPMENT

Each camper should be equipped with a Bible, suitable camp clothes (nothing fancy necessary), small mirror, towels, soap and other toilet articles appreciated. Also the following bedding: sheets, blankets, pillow and bedtick, which can be made from cheap unbleached muslin to fit a spring cot three by six feet. The bedtick will be filled at the camp. Bring your musical instruments and cameras if you have them. Bring tennis shoes and rackets. Of course none will forget the bathing suit.

CURRICULUM

A three year training course is provided in our curriculum, offering four unit credits each year. Twelve units will be required for graduation. The work will be given by the lecture and discussion method. Students will not be required to purchase text books. Note book work will be the basis for grading. All pupils will attend all classes unless furnished excuse by the dean. The following courses are offered this first year:—

Course 1. Old Testament Studies, taught by Prof. M. A. Stuckey. The aim of this course will be to give a general survey of the Old Testament materials, explaining the purpose and meaning of God's revelation to man and man's responsibility to God.

Course 2. Brethren Church History, taught by Rev. N. V. Leatherman. The aim of this course will be to give in outline the history of the Brethren Church from its organization in Germany to the present, including biographical studies and teachings as to content and methods.

Course 3. Principles of Teaching, taught by Rev. Willis E. Runk. The aim of this course will be to lead to a discovery of fundamental principles on which an effective learning-teaching process is based.

Course 4. Christian Endeavor, taught by Rev. Floyd Seibert.

The aim of this course will be to show the purpose, explain the program and means of promotion of Christian Endeavor.

RECREATION

No place offers better possibilities for wholesome recreation than our camp site for this year. There is a splendid tennis court, a ball field, the river for swimming, canoeing, boating and fishing, and scenic mountain trails for hiking. Besides, if the weather is bad the recreational hall will care for us until the sun shines again. All recreation will be under supervision and the swimming will be closely guarded.

Dr. R. R. Teeter

(NOTE—Somewhere we seem to have gotten behind a week and in order to catch up where we should be in these notes, so that our readers may have the benefit of them in advance of the lesson date, we have attached the lesson topic for May 7th, and Dr. Teeter has gone forward to the lesson for the week ending May 14th for his lesson study at the Family Altar.—Editor.)

Lesson for May 7th—"JESUS FACES THE CROSS", Mark 10:32-52.

JESUS ASSERTS HIS KINGSHIP

(Lesson for May 14)

Lesson Text: Mark 11:1-33; Golden Text: Zechariah 9:9.

Jesus Acclaimed as King. Mark 11:1-10

This passage relates the story of the triumphal entry of Jesus into Jerusalem. Although he was most enthusiastically received by the common people on this day, and was heralded as the Mighty One who should sit upon the throne of their father David, there was practically no understanding of the nature of this kingdom, and in a few days more the spirit of acclaim that had welcomed him to the city was turned into a wail of disappointment as they saw him whom they had hoped to be the One to deliver Israel being led away to the cross.

TUESDAY

Ruler of Nature. Mark 11:11-14

After Jesus had entered into Jerusalem and the temple, and had looked about on all things, and had observed how the people were desecrating the temple, he and his disciples returned to Bethany to spend the night. The next morning as they were on their way back to Jerusalem he sought to satisfy his growing hunger with a little wholesome fruit plucked from a fig tree growing along the roadside. Upon his discovery that the tree bore no fruit he displayed his kingship over nature by pronouncing what we generally speak of as a "curse" upon the barren tree, and the next morning as the disciples passed by they observed that the tree had withered.

Ruler of the Temple. Mark 11:15-19

On the previous day Jesus had noted how the temple was constantly being desecrated by selfish, grasping men who sought to make merchandise out of sacred and holy things. But Jesus was the rightful ruler of the temple and he quickly drove out of this sacred place those who had no regard for its sacredness, greatly to their amazement. This assertion of authority upon the part of Jesus aroused their anger and they immediately sought means to bring about his destruction.

THURSDAY

Power to Answer Prayer. Mark 11:20-25

When the disciples observed the destruction that had been wrought upon the fig tree, and Jesus noticed the impression it made upon their minds he took advantage of the occasion to teach them a lesson on prayer and then upon the necessity of faith

nal distinction between right and wrong; by her instruction they have learned the sinfulness of sin and God's plan of redemption. From her they have learned reverence for God's day, for his church, for life itself and for all things sacred. From her they have learned of the personally satisfying assurance of immortality, the challenge of personal accountability and judgment, and the joy of contemplating the possibility of being called at any moment into the presence of their Lord and of the blessed hope of his coming again.

Such truths learned from mother's teaching and practical faith are some of the finest blessings of the Christian home, and they are never forgotten, and seldom can be gotten away from when learned during life's tender years. Mother is the child's best teacher of religion and his noblest leader into the ways of righteousness and godliness. The sorry part of it all is that there are so many mothers who are not Christians, and so many of those who are professing Christians are neglectful of their great responsibility for the religious instruction of their children.

in God, if they would have him give heed to their prayers. It also gave him an opportunity to assert the power he had as a divine prerogative to answer their prayers. No doubt the prayers of many of us are not answered because we have not learned how to pray. We have not had proper faith in God and have really not asked believing our prayers would be answered.

FRIDAY

Jesus' Authority Questioned. Mark 11:27-33

Once again Jesus and his disciples return to Jerusalem. While they had been absent over the second night the chief priests, the scribes and the elders had had time and opportunity to counsel with one another about these strange things that had been taking place in their midst, so upon his return to the city they immediately gave expression to the conclusion they had reached denying his authority. Until now they had been rulers of the temple and the temple service, and they did not feel inclined to relinquish that authority without protest. Jesus did not wish to enter into any controversy with them, but he silenced their quibbling by simply asking them one question. And when they declined to answer he simply said "neither will I answer you."

A Reception Service for New Members

By Martha Phillips, Lookout Superintendent of the Washington State Christian Endeavor Union

It is said that "a good start is half the race," and so it is with the new member of a Christian Endeavor society. Many of the ills of the society can be traced to lack of understanding of the pledge that has been taken and the relationship of the new member to the society.

Many societies have found that a simple but yet impressive reception service is well worth while. This service should be held at regular intervals, such as during the consecration meeting on the first Sunday of each month. The lookout committee should first have done its preliminary work, explaining the pledge to the new member and having the candidates voted into the society in the proper manner.

SOME VITAL EXPERIENCES IN MINISTERING WITH THE WORD

(Adapted from report by Rev. M. B. Porter in "Bible Society Record")

One of the chief glories of the work of Bible distribution is to minister to those who would otherwise be neglected, and hence seek the destitute wherever they may be found. In no place are greater destitutions and needs than exist in our penal institutions. This phase of our work has always made a strong appeal to us. We have put into it much of our best efforts; and the beneficial results have confirmed our faith that God's Word is indeed the power of God unto salvation, and that, through its influence, sin-bound lives and souls have been brought into the light and liberty of the children of God, and the dark past of wretchedness and sin has faded out in the sunrise of a new day.

We have had fine cooperation on the part of prison officials, and the success achieved in distributing God's Word among the inmates is due chiefly to the hearty assistance and self-sacrificing service of the chaplains of these institutions.

Rev. Porter permits us to visit with him one of the prison farms within his territory and introduces us to Rev. E. C. Atkins, an untiring, soul-winning friend of these unfortunate people. He is more than three-score and ten, and for ten years has filled with unusual efficiency the position which he occupies at this state farm. He is a cultured, Christian gentleman, and with a heart of love which enables him to bring a ministry of sympathy to the men and women with whom he comes in contact.

When he took charge of the work, he wrote to the Prison Commission for advice as to just what they expected him to do. In reply the Commission wrote, saying "We have unbounded confidence in you. You are supreme in your relation to the institution as chaplain. Plan your work and work your plans. We have no advice to give." The chaplain leads a very busy life, as one might judge, often preaching three and four times on Sunday, besides weekly services, and with constant visitation and personal interviews with the inmates of the prison, including those in hospitals as well as those who are confined in the death cells, awaiting the hour of execution. During the years of his chaplaincy, hundreds of men and women have been led to accept Christ as a personal Savior, and have become members of the "State Farm Religious Association"—the only church they have.

During all these years, we have furnished Mr. Atkins with hundreds of copies of Scriptures for his work. His method of introduction to each new prisoner is a personal letter containing one of the portions of the New Testament. This enables him to form a contact with these prisoners before the cold, deadening grasp of prison life is laid upon them. In a letter to me Mr. Atkins writes, "I am thoroughly convinced that the Word of God is the only foundation on which a true Christian life can be built. Those who are led to seek Christ through the prayerful reading of the Word are more steadfast than others. I find there is no place for denominationalism in a work like this, where we have the whole 'fifty-seven varieties'—men of all faiths and men of no faiths. Those who have accepted Christ here and joined the religious organization have all been members of the Testament League and readers of the hundreds of Testaments you have sent us. I feel sure that the spiritual awakening and the interest in religion have been, and are, due to the fact that these men and women are reading the Word of God. Within the past months 387 inmates have accepted Christ as a personal Savior and taken a definite stand for right living.

"The entrance of thy word giveth light."

"Two concrete illustrations:

"A very intelligent young white man, condemned to death for murder, was sent here. He was an infidel, a blatant blasphemer, and came here 'breathing out threatenings and slaughter,' and declaring that he was not going to the chair, and that nobody could put him in it.

"The day before he was sent here, a Christian woman, a social worker, had gone to the prison to visit him. She asked him about his experience, and he told her it was none of her d—business, and that, if she would mind her own business, he would attend to his. I spent from three to five hours a day for three days and nights with him in the gloom of the death cells. On the day of his electrocution there was intense excitement. All the policemen from the nearby towns and adjoining counties were here. A throng of excited people surged about the prison. No one was allowed to enter the gate until he was searched.

"When his last hour came, the young man walked from his cell, by my side, and took his seat in the chair as calmly as though he were sitting down to his dinner. He was the only calm man in the room, where there were twenty or thirty.

"After he had been strapped to the chair, he was asked if he had anything to say. He looked calmly about him and said, 'Yes, I have. When I came here, I did not believe there was a God, nor a hereafter. I did not believe that the Bible was the Word of God. I believed that, when one died, that was the last of him. I came here expecting to die like a dog and a fool.

"Now, all of that is changed. Today I know there is a God and that he is love, and I love him and Jesus Christ is my personal Savior. I came here full of hate against those whose testimony had sent me to my death. My greatest desire to live was to get revenge upon them. But, today, that is all gone out of my heart. In its place there is the love of God, and the peace of God that passeth understanding.' Turning to me, he said, 'And I owe it all to you. Chaplain, and to God's Word.'

"It was the greatest triumph of truth that I have ever witnessed. I will give you just one more illustration of the power of the Truth.

"A young colored man, convicted of killing and robbing a white woman, was sent here to die. From the first he stoutly denied his guilt, and declared he knew nothing about it.

"I talked with him when he first came, received a very unfavorable impression of him, and told him frankly that he was bad; that he did not love the right, but only things that were evil; that an unclean heart and wrong spirit were at the bottom of his trouble. He said that he had prayed for forgiveness, and that he felt his sins were forgiven. I told him that simple forgiveness of sins would no more fit him for heaven, than a governor's pardon would make him a good citizen. I said, 'If the Governor should pardon you today, you would go out from here to seek after the things you love.' I urged him to seek for a clean heart. When I left him, I gave him a Testament. I usually mark certain passages that I think will be most helpful. But he seemed so hardened, I did not know which to mark. I asked God to direct him to that portion that would be most helpful to him.

"The day before his death, I was with him. He said, 'Chaplain, I have something I want to tell you.' I told him, 'You need not tell me anything you don't want to. You told me you were innocent. It is not for me to doubt your word. You have gambled with life and lost it. Now, if you are willing to gamble with eternity, it is your own responsibility.' He said, 'Chaplain, I killed that woman. She had seventy dollars and I wanted it. That is not all. I killed another woman three years ago and was not arrested. I deserve to die, and I am willing to die for the crimes I have committed; but I am not willing that anyone else should suffer for something I have done. I just thought that somebody might have been arrested for that crime. I am telling you, so you can look into it. If anyone is in trouble for that murder, then you can clear them.' I said, 'Thank God, boy. At last you are beginning to think of something beside yourself. Now, just one more question, How did you come to tell me all of this?' He smiled and said, 'Do you remember that little book you gave me the first day I came here? It was something I read in that book. I was lonely and picked it up, and my eyes fell on these words, "He that seeketh to save his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." I saw, just as plainly as I see you standing there, that I was trying to save my life by living and that I was going to lose my soul. I thought, if I tell the truth, I may lose my life, but I have a chance to save my soul.'

"God was there that day."

Mere bigness need not have any value at all. Greatness is quite another thing. We have long ago learned that greatness is a spiritual thing always and is closely related to the idea of God.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees was held at the College last Tuesday with the following members in attendance: Messrs. Bell, Kem, Ronk, Teeter, Glenn Carpenter, Duker, Schaffer, Ashman, Coleman, Rowsey, Belcher, Benschhoff, Workman, Bauman, Rutt, with Professor McClain representing Southern California.

The new officers are: President, Dr. W. S. Bell; Vice-President, George Kem; Secretary, Dr. R. R. Teeter; Treasurer, Frank Clapper; The three City trustees elected annually: Messrs. J. L. Clark, W. H. Balch, and Ora M. Garber.

The work of the Board was as follows:

Received the President's report, which showed the following facts: Enrollment. Last summer the largest so far. Saturday courses 20% larger than at any previous time. Regular college year, a decline of 12%. With these facts in mind, the College had already planned and partly executed a rather extended recruiting program calling on the local pastors to help. It is a matter of regret that the attendance from the churches has materially fallen, beginning, for some unknown reason, in the year 1923 when we reached the high peak of attendance from the church. The pastors and the churches will hear more about this during the summer, when we plan to have some representative present in as many of the churches as at all possible.

Finances

The Bursar's report showed that all of our investments are sound, having lost nothing during the depression and with only a very small amount of interest in arrears. Attention is here called to the fact that those giving us annuities have a very sound investment and a certain income. We can have no moratorium as other financial institutions can.

The income was materially reduced during the present year, due to two factors, both of which have shrunk, viz., gifts and tuitions. Some 70% of our income is from tuitions and when the enrollment shrinks and when tuitions are hard to collect, the total income is much reduced. The Board took notice of, and are thankful for, the continued support of the W. M. S. the National Sunday School Association, and the Sisterhood, and the secretary has been instructed to write them a letter relative to these gifts.

Committees

A committee, consisting of Messrs. Duker, Kem, and Benschhoff, together with the President was constituted on survey. This committee plans to survey the whole institution as to general efficiency, organization, teaching, etc., and to report at a later meeting.

A committee on statement of religious objectives, consisting of Messrs. Ronk, Coleman, Benschhoff, Ashman, and McClain, reported a series of religious statements which will be later reported to the various churches.

A Committee on Church Offerings was constituted, consisting of Messrs. Rowsey, Belcher, and Schaffer. Plans were made that, cooperating with the College, an unusual effort should be made to increase the Educational Day offering up to at least $2500 as a minimum. Our standing in the Associations will be endangered if this amount is not raised. The cry of "wolf, wolf, when there is no wolf," is not the case now. I solemnly warn the friends of the College that UNLESS THE GIFTS ARE INCREASED, we will be dropped from recognition. That will affect every graduate, every boy coming on towards the Seminary, and every other aspect of our church life. In my judgment it will threaten the life of the whole organization,—so important is the life of the College to the life of the church.

And the Board unanimously agreed that the minister is the key to the situation. If any of these statements need verification, write to the Board member from your district who was present at the last meeting and let him speak. Look over the list at the head of this column and then get in touch with them and verify my statements.

Faculty

The report showed that the salary roll could not be met and that the teachers would receive less than the usual nine full pay checks as heretofore. Just what the cut will be I do not know, but it will be of such an amount that no one can say that the teachers have not borne more than their share of the reduced income.

So far as I know, the same staff will be here again next year.

Dean R. R. Haun, took his Doctorate in the University of Chicago, working on the atom.

Professor Puterbaugh is still working in his problem in Organic Chemistry at Northwestern University.

Dr. Raymond Bixler, head of the department of History, spent last summer in Europe in travel and research.

Miss Doris Stout, dean of women, received her Master's degree from Ohio State University in Education, since the last meeting of the Board.

Dr. M. G. Caldwell, of the department of Sociology, has given the College much favorable publicity through his researches, being again an officer in the State Sociology organization.

Other members of the teaching staff have given the usual number of public addresses, have had articles and book reviews printed, etc.

I can not speak too highly of the spirit and cooperation of the Faculty both in the matter of the reduced pay and also in giving generous service to the College.

The Library

Upwards of the usual number of 1000 books were added to the library either through purchase or by gift during the year. This is a commendable number.

Gifts

Small but much appreciated gifts from various organizations and individuals made possible the following: A new brick walk from Founders' Hall to the Detwiler Gate; redecoration of the chapel, one recitation room, several offices, mine included, and the old Hesperian Hall; Books for the library, and certain things at the Seminary House.

Athletics

Basketball more than paid for itself and will take care of baseball and tennis. Football receipts were disappointing, especially in view of the new Redwood Stadium. In view of this fact, I have directed that all but two regular games in Football will be played away from home next year, thus insuring us an income. This will continue to be my policy until the local attendance picks up.

The Campus

The Faculty Women's Club has undertaken the project of beautifying the grounds under the direction of Mrs. Kissack, nee Lucille Teeter, graduate landscape architect and graduate of the College. This is much appreciated.

Recent Meeting of the North Central Association

I returned just before the Board meeting from the annual meeting of the North Central at Chicago, where I spent many profitable hours with former Dean Dr. Anspach.

Those of you who are familiar with the situation know that the Association announced that new standards would be made public by April, 1935. That date is changed to March, 1934. This means that after next March, we must try to adapt ourselves to these revised standards. What will they be? No hint was made. Those in authority have been very secretive about them, but they will be of such a nature as to increase the efficiency of the colleges of the North Central area.

One year from today, I can tell you more, but not now. But I am earnestly hoping that the friends of the College and the Board of Trustees will stand firm and see this institution through.

Report of the Seminary

This report was to the effect that the year was satisfactory to this department of the school. Some items of minor importance were reported, involving the Seminary House, their library, added library help etc. This the Seminary will doubtless report for itself.

Summary

Other routine matters were gone over with the general feeling that the year had been as satisfactory as could be expected. Finances are hard for the College as they are for every other organization.

Educational Day material will reach you soon. I pray that the various pastors will take this to their hearts. Some of the biggest churches in the brotherhood send us next to nothing.

And let this be borne in mind: this offering is not to increase salaries. The teachers with a cut in pay are saying nothing, but we must have a stated income in order to meet North Central requirements. In other words, we can not recall our teachers and yet hold our place. In still other words, we can not be half a college. As I often say, we can not have a college and yet not have a college. Hence this urgent demand. As to the following vital factors, we are now AT THE MINIMUM, we can not have less, viz., the number and training of our teachers, endowment, and income. May the good Lord sink this message into the hearts of our people to the bringing forth of fruitful results.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

WEST ALEXANDRIA, OHIO TO ROANN, INDIANA

On the fifteenth of February we closed our work with the good people of West Alexandria to take up our work at Roann, Indiana. As we look back over the few years that we labored with them we could not help but feel the sorrow of parting with the many friends we had made there and who had so faithfully backed us in our work. In a small congregation with many who are unable to help much in the way of support, there are many things that hinder the work. Many times we were made to remember how subtle are the workings of the evil one. So, during our ministry there we cannot report any great numerical gain but we remember that it is not always numbers that count. We can faithfully say that the spiritual condition of the church at the close of our ministry was very much better than when we went there.

Our leaving the work was not because of any desire on the part of the people who had called us for another year, nor was it because of any desire on our part. But conditions existing throughout the world, and felt very keenly in the Valley, made it almost impossible to continue keeping a pastor on the field. Word recently received informs us that they are still faithfully carrying on, that their Sunday school attendance is being maintained and we sincerely hope and pray that they may soon be able to resume full time services. Might we enlist the prayers of the brotherhood for these people?

And now, after about two months at Roann, we shall try to make a report of our activities here. From the time of our arrival nothing was left undone to assure us a cordial welcome. Our home had been cleaned and several of the men were here awaiting the coming of the truck to help us get settled. On Friday after our moving on Wednesday, about one hundred and fifty of the members came in to very pleasantly surprise us bringing with them many good things to eat. We all went over to the church where a very fine program was given. We can not say too much of the fine welcome extended us.

Arrangements had been made to begin a two weeks' meeting on the following Sunday. This was one meeting where we could not place any blame upon the weather for lack of interest, nor would we want to, for the interest was fine and the weather was ideal throughout the meeting. Our crowds numbered never less than one hundred and usually over the one hundred fifty—reaching the two hundred thirty-one mark on the closing Sunday morning, with every available seat and chair taken for the evening service. Throughout the meeting we enjoyed the best of cooperation from the members of the church. Many calls were made and much personal work was done. One very helpful part of the service was the pre-prayer service held fifteen minutes before the regular service each evening. We feel that much of the success of the meeting was a result of answered prayer. As to the results we are glad to report that on Monday evening following the meeting we baptized eleven and received three by letter. Since then a man and his wife have been received by letter. We feel that besides these who have definitely made a decision, the entire church has received a blessing and has been greatly strengthened.

Nor has our interest ceased since these meetings. On Sunday evening, March 19 prior to our regular worship service the Chili school Glee Club presented an interesting and inspiring service in song before a large and appreciative audience.

On Easter Sunday for the first time in the memory of any of our members an Easter Sunrise service was planned. We invited the other churches to cooperate. When we saw the weather conditions we were made to wonder as to the audience which we would have. The service was announced for 5:30 A. M. And through the rain they came. Members from all the churches, and some who didn't attend any church, to unite with us in a service of praise and prayer. When only about ten minutes late we began our service we had an audience numbering nearly two hundred. Printed programs were distributed and each one took their part as their time came. At our regular morning service we lifted our Easter offering and are glad to say that even with financial conditions so critical, Roann increased rather than decreased her missionary offering over that of the last several years. In the evening the Baccalaureate services were held with the Methodist pastor bringing the message. It was impossible to seat all who came. Many stood during the service and a number were turned away.

So, while having been here only two months, they have been months full of activity and full of blessing. We praise the Lord for the fine feeling of unity and the willingness with which the church has responded to help in the great work of leading men and women to Christ. We covet your prayers in our work.

GEORGE C. PONTIUS.

LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

"Be faithful to the church" was the pastor's final admonition to members present at our last quarterly business meeting.

Faithfulness to Christ and the church accounts for the growing interest, increase in attendance, souls being saved, and a spirit of unity and cooperation prevailing in the First Brethren church in La Verne.

Reports showed every department of the church and Sunday school to be in a healthy condition. New officers have been taking hold and discharging their duties well. There are four prayer meetings held each week and well attended. The music for church services is splendid, exalting Christ's finished work on Calvary. Each Sunday, decorations of flowers and greenery shows that members of the Women's Bible class love to beautify the House of the Lord.

Easter Sunday morning marked the high point in attendance—335 being present to witness the impressive program arranged by the Misses Miriam Hendrickson and Lorraine Paulson. In the evening, an Easter cantata was well rendered by a choir of 30 voices, under the leadership of Brother Orville Thomason.

Our pastor, Brother Lynn, believes in telling folks the simple Gospel on how to be saved; accordingly, nine new members were received during the quarter.

Growth and progress are manifested in the Sunday school; the average attendance being 197. Two new rooms have been built to accommodate the fast-growing Beginners' Department. A Mothers' and Babies' class has been organized in the Cradle Roll Department under the direction of Mrs. Good, and much interest is being taken in the new project. A Teachers' Training Class has also been established this month for those desirous of learning the most effective means of teaching Bible truths to Sunday school classes. Brother Paulson has been chosen teacher for the group.

There are four Christian Endeavor societies functioning in the La Verne church and helpful meetings are held each Sunday.

In order to aid those less fortunate, the deacons and deaconesses have been faithfully distributing food and clothing to needy members. At a suggestion from the Board of Deacons, the membership voted to hold our Communion quarterly instead of semi-annually, as done heretofore; remembering the verse in I Cor. 11:26—"For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come." Communion was held on Good Friday, April 14th, with about 175 members present to bear testimony to belief in the Lord's atoning work, and the sure hope of his coming again. This was the largest communion in the history of the church here.

Church finances are in good condition. Although the gifts in many cases must needs be smaller, still there abides the joy of freely giving to the Lord's work, that others may have the opportunity of hearing, for the first time, the "Glad Tidings."

The Lord is greatly blessing the La Verne church, and we ask your prayers that every leader and every member may be found faithful in whatever work he may be called to do.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES

SATURDAY

King of Earth. Psalm 2:1-12

Earthly kings may struggle and make warfare to establish kingdoms or to enlarge the borders of the lands over which they desire to have dominion, forgetting that all earthly kingdoms rise and fall, reach a height of glory and then fade away; but the Psalmist declares that "He that sitteth in the heavens will laugh." The promise is that Jesus shall rule over all the earth, and all earthly judges and earthly kings are instructed to "Serve Jehovah with fear, and rejoice with trembling."

SUNDAY

King of Heaven. Revelation 5:9-13

Neither pen nor typewriter of mere man can come anything near to the description of the King of Glory seated upon the great white throne as that given by the apostle John in the book of Revelation, so I feel it would be an anti-climax for me to attempt anything more with this daily reading than to say read this chapter instead of the few verses given in the reference.

The following is a suggested outline of a reception service:

Opening Song. "O come all ye faithful,"

Scripture. Romans twelfth or some other appropriate selection. A group of separate verses might be used, as "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths."

Prayer (in keeping with the thought of the service.)

The President. "The following persons have been voted upon for associate membership in the society." (Read the names, having each one stand as the name is read. The president reads the associate pledge, followed by) "We are depending upon you who have signed this pledge to work with us in serving the Master. On behalf of the society I wish to welcome you to the fellowship of this group. May you soon join us in a closer fellowship with our Master." (All are seated.) "As Christian Endeavorers, followers of Christ, we study his life, that we might live more as he would have us live. We find: (1) He went about doing good, thinking of others and helping them. (2) He knew the Scriptures. (3) He held regular communion with God, his heavenly Father, and never neglected his prayer life. Whenever he had a task before him, he was even more constant in prayer. If we are to be true Christian Endeavorers, we shall do all of these.

"The following persons have been voted upon for active membership in the ——— society of the ——— church. As I read your names, will you please come forward and light your candles from this taper, which represents to us the light we may receive from Christ? We can never hope to live for him unless we take this power unto ourselves." (Reads the names, one at a time, and each comes forward, lights a candle, and remains in front of the room, facing the group. They form a line as they light their candles.) "Will all the active members of the society please stand and repeat together the pledge?" (After the pledge is repeated have a prayer of consecration while they remain standing, followed by a consecration solo such as "Living for Jesus," "O Master, let me walk with thee," or "O Jesus, I have promised.")—C. E. World, Spokane, Washington.

To His Mother

LIKE the mellow note of a chime that breaks in to shame the raucous noises of the market place, comes a little story of a life that was its own exaltation; that needed no headlines in newspapers to proclaim it; that graved its own epitaph on the hearts of those with whom it was concerned. It is the story of a mother—not unlike your mother. The unusual is not in the story itself. The unusual is in the fact that it is told—and by the son of the good woman who now has passed on. He offers it as an acknowledgement and as a tribute. He surrounds it with a hallowed atmosphere. We commend it to you.

It was written by William Feather and appears in the May issue of the William Feather Magazine. Let it stand upon its own obvious merits. Read:

"Henrietta Hodgson Feather, 1866-1926.

"She was my mother.

"She died suddenly May 3.

"Born in Saltire, Yorkshire, England, at 9 she emigrated to this country with her parents. Her father died in Philadelphia when she was 14, and she was sent to Jamestown, N. Y., to live with an aunt. Until she was married seven years later, she worked in the woolen mills, and helped with her aunt's housework.

"Three children were born. I am the oldest. Norman and Mary (Mrs. George P. Wary) are two and five years younger.

"My mother worked hard. She cooked the meals, did the family washing, scrubbed the floors, and raised her children, alone. She was a remarkable cook. Her roasts, her gravy, her bread, her potatoes, her soups, her pies always turned out successfully. She could prepare a dinner for a dozen people unassisted, and get everything on the table, piping hot; and eat with her family and guests, as cool and composed as though she had contributed nothing to the occasion, except supervision.

"She was complimented by hearty eating. The fear that there might be a shortage of anything led her to serve twice as much as could possibly be eaten and she always offered two choices of pies, and often ice cream, too, for dessert.

"Each member of our family ate when it was convenient. After we began work, and left at different hours in the morning, an individual breakfast was cooked for each member of the family. She was the alarm clock of the household, rising between 5 and 6 o'clock, and waking each of us as our turn came. Dinner was available at any time between 6 and 7:30. She had a knack of keeping things hot without spoiling them. As we ate she would stand by, urging us to take a second helping, or to allow her to pour another cup of coffee.

I never knew her to complain that we made her task unnecessarily difficult. I never knew her to oversleep in the morning, or to miss having dinner ready at the proper time in the evening. I don't believe she was ever off her feet for a whole day in her life. Nor do I ever remember her saying she was exhausted, or even tired. She derstand any failing except shiftlessness.

"Her active interests were limited to her home and the members of her immediate family, but within this circle she seemed to find satisfying opportunity for the full expression of her rare spirit. Birthdays and anniversaries were joyously anticipated. No visit to the theatre or automobile tour could be enjoyed unless a grandchild was with her. A single degree of fever or a bruised shin found her at the bedside of the ailing one. No child must by any chance receive one cent more than was given to another, or one extra pat of affection. It was useless to suggest that her love was misspent, that she had a duty to herself, and that the time had come for her to relax. The thought that she might be needed and not available, kept her within earshot of a telephone day and night, wherever she might be.

"She regarded the slightest affectation as dishonest. She never tried to be anyone but herself. All people were alike to her, and equal. In the same way she would drink tea with her washerwoman and with her most distinguished friend. To each she would give her honest self. This quality of naturalness gave her a dignity that won universal respect among all people and in all places.

"My mother never appeared on a public platform. She never wrote a word for print, and I doubt that her name appeared in a newspaper five times in her life. Yet she was able, in her own way, to give beautiful expression to a rich personality. No teacher, no artist, no statesman ever gave more generously of himself than did she, and consequently she was rewarded with the spiritual exaltation that is enjoyed by those who live as she lived.

had a stern, compelling sense of duty, and she disciplined herself like a Spartan.

"Her ambition for her children taxed the family income to the last cent, and since she had charge of the expenditures she must be credited with some miraculous feats of economy. Notwithstanding the hardships of her own and my father's childhood, it was assumed that we should have the benefit of a high school education, and when I finished high school, and spoke of going to college, the means were found, and never was it suggested that a sacrifice was involved. How it was all done no one will ever know.

"She was a woman of sublime faith. She believed that somehow, someday, justice always triumphed, and that if she held true to her course her ship would arrive safely at its port. Her faith was often cruelly tested, but not once did she utter a word of cynicism or admit discouragement.

"My mother loved life. She loved people and made fast, lifelong friends with all among whom she was thrown. She was tolerant to a fault, accepting the follies of youth and age as inevitable. I do not recall that she ever reproved me, and I suspect the only sin she recognized was laziness. She could sympathize with and un-

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

A Depression Letter from the Apostle Paul to Our Churches

(Moffatt's Translation of 2 Corinthians 8)

The Apostle Paul
Writing to the Churches

Now, Brothers, I have to tell you about the grace God has given to the churches of Macedonia. Amid a severe ordeal of trouble their overflowing joy and their deep poverty together have poured out a flood of rich generosity; I can testify that up to their means, aye and beyond their means, they have given—begging me of their own accord, most urgently, for the favor of contributing to the support of the saints. They have done more than I expected; they gave themselves to the Lord, to begin with, and then (for God so willed it) they put themselves at my disposal. * * * Now then, you are to the front in everything, in faith, in utterance, in knowledge, in all zeal, and in love for us—do come to the front in this gracious enterprise as well. * * *

It is to your interest to go on with this enterprise. Now carry it through—so far as your means allow. If only one is ready to give, according to his means, it is acceptable; he is not asked to give what he has not got. This does not mean that other people are to be relieved and you to suffer; it is a matter of give and take; at the present moment your surplus goes to make up what they lack, in order that their surplus may go to make up what you lack. Thus it is to give and take—as it is written, He who got much had nothing over, and he who got little had not too little. * * * So let them have proof of how you can love, and of my reasons for being proud of you; it will be a proof read by the churches.—Reprinted from The Kingshighway, St. Louis.

Signs of the Times

GIVING Orders to God

In the year 1732, because of great excitement over some alleged miracles said to have taken place in a Paris Cemetery, the King Louis XV had the gates locked and placarded with the following sign "By order of the King, God is hereby forbidden to work miracles in this place."

If you smile at the ridiculous notion of this puny king thinking to lay down the boundaries of the Eternal God's miraculous Will and Power, do not forget that many so-called intelligent men today are attempting to do the same thing in the realms of modern education and religion. They are willing to admit the existence of God, but in the same breath they deny the possibility of miracles in the natural world. They will permit God to make the world and sustain it by his power (which in itself is an astonishing miracle), but they will not permit him to interfere or interpose miraculously in the world which he has made. Upon every gate enclosing the world of nature they have hung up their little placards: GOD IS HEREBY FORBIDDEN TO WORK MIRACLES IN THIS PLACE!

If you wonder what these "guardians" of the natural order do with such miracles as the Resurrection, the answer is that they simply deny them. In this respect they are less intelligent than King Louis. He at least believed that miracles had taken place, and therefore were possible. But these modernists will not even give serious consideration to the evidence of the miraculous. They are like the Irishman who, gazing for the first time at a giraffe, shook his head stubbornly and said, "There ain't no such animal!"

Fortunately, God is longsuffering and goes on working miracles in the lives of men. The miracle of the New Birth, which takes place every day, is sufficient to demolish all the theories of the anti-supernaturalists. The Word of God is not bound.

HOW Long Should Man Live?

Some years ago I read an utterance from a leading scientist to the effect that there was really no scientific reason why man should ever die physically; that death was just as great a scientific mystery as life. "The fundamental process of death is still unknown," says Dr. Rahn of Cornell.

More recently a University professor, Dr. Greene of Notre Dame, is quoted as saying that "The human body was originally intended to live one thousand years."

This opinion will remind you of the longevity of the patriarchs prior to the Flood. The oldest, Methuselah, attained the ripe age of 969 years. Furthermore, the testimony of the Bible is fairly clear that during the Millennial Kingdom of Christ, none who submit to his rule will die, which means that many who are living on earth when he comes to set up his kingdom will live for a thousand years.

Certainly such a conception of human life is more rational than the brief span which man at present enjoys. Eighty years is no time at all for the fulfillment of human life. That much time would be needed for the complete mastery of any particular field of knowledge or art. Just about the time that a man begins to have knowledge and experience sufficient to make him valuable to human society he either becomes feeble-minded or dies.

As a matter of fact, the ordinary lifetime is just about long enough for the average person to find out what he would like to do, how to plan his life, and what mistakes he should not make. At present, by the time we have all this essential information, we are done. Human life, as we know it today, is an unfinished torso. If you wonder why, the answer is SIN. Death is the great enemy of human life and aspiration; and Death is the wages of Sin.

THE Leaves of the Tree"

Recently, while reading an article on Bacteriology in the new Encyclopedia Britannica, I came across a very interesting statement regarding the presence of bacteria in the air. It is quite well known, of course, that the air in country districts is much freer from these minute forms than the infested air in cities. But here is something which is not so generally known:

"In forest areas the presence of bacteria in the atmosphere is usually hard to demonstrate, the leaves of trees seeming to act as efficient bacterial filters."

The authority for this statement is S. G. Paine, D. Sc., professor of Bacteriology in the Imperial College of Science and Technology, London.

This is one of the reasons why city dwellers should take their vacations, if possible, in the great forest regions. It is also an urgent reason against the denuding of our hills and mountains of trees. It has often been pointed out that the destruction of China's forests has helped to bring floods and famine. If what Dr. Paine says is true, perhaps we have here one contributing factor to China's terrible disease epidemics. And President Roosevelt's great program of reforestation may be justified on the grounds of health as well as economy.

But here is the most astonishing thing: When the Apostle John painted his marvelous word-picture of the eternal state, he described "the Tree of Life," and then declared that "THE LEAVES OF THE TREE WERE FOR THE HEALING OF THE NATIONS."

Say, if you like, that the description is figurative. But even then the question remains: How did John happen to choose a figure which rests appropriately upon a scientific principle? The only possible answer is that not John, but the All-knowing God, is the Author of the Book of Revelation. The Bible was not written primarily to teach science, but when it touches the realm of science, it is always correct. "The Scripture cannot be broken." Until we learn that, we are unintelligent.

SO We Separated"

If it were not so tragic, one might be highly amused at the reasons given by those who appeal to the courts for "relief" from the marriage relationship. Just now the term "mental cruelty" is a favorite. It covers just about everything. I have often wondered why it would not be more honest to say, as the old colored man said when trying to get rid of the last of a long succession of wives, "Judge, I'se jest nachurly tired of that woman."

A little boy had been sent by his mother to take the family dog out for a walk, and came back alone. "Where is the dog?" demanded the mother. "Well, it was like this," the youngster replied, "I wanted to go one way. The dog wanted to go another. So we just separated."

That is what the average divorcee means today.

A "Cheap" Trick

Shortly after the legalization of beer, a brewery truck rumbled up to the White House and delivered some of the 3.2 beer. Methodist Bishop Smith of Ohio, commenting on this historic occasion, declared, "It was as cheap a thing as you could expect from a ward politician." And he added, "I was never so ashamed of any man who had held the high office in the White House."

Such a judgment is certainly severe, but a great many thoughtful people will agree. It is the penalty which must be borne by the politician who yields to the clamor for booze.

The only thing I could wish is that Bishop Smith and the other leaders of the large denominations would become as much aroused over the deplorable religious teaching of Mrs. Roosevelt as they are over the President's views on liquor.

Christian morality is based on Christian truth. Take away the truth and the morality will fail. This is the clearest teaching of the New Testament. But the religious leaders of the day have not yet learned it. To a large extent they are running about frantically like blind men, either denying the failure of morality or else laying the blame on the politicians.

The truth of the matter is that politicians, like the newspapers and the theater, reflect rather than make public opinion.

Tests performed at the Holland Institute of Air-Conditioning revealed that the average weight of a woman's summer clothing, with the exception of shoes, is a little less than a pound; while a man's summer clothing has an average weight of nearly six times as much. The tests go on to prove that people can perform certain forms of light work with more accuracy and speed at a temperature of from 75° to 86° F. with a humidity of about 60 per cent than they can accomplish in cooler atmospheres.

The Place of Baptism in New Testament Preaching

Baptism seems to be dropping out of our preaching, said a church leader some time ago, and we replied, If it is so, it is not an encouraging sign. We are inclined to believe the observation is correct that our pulpits, taking the church over, are not ringing with the doctrine as they once did. That is an indication of a loss of conviction at a point that is very vital and far-reaching in its influence. We are likely following the leadership of the popular non-denominational preacher in this, and coming to look upon the preaching of baptism as indicative of narrowness and denominational mindedness. In so far as we are doing that, we are neither being true to the Gospel nor to the best interests of the church.

Baptism is more than a church practice, though we often refer to it as if we thought it to be just that and nothing more. It is a vital doctrine, an essential tenet of the Christian faith, a divinely instituted vehicle for the conveyance of profound and eternal truth. Its institution is one of the very last words of our Lord; its practice is made a part of the inescapable task of the church, and it stands at the very door of the kingdom as one of the essential steps to salvation. It should, therefore, be proclaimed with greater conviction and distinctiveness. It should be emphasized more strongly and given a larger place in our denominational teaching and life.

But that is merely our opinion. What our readers will be more interested in and more largely profited by is to have presented to them the place baptism occupied in the preaching of New Testament times, as recorded in the Word. And in the brief space and time at our disposal, we can only point out a few of the most outstanding examples of apostolic preaching that reveal the place baptism occupied in their message.

Peter the Pre-eminent Preacher

Peter is the preacher pre-eminent of the New Testament church, and among them all none has greater right to speak with authority. He was in the school of the Lord from the beginning of his ministry to the time of his receiving up into glory, and was one of three most intimately associated with the Great Teacher and most fully trusted by him. As he was the spokesman of the disciples during Christ's earthly ministry, so he continued to be when the Holy Spirit had come upon them on the day of Pentecost. On that occasion he led in the most marvelously successful evangelistic campaign that the church has ever known. In the midst of that masterful sermon, when he had proclaimed Christ crucified and risen, as the fulfillment of prophecy, multitudes of his hearers were stricken with conviction and cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Then it was that Peter challenged them with the necessity of repentance and baptism. It was not merely, "Come forward and shake hands with the preacher and declare your intentions of becoming one of us," as some modern evangelists, wishing to make the way easy, tell their interested hearers. The step into salvation is far too significant and vital to be tempered down. Baptism may be inconvenient, but it was put right down on the basis of absolute necessity. Hear him: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." And so thoroughly was the necessity of baptism pressed upon them that we read concerning the results of that sermon: "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls" (Acts 2:38, 41).

Philip, the Lay Evangelist

Among the lay preachers of the New Testament church, perhaps none stands higher than Philip, the evangelist. It will be interesting to note the place baptism occupied in his message, as he ministered to the people in the city of Samaria. His was indeed a whole gospel ministry, including the relief of the sick and the distressed and the preaching of "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," with the result that those who "believed Philip . . . were baptized, both men and women" (Acts 8:12). We are not told in so many words that he preached baptism, but it is evident that he did from the fact that those who believed his message readily accepted baptism. Then when Philip caught up with the Ethiopian eunuch along the desert road and sat with him in his chariot, we are told that he "preached unto him Jesus" with the result that when "they came unto a certain water, . . . the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" (Acts 8:35, 36). Why did that negro convert offer to be baptized? Any child who had read the story would be ready with the answer: Philip must have preached baptism as a part of his Gospel message. Baptism was an inseparable part of "the things concerning the kingdom" in his message. To "preach Jesus" involved preaching baptism with all of its wonderful significance. But many preachers have grown wiser and more skillful today, in that they are able to separate this rite from "the things concerning the kingdom," and find it possible to call men unto repentance in Christ without preaching baptism.

Paul, Missionary to the Gentiles

The most influential and far-famed preacher of the New Testament church was Paul, the missionary to the Gentiles, a man who declared that he received his commission and message directly from the Lord (Acts 26:15, 16); it will be interesting to see how baptism seems always to have a place in his preaching. It is not definitely reported that he preached baptism, but his converts are reported as submitting to the rite as if it were as certainly a part of his message as must have been the Messiahship of Jesus. Lydia of Thyatira, whose heart the Lord had touched, is spoken of as having "attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul," and then "she was baptized and her household." Among "the things which were spoken" must have been baptism. Of the Philippian jailor it is said, after Paul and Silas had spoken "unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house," that "he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straight" (Acts 16:32, 33). Here again baptism is not mentioned as being preached, but from the readiness of the jailor to be baptized, we know he must have been taught its necessity and meaning. When Paul was in Corinth, he preached in "a certain man's house, . . . and Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized" (Acts 18:7, 8). What must have been the message they heard, that believing it, led them to be baptized forthwith? Surely there was in it the necessity of baptism. The fact that the writer of the Acts thought it not necessary to report that Paul was preaching baptism is all the more significant; baptism was so generally recognized as an inseparable part of the preaching of Jesus and the things concerning his kingdom, that it was taken for granted that the rite would be preached where the message was faithfully delivered. In Jerusalem or on foreign soil baptism was always an integral part of the Gospel message and all of God's chosen messengers were faithful in proclaiming it. And whatever positions others may take, for Brethren preachers there is but one consistent position, and that is to follow the example of the New Testament preachers in the proclamation of the message. Only so can it be truly said that we are giving to the world a whole Gospel message.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

EDUCATIONAL DAY OFFERING is to be lifted this year on June 24th, and it is hoped that all churches will make a special effort to report a generous offering. The need of the College and Seminary is great and coming issues of this paper will inform our readers of that need. Pray and plan that your church may do its best in support of this great work.

Brother Charles H. Ashman is secretary of the General Conference Executive Committee and as such he is requesting representatives of the various general interests of the church to prepare their departmental programs for General Conference and have same in his hands by June 1st. See his notice in this issue. The date of General Conference is August 21 to 27 and the place is Winona Lake, Indiana.

Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the church at Waterloo, Iowa, writes that every department of his work at that loyal Brethren center is "doing splendid work." His Bible instruction has commanded much attention and the attendance at the regular services has been good. As a result of pre-Easter services conducted by the pastor, seventeen souls were added to the church, fifteen by baptism, one by relation and one by letter.

It is the Fiftieth Anniversary Conference, says Moderator Bame, to which Ohio churches are called upon to send delegates, June 20 to 23, and the place is Dayton, Ohio, where the Brethren church was first organized just fifty years ago, in the year 1883. There is no place quite so appropriate to meet on this anniversary occasion as at Dayton, and there is perhaps no church quite so well equipped to handle a large conference as is this splendid church. All churches of the district should plan for a large delegation.

A very encouraging report comes this week from Brother C. C. Grisso, pastor of the church at Lanark, Illinois, where twenty-seven souls were added to the church primarily as the result of personal evangelism on the part of the pastor and his co-workers. A week of union pre-Easter services prepared the field and the harvest was gathered by home visitation and regular preaching services. Eighteen had been baptized at the time of the report and others awaited the rite. Two came by relation and there were two life-work decisions. All departments of the church are in a prosperous condition and the Christian Endeavor Society receives special commendation for its good work. Brother Grisso has been called to remain as pastor for his fifth year at Lanark. We appreciate the kind words he writes about the Evangelist and other church publications, and we are all endeavoring to be worthy of such commendation. He announces the loss by death of the wife of Brother Z. T. Livengood, one of our pioneer ministers. We extend to Brother Livengood sincere sympathy on the part of the Evangelist family.

President Edwin E. Jacobs gives us this week the Commencement Week program for Ashland College, the outstanding features among the numerous events being the May Day program on May 20th; baccalaureate sermon on June 4th by Rev. Charles H. Ashman of Johnstown First church; the commencement address on June 7th by the Hon. Vernon Riegel, former superintendent of Public Instruction for Ohio; and the class day exercises on June 8th, which are planned to be held in the Redwood Stadium, weather permitting.

We are informed that the annual Bible lecture course under the auspices of the Cambria County Christian Endeavor Union, recently given by Prof. M. A. Stuckey of Ashland Seminary, was largely attended throughout the entire week. The meetings were in the Third church of Johnstown, where Brother J. L. Gingrich is pastor, except the closing day, when the meetings were transferred to the First church of Johnstown, where Brother C. H. Ashman is pastor and we are told the church was crowded. We shall hope to have a more detailed report for our young people's page directly from those in charge of the organization.

Our correspondent from Sunnyside, Washington, quotes from the annual report of the pastor, Brother Harold D. Fry, to the effect that six had been received into the church by baptism during 1932 and the attendance at the regular church services keeping up splendidly. Four made the decision for Christ on Easter Sunday, making eight in all to await baptism, besides one having been baptized since the first of the year. Their Easter offering for Foreign Missions amounted to $300.00, and the report says this amount will be doubled during the month. That speaks of real sacrifice for a people who are as hard hit by the depression as are our good brethren of Washington State.

Dr. Charles A. Bame gives us another installment of "Travel Flashes," in which he reports an evangelistic campaign held in the New Lebanon, Ohio, church, where Brother Lester V. King is the efficient pastor. The evangelist was given an enthusiastic hearing and the attendance was uniformly good, and we understand there was a good harvesting of souls, though some among the farmers were not reached, due to seasonal difficulties in attendance. But we shall have to await the pastor's report to learn the definite results of the meeting. Brother Bame's reference to the duty of Brethren in regard to the 18th Amendment is timely and needs to be emphasized. We cannot excuse ourselves for being indifferent about the matter in this crisis time.

Dr. C. F. Yoder reports a wonderful evangelistic campaign conducted in a new town by the name of Hernando, in our mission field in the Argentine. For five weeks they preached the Gospel and did personal work and in the face of much opposition by the priests, the sympathy of the town of 9,000 population was won to our work and several hundred people made public confession of Christ. Brother Farre, the converted priest, proved a power in God's hands for the turning of the minds of the people to the true Gospel message. It is evident that the Roman priests have lost their leadership because of their unfitness for spiritual leadership, and the field seems to be ripe for a great harvest of souls by men who are God's true husbands. Certainly such opportunities as this field presents are a challenge to every member of the Brethren Church.

We have reports from Brethren H. H. Rowsey and J. S. Cook of the exchange revival held at Falls City, Nebraska, where Brother Rowsey is the pastor. He and his people appreciated the good work of Brother Cook as evangelist and personal worker, and the Lord blessed the efforts of this splendid team of soul winners and there were added unto the church fourteen by baptism (though two are awaiting the rite) and one by letter. One was baptized who have confessed Christ previous to the meetings. The instruction classes conducted by the pastor and Brother J. C. Dodds, the one on the "Meaning of Church Membership," and the other on "Evangelism," bore fruit during the campaign. Class instruction is a method of indoctrinating that our churches are coming more widely to employ, greatly to the benefit of our people. Sister Rowsey was the efficient song leader during the meetings.

The work at Canton, Ohio, under the pastoral care of Dr. J. C. Beal, continues to go forward in all departments. The Sunday school has averaged 305 during the past four months, the attendance for the last Sunday in April being 378. It has not been many years since the Canton Brethren built a new church, and they supposed they were building for a long time in the future, but Dr. Beal informed us on a recent trip to Ashland that their Sunday school is crowded for space. And God continues to increase their numbers and power. A total of forty-three confessions have been received since the first of the year, twenty-one of which have been received into church membership, and most of the others will be received in the near future. Easter Sunday witnessed four confessions, six baptized and six confirmed and the giving of a Foreign Mission offering of $650.00. The day was opened with a union sunrise service participated in by the Louisville and Canton churches, meeting in the Canton church, with Brother Whitted bringing the message.

Ohio Christian Endeavor Convention will be held at Cincinnati, June 27-30, and Dr. Daniel A. Poling, International Christian Endeavor president, is announced as one of the speakers.

The Brethren's Home Crisis, as reported by Dr. J. Allen Miller last week, in our editorial columns, should receive the serious attention of pastors and lay leaders throughout the brotherhood. Something must be done about it. It would be a shame to be compelled to lose all we have put into that splendid institution at Flora,

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST BY HAROLD D. FRY

At Christmas season, the world either forgets Christ in their commercialism and social revelry of the day, or, beholding Magi and shepherd, camels and sheep, put a partial and limited interpretation on the person, purpose and work of Jesus Christ.

Next Lord's day we shall try to speak appropriately of the season and event of our Lord Jesus being born of a virgin, but this morning we wish to remind ourselves of seven great facts that followed the incarnation, which are included in the gospel of Christ.

The apostle's expression in his Roman letter is interesting. At the outset he states that he was separated unto the Gospel of God, then a little later writes of being ready and unashamed to preach the Gospel of Christ. We consider these one and the same gospel, this quality being suggested, that Christ's name indicates his particular work in providing the Good News, when the fullness of time was come for such redemptive sacrifice.

Let us therefore consider these seven aspects of the Gospel of Christ, together with Its Proclamation and Provision.

I SEVEN ASPECTS

1. The Life of Christ. Many prejudiced against certain doctrines taught in the epistles to the churches, have raised a sensational cry for several years, "Back to Jesus of Nazareth," "Back to the Four Gospels". These men have rejected any set doctrinal belief, denounced what Bible passages they desired, and taught virtue and works for salvation—modeled only after Jesus, that good man of Galilee. Now, for the most part, these liberals, who wanted only the Life of Christ for a guide, having no understanding of the Old Testament, when they back up through the four Gospel records, fell off into space. Perhaps it was because some especially radical Fundamentalists left out the necessity of a holy, helpful life and the maintenance of good works out of their preaching, and too harshly scorned all who disagreed with their letter-of-the-law phraseology, that these others took the opposite extreme. God save them all!

But we are not extremists either way. God forbid that any commandment, any doctrine, any ordinance written herein to the saved of this age should be overlooked, disobeyed, or overemphasized. The Holy Spirit still loves order and fullness.

The Life of Christ is important; it is our pattern. Peter was persuaded, "For even hereunto were ye called, because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an EXAMPLE that we should follow his steps." "He bare our sins" that we should "live unto righteousness". As he lived sinless, so we are to keep ourselves in the will of God, living as he would in this age. That song is searching—"Can the world see Jesus in me?" He said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one for another." And if men take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus, and have learned of him, it will be because our trust is in his death and resurrection, and our eyes on our Perfect Pattern.

Young people, far above the character and attainments of men and women, set your ideal and standard in that faultless One who alone is able to keep us from falling.

2. The Second Fact of the Gospel is that the Death of Christ is our propitiation—the sacrifice that redeems us. John said, that "God loved us and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." This is the very heart of the Gospel, and the first principle for the sinner to grasp and appropriate.

It is the brazen altar of the old Tabernacle, past which the sinner could not go till the blood of another had been offered for him. Neither could one not desiring to enter in and offer sacrifice, even see the mysteries and riches of God's spiritual provision that lay beyond the brazen altar of sacrifice. "Without shedding of blood is no remission."

God could only show mercy to us wayward ones because the Son of God propitiated the Law which rightly condemned us. His life was not only righteous, but his death resulted because the wrath of the holiness of God visited our sins which were placed on him. The Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world enabled God to be just and yet show mercy.

"His the labor, ours the rest;
His the death, and ours the life.
Ours the fruits of victory,
His the agony and strife."

3. Consider the figure of the Burial of Christ. As Christ died for sins, with our guilt upon him, and his body was buried, so the Scripture gives us the same symbol in baptism. Rom. 6:3-5, "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

It is because of this accurate figure of baptism as a burial, that ten members of two other churches in our community have requested and received immersion in this baptism during the past two years. In the likeness of his death, we baptize forward, for "he bowed his head upon the cross, and gave up the ghost"; and our minds and hearts should die to sin and self when we enter these waters.

Baptism is a voluntary burial of the old life, the old nature and self-love, performed in water as Christ's physical burial was done in earth. But if the figure apart from genuine surrender to the Holy Spirit of God is of no benefit, whatever the mode.

4. The Fourth fact of the Gospel is the Resurrection. This is a pledge, a proof of the deity and power of Christ, and also of the surety of God's spiritual provision for us. Christ's resurrection is also in the heart of the gospel, and the often preached truth of the apostles. Paul declares: "I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." Again, "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." The Colossians are exhorted, "If ye then be risen with Christ seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth."

THE TEXT:

Paul says THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST, "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."
—Romans 1:16.

5. But he did not stay among his own after he arose, except for forty days, in which he prepared the apostles for his departure, and the advent of the Holy Spirit with witnessing power. He had said, "I leave the world and go to the Father." He was "carried up," "taken up," into heaven, leading captivity captive, and giving gifts unto men. Far above all principality and power and every name that was named, did he rise, to receive the glory at the Father's right hand which he had before the world was. Why did he go? "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Blessed promise, made doubly sure by his ascension. I believe that home is about prepared—a home that endures, where legalized thieves and robbers do not break in and steal either property or character.

6. Yes, he is now interceding—preparing a people for a prepared home. Now he sustains! Now he defends! Blessed Advocate and High Priest at God's right hand! He continues his ministry until we all come to the unity of the faith, to that full measure of the body of Christ, known only to God.

"My little children, these things write I unto you that ye sin not." And if any man (Christian) sin, we have an Advocate with the Father Jesus Christ the Righteous." "Wherefore he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto the Father by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." "For we have not an High Priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted as we, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

7. And need we mention the seventh fact in the Gospel of Christ? He is coming again! The coming Lord will fulfill our hopes and do even beyond our keenest anticipation. What a blessed Hope! A sweetening and purifying knowledge is this fact; and the sooner he returns, the better for those ready to go. My loved one would be instantly released from her affliction, your troubles and heartaches would be no more. No more mortgages, no starting over, no Federal Loan crooks, no rascals and no rackets, no sorrow, sickness, death—when Jesus Comes!

Romans 8 tells us what we have been groaning for, the redemption of this body. He shall change this body to be as his perfect and glorified body appeared and functioned. Paul also states that the whole creation groans for the very manifestation of the sons of God—Christ's return with his saints. The second advent is the only hope of man, nation, or earth. But he comes first for his saints. "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" Will you be?

pel of Christ. Is it the power of God unto salvation in your life? Repent and believe the gospel!

II. THINK FURTHER OF THE REVELATION OF THIS GOSPEL. HOW WAS IT MADE KNOWN?

1. It was first declared in Eden, as recorded in Gen. 3:15. A person of the human race would yet defeat to the death that source of sin, Satan and his own, but should be wounded in the conflict. The seed of the woman—not of the man, for he was Virgin born—shall bruise thy head, Serpent, and thou shall bruise his heel.

2. The Gospel was prefigured in the Ark. The thoughts of their hearts only evil continually, the earth filled with violence, as our present age, was ripe for judgment, and God sent the flood to destroy mankind from the earth. But eight souls were saved through faith in an ark, when the waters of judgment came. The believers were very few and were delivered from the wrath to come. The Ark was of God's and man's construction, as Christ in the flesh was conceived of the Holy Spirit and born of a Virgin to save his people from their sins.

3. Isaac pictures the Christ of the Gospel. He was a type especially in his miraculous birth, his singularly blameless and peaceful life, his willingness to be offered by his father on Mt. Moriah, the place later of Calvary, and in his waiting for his Gentle Bride.

4. The lamb portrayed the Gospel. Every one of those docile creatures slain from Abel down, especially the Passover lamb, depicted Christ the sacrifice. "For all we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." The Baptist pointing to the Lord Jesus declared him, "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

5. And similarly, all the Old Testament sacrifices pre-figured our Gospel, for all these "were a shadow of that which was to come." God provided a way of escape and a way of atonement, through a complicated sacrificial system in stone altar, in tabernacle and in temple, and all "these were figures of the True." Christ, the fulfillment of the Law, dispelled the "shadow."

6. Men of old prophesied the Gospel. When God was in Christ reconciling the world, and had risen from the dead, to his own he began "at Moses and all the prophets, expounding unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." "Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures." Peter left us, "Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you; searching what and what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when he testified beforehand the suffering of Christ and the glory that should follow."

7. It was personally revealed in Jesus Christ. He was the Divine and personal proclamation of God's good news. Therefore we speak of the Gospel of Christ. "No man cometh unto the Father save by me," he said. "He that hath the Son hath life." And as the Father once said, "This is my well-beloved Son in whom I am well-pleased," so we are accepted in the Beloved. He that believeth hath life.

III. WELL, WHAT IS THE PROVISION OF THE GOSPEL?

1. It offers life for the dead, and to the dead. All men naturally are dead in trespasses and sins. Christ gives us life. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." He that hath the

▼ BITTERNESS ▼

By Frank Gehman

Text: "Lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby the many be defiled."—Heb. 12:15b.

Men steeped in sin cannot help being won to the Gospel of Jesus Christ when they hear it, whether or not they submit their lives to it. Just why, we sometimes wonder, does the sinner, when he senses his own undone-ness, so soon recognize the Gospel as meeting his need? Is it because Christianity offers a fine philosophy of life? Because of its marvelous theological system? Because of its revelations of God's dealings with men? Or because of many of the other wonderful features of the Faith? Generally, No. The thing that grips the heart of the sinner is the knowledge that here is love. Love, strong, true and tender. Love that is in marked contrast to the distrust, suspicion and hatred of the world of sin. Right at the supreme moment the heart is set on one thought: God loves man and has made that love real through Jesus Christ.

Christianity is a way of suffering-for-others love. The principle began with God. It has reached through the Godhead. It has come down to man. Man needs salvation and this love alone can provide it. It is the heritage of the church. It is the very evidence of life in the church flowing, as it must, from God. How wise, then, the injunction of Paul: "Looking carefully . . . lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby the many be defiled." Is bitterness love? Does love beget bitterness? Can bitterness honor God, gain respect for the church? How separated the forces of love and bitterness! As far as God from Satan, heaven from hell. Reluctantly now, Does bitterness ever creep into the church? Alas! Alas!

How often the church's testimony has been weakened, almost broken because of bitterness! The pages of history are black (red?) with it. How often God's servants have failed in their service because of bitterness! It is a sad story, too sad to dwell upon. Far better that it be left to the records of the past, that the yellowness of age and the mustiness of years should hide the record. Yes, far better were it so, but the very suggestion is a futile and impossible brain child. Turn where we may, or when we may, there still fall on our ears and jar our hearts distracting notes of bitterness. God, that it might not be so! Christianity represents the ideal, but we must live in the real.

"Looking carefully . . . lest any root of bitterness springing up." "Springing up" where? In the world? Amongst the servants of sin? Such questions were mere foolishness—bitterness is always there. It is a part of that order. No, springing up amongst believers and in the church. It is that which Paul is concerned about. He taught the faithful. Such things springing up in the church must find their beginning somewhere in the hearts of believers. What a sad commentary on the state of the hearts of many. The root of bitterness must have soil, and in this case the soil will have to be the lives of church people if there is such a thing as bitterness in the midst of the church. And how it spreads to "the many."

How carefully we need to look, then, to our own spiritual states. I do not say that we have power to prevent or overcome bitterness. We do have access to the Grace of God and there is victory there for the asking. Do we lack victory? Perhaps—let us not offend—perhaps we have been seeking victory over PERSONS rather than personal victory over sin. And what a difference there is! But how often we let Satan delude us into thinking there is none, and then we choose the former rather than the latter victory. And in so doing we show that after all there is a difference. Poor deluded souls we so often are. The Lord wept over Jerusalem for its blindness. Weeps he today—over us?

Who of us has not been sometimes guilty of harboring some bitterness? To be sure, we may deny it, but does that change the fact? Maybe we have not been sufficiently frank, sufficiently honest with ourselves to see and admit the truth. Having let ourselves be blinded by the fact, we continue by blinding ourselves to the fact. Mostly we would deny that we have been or are bitter. Poor souls that we are, and to such the Lord has entrusted the work of his church. Experienced men would KNOW better than to trust such a great task to such incompetent servants. But God entrusted it to men, redeemed men, to be sure, but men still. What a startling proof of the Divine nature of the Great Commission! Man KNOWS better about the nature of man in such a place of trust; God DOES better about that very thing. "And lo, I am with you always." Bitterness in our hearts! Why? Because we have not given Jesus Christ full reign in our lives.

Brethren, will we never learn? Once, when a mere youth, my job was to "set up" cutters and reamers for the tool grinders in a factory. The day came when I was leaving. A grinder complained that just about the time he got a workman trained to rightly set up his cutters that one left and he had to train another all over again. And God—how long does it take him to train us to a place where we may begin to have some usefulness? With many it is a good share of a lifetime before we really begin to learn and then soon, so soon, we have cleared off the stage—for others to learn! Well it is, that God is patient and loving. But that does not excuse us for failing to learn! What scars bitterness leaves in our own lives and in the lives of others! Wounded feelings, aching hearts, burdened with a load WE could have saved them, could have saved ourselves! "Looking carefully . . . lest any root of bitterness." Will we go on like this without looking? God forbid.

"Lest . . . thereby the many be defiled." What does the name "Brethren" stand for? Does it always mean to others what we want to claim for it? Are there reasons why it might not mean such to them? Somewhere, sometime, maybe, we haven't been quite the sort of Brethren of the Lord that we might have been. "Lest . . . the many be defiled" by "any root of bitterness." "Any" root of bitterness. The cause is not defined by Paul, is of no concern to his purpose. There are times when, humanly speaking, we may have plenty of grounds for offense.

We may be within our human rights. That is not the point. Many things may be "manly" without being "Christly." Clearly bitterness is not "Christly." There is danger of "the many" becoming defiled by it. Brethren, as never before let us now pray that "the Many" be not defiled by "any root of bitterness springing up" within us. The Grace of the Lord is sufficient if we only let it have its free course.

Son hath life; he has passed from death into life. If you are dead to spiritual things, call upon the Name of the Lord.

2. He will pardon our guilt. Oh, the law of the land might be appeased of my crime; society might even forget, or condone it; but God forgives! "There is forgiveness with thee"—stands

That word of glorious truth forever.
I reach to it with outstretched hands,
I grasp it with divine endeavor.

Thou "blotted out"—nor shall thy thought
The guilt recall—its presence ponder;
That blood our cleansing which has brought Unnumbered souls to glory yonder.

3. "There is no peace", saith my God "to the wicked." But the Gospel provides peace for the troubled. He is our peace, has restored us to God. Once our carnal minds were at enmity with God, we were hopelessly separated by cherished sin; but Christ bore our sin, brought us to God, and now we have peace. And in the sea of life, with its bitterness and woe, its perplexity and disaster he says, "Come unto me, I will give you rest", then, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

4. Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? Can a leper change his spots? Who else can cleanse away all filthiness of flesh and spirit, all habits, all stain, all corruption of body and mind, but Jesus? "Somebody came and lifted me,

Out of my shame and misery,
Somebody came, O who could it be?
Who could it be, but Jesus?"

"If we confess our sins he is faithful and righteous to forgive our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

5. Oh, yes, he came to set at liberty the captive! The oppressed of earth, the afflicted, those torn by Satan, any at all held captive by demon, sickness, habit, death, should know he came to save you. "And if the Son of man shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Blessed that freedom of the children of God!

6. He is the God of all comfort, and even more—he brings joy to those in Christ who sorrow. Joy that the world has not, cannot give, neither can take away that which you have! "My joy I give unto you". Said another convert recently, a young lady, "I never knew what joy was, nor good times, nor pleasure, before I became a Christian."

7. And how shall we sum up this Gospel provision except by stating that it has salvation for all the lost. "How think ye, if a man have an hundred sheep and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains and seeketh that sheep?" "But none of the ransomed ever knew how deep were the waters crossed, or how dark the night that the Lord passed through, ere he found the sheep that was lost." The Gospel of Christ has a loving message for every one.

"Love has a hem of its garment that touches the very dust;

It can reach the stains in the streets and lanes and because it can, it must.

It dares not rest on the mountains, it is bound to come to the vale,

For it cannot find its fullness of mind till it falls on the lives that fail."

Sunnyside, Washington.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

A SAD SPECTACLE

A week or two ago the city of Toronto was treated to the unedifying spectacle of what was called a "religious symposium" in the largest public hall of the city. A local minister of the United Church, a local rabbi, and the world's most blatant agnostic, Mr. Clarence Darrow, each told why he was what he was and why he believed what he did believe. The hall was packed to capacity. For any evangelical Christians present in the audience it must have been a humiliating spectacle. The case for Christianity was presented by a liberal clergyman. The evidences of the effects of Christianity he found in the many agencies in the world for the amelioration of the social conditions of mankind. God, he said, had been crucified many times during the years of the Great War, and he was one who had been redeemed. Just what he meant by this statement it is impossible for us to say. There was apparently no mention of sin or its effects upon the human race. The Cross of the Lord Jesus Christ was evidently deemed an offense, and God's love to mankind in sending his Son into the world to die for sinners something not to be mentioned in such a gathering. What a travesty of the Christian Gospel must have been presented. No wonder the agnostic laughed and the Jewish Rabbi claimed the Christian minister as a kindred spirit with himself. The Cross being omitted the rabbi paid tribute to the life and teachings of the "Nazarene". Out of this sorry spectacle Christianity emerged worst of all. The worst feature of the whole business is the effect it must have produced on the minds of any who were there enquiring as to the merits of the case presented by each of the speakers. If such an one should have happened to be in that large audience, burdened by sin and looking for bread to the Christian minister, he must have received only a stone. If tears can be shed in the glory land, angels must have wept.—The Evangelical-Christian.

BRITAIN'S DRINK BILL

George Wilson, the political secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance, has just issued his annual analysis of the nation's drink bill.

The total consumption of absolute alcohol last year was approximately 36,500,000 gallons, as compared with 34,500,000 gallons in 1913, a decline of about 57 per cent. The total expenditure was £232,500,000, or an average of £5 3s. per head of population. The total amount spent during the previous year on strong drink was £259,800,000.

Part of that decline is assuredly traceable to the prevalence of unemployment; but undoubtedly part, too, is due to the increasingly sober habits of our people. As Mr. Baldwin said recently, "Money which used to be spent on beer, is now largely spent on other things."—The Christian Advocate, Birmingham, England.

NEW FIVE-YEAR PLAN IN RUSSIA

A new five-year plan will go into effect in Russia on May 15. This plan requires the liquidation of all religions within the designated period. The decree has been signed by the chiefs of the Communist Party and ratified by the High Commission of the Soviet Republic. The religion proscribed include the Christian, "in whatsoever form practiced;" Jewish and Islamic. In the first year of the Five-Year Plan provision is made for the closing of all religious schools, seminaries and theological courses. The plan does not include for the first year the immediate closure of churches of the liquidation of ecclesiastical associations. These are reserved for later. In 1933 "the active irreligious campaign must be redoubled so as to insure the definite abolition of religion in the home and in the officially registered associations of believers," i. e., in the old monasteries. Moreover, all those connected with or in the service of any religious cult are to be denied a government ration card, which means they are deprived of all means of subsistence. The days of martyrdom are soon to return.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

Indiana. Some way ought to be devised to meet the present demands and save the Home and the good name of our church. Read that editorial again in last week's paper and then make the problem a matter of prayer. We suggest that it be prayed about in every church prayer meeting during the month of May. If it can be laid upon the hearts of the members so that they will earnestly pray about it, we believe the money will be found to meet this crisis.

We have a good newsletter from the Dutchtown congregation near Warsaw, Indiana, where a real revival of interest and activity has taken place. It began with a revival conducted by Brother E. M. Riddle in April of 1932, when thirteen were added to the church by baptism and the membership in general was reconstituted. There was a reorganization and the selection of a pastor in the person of Brother William E. Oberholser, a minister of the Church of the Brethren living near at hand. He has been an instrument in God's hands for leading these people out into larger things. The Sunday school averaged 55 on March 1, when an inter-class contest was launched with a goal of 100 set for attendance. At the end of eight weeks the average attendance was 122, and the still more encouraging thing about it all is that they do not feel that they have reached their limit; they are envisioning an attendance of 200, now. This is the home of Brother Thomas Plew, well known to many who have known the Dutchtown work in years past, and he is well loved by all who have known him.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humbert

(Study Number Nineteen)

The Second Trumpet

"The second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burned (burning) with fire was cast into the sea; and the third part of the sea became blood." One-third of the creatures died and one-third of the ships were destroyed (Ch. 8:8).

Thousands of meteors strike this earth every day. Many are burned up before reaching the ground, but I have seen scores weighing up to three thousand pounds that have buried themselves in the earth. A meteor which fell long ages ago, has been found in Siberia (I believe it is) covering several acres of ground and another is at this present moment, flying this way at terrific speed, timed to strike the Mediterranean Sea just at the blast of the second angel.

This trumpet effects the sea. The Mediterranean Sea is the sea around which prophecy centers. If this be so, this trumpet effects the kingdom of the antichrist in a special way.

I walked along Lake Erie, and a few fish, washed ashore, made the place very disagreeable. What a stench, thousands of tons of fish will make in the country as the breezes blow landward.

At the flood at Galveston, Texas, some years ago, ships were washed ashore and left on dry land. So here, one-third of the ships will be destroyed as this great "mountain" falls into the sea, making great tidal waves and scattering destruction on every hand.

The Third Trumpet

"And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp," (Vs. 10). This meteor turns one-third of the rivers and fountains into wormwood and many people die. Just how this will effect the drinking water, I do not know, but it will probably fall upon the source of water, maybe the Alps mountains and the water will absorb the deadly gases.

Jeremiah speaks of giving "Water of gall to drink" (Jer. 9:15). I once heard Paul Rader say that it has been learned that the spring at Jericho has its source in some mountains over one hundred miles away. At any rate, the rivers and wells will still be running, only they will have a yellowish color and a bitter taste.

The Fourth Trumpet

"The fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten," (Vs. 12). Also the moon and stars are affected. This is still one of the trumpets that is to hurt the earth, and what discomfort it will bring. One-third of the sun smitten, will affect the ripening of the grain and fruit. It will disturb the seasons and change the winds of the earth. It will fill the world with a damp coolness and a sickening gloom; a chilliness and a horror that is unspeakable.

Let unbelief laugh, if they will, but God can turn down the lamp in the sun as easy as an old grandmother can lower the wick in a kerosene lamp. A little too and I were in the barn and I called to him to come out. As I pulled the big door shut, the little fellow watched it with an expression of fear upon his face as he toddled out. But I had my hand upon the door and was timing its progress to suit the occasion. So with God, he has the situation in hand and nothing can get beyond his power.

The Woe Trumpets

The next three trumpets are called, "Woe trumpets" (V. 13). The first four brought terrible judgments but will be light compared to the last three.

Let us remember that Christ is cleansing the earth for the Kingdom Age and puts on the judgments by degrees, thus giving opportunity for repentance to all who will turn to him. These last three trumpets are to end the present order of world affairs (the vials are included in the last trumpet), it is the closing of the history of a doomed world and things are to be more and more severe in order to jar loose the self confidence of every possible man.

Over and over, in this book, we see God stopping just before a terrible judgment falls, and giving warning or comfort to all who will hear. Here he sends an angel with a message of woe—a message to strike terror to any whose heart has been too hard to melt in the preceding sorrows.

Chapter Nine. Fifth Trumpet

"And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth, and unto him was given the key of the bottomless pit" (Vs. 1). This star is a person for the key is given to HIM.

Satan had to get permission to torment Job and when God gave him leave, he dashed away and used his power to the utmost. So now, Satan is doing all he can to hinder mankind through the agency of his demons that are free, but not all of his subjects are free, some are still in the pit. There are worlds of being and darkness that no man has ever seen; there are myriads of strange and evil creatures that no man has ever dreamed could exist.

Before Satan fell, he was called "Lucifer" (day-star) (Isa. 14:12). Before Christ died, it seems that Satan had the keys of Hades (the abode of the dead), (Heb. 2:14). When Christ died, he snatched away the keys (Rev. 1:18), unlocked the gates of Hades and led the Old Testament saints, who were held captive, with him to heaven (Eph. 4:8). Christ now has the keys to the gates of Hades and those gates will never prevail against a Christian, that is, they will never close behind them and hold them for they are absent from the body and immediately present with the Lord (II Cor. 5; Matt. 16:18).

The Underworld

There are four different places in the underworld. Tartarus is where the unruly angels are held (2 Pet. 2:4). Hades, since Christ's resurrection contains the spirits of unsaved humanity. The Lake of Fire is empty as yet but will be the prison house of the unrighteous (Rev. 20:15). The Bottomless Pit will be the abode of Satan and his demons during the 1000 years that Christ is reigning on earth (Rev. 20:3).

The demons who controlled the man of Gadara (Luke 8:26) feared that Christ would throw them into "the deep" or bottomless pit, where they would be tormented "before the time" (Matt. 8:29).

How we can thank God that there is a lid on that terrible place at the present time and that the key is in heaven. Little can we realize the misery that the occupants of that dark place will inflict upon humankind during the fifth trumpet. There they are at this present moment, clamoring at the lock, impatiently waiting for the time when they can sally forth upon mankind.

The Summer Bible School for Individual Churches for Pupils of All Ages

(Recently requests have come to me as the editor of this section of the Evangelist for information concerning the Summer Bible School Association and its work. In years gone by, materials have appeared on this page concerning this movement. But the coming of the summer vacation period brings with it a demand for new information. Consequently I have written A. L. Lathem, the founder of the movement, for publicity materials. What appears below represents the sum and substance of the All-Bible school that uses no handcraft.) (M. A. S.)

"The Summer Bible School" is the ALL BIBLE SCHOOL. It uses NO HAND-CRAFT.

It is systematic and definite as to the course of study and the experience of 20 years has proven it to be practical (a steady growth in our own school of from an enrollment of 193, average attendance 163 in 1912, to an enrollment of about 600 and an average attendance of about 570 in 1931. During this time also a number of other similar schools have developed in the neighborhood.

The Leader in the Course is "The Way of Life" used throughout as a reference book and for special texts and as a text book in the 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th Grades and reviewed in the 12th.

It sets forth predictions concerning the Coming Savior in the Old Testament and shows him revealed in the New. Focuses the entire Scriptures upon Christ.

Also it contains such Scriptures as make plain the Way of Salvation and practical Spiritual Christian Living.

The Course of Study is threefold:

First—Memory Work, which gathers about "The Way of Life."

Second—Historical.

Third—Geography of Bible Lands.

Suitable books have been published when publication was necessary and other standard books have been placed in the course.

The aim is always to secure first-class teachers—not only Christians, but persons qualified by experience in Public School Teaching or otherwise.

As intimated in the above reference to "The Way of Life" the course of study is "Christo-Centric."

Further information will be cheerfully given upon request.

All supplies may be secured from this Office—420-434 E. Broad Street, Chester, Pennsylvania, or the Presbyterian Book Room, Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Non-Sectarian and Inter-Denominational

The Summer Bible School movement has the following doctrinal statement:

First—That the scriptures throughout are the inspired word of God.

Second—That mankind are universally sinful and can be saved only through Christ.

Third—That the Lord Jesus Christ is the only begotten Son of God.

Fourth—That the Lord Jesus was born of a virgin.

Fifth—That he was crucified for our sins and thus made a complete atonement for all who in heart accept him as their Savior.

Sixth—That he rose from the dead on the third day with the same body with which he descended into the tomb.

Seventh—That he—the Lord Jesus—is coming again.

Now International

"THE SUMMER BIBLE SCHOOL" is now well established. It is known of throughout almost the entire world and is in operation in almost all states of the United States, also in different parts of Canada, South America, Korea, Manchuria and Japan. It has commended itself and is its own best advertiser.

This type of school is adapted to all churches and to pupils of all ages.

Effects of "The Summer Bible School"

The development of a people who know the Bible.

An elevated spiritual tone.

An increased loyalty to the Master.

A larger attendance upon public worship.

A greater liberality in giving—God's plan.

An increased interest in missions.

More Godly and consistent living.

The development of real Christian character.

Coming directly from God's Word. His revelation is accepted as the supreme authority for governing life and is far more generally obeyed.

Reflex Influences

Neither is this influence limited to the individual church. The whole community is benefited.

How To Organize a Bible School

The question is often asked, "How to organize a Bible School?"

We are also asked "How to conduct such a school and develop interest in the same?"

In a brief way it is the purpose here to answer these questions.

1. The first thing of all is to realize the need of REAL BIBLE SCHOOLS.

A strong, developed Christian life is impossible without a real knowledge of the Bible and the more comprehensive that knowledge the better. Such knowledge can only be acquired by a definite, systematic study of "The Book." A practical curriculum of this sort has been worked out with great care and is appended to this article.

Moreover, it has been proved through seven-teen years of use.

2. Much prayer.

3. The pastor, for it must be upon HIS heart if it is to be done with much success, should preach a series of sermons treating of the prevalent ignorance of the Scriptures—the absolute need of knowing them and the necessity of definite schools for that purpose. He should also show that adults as well as children should be in the schools—that the methods should be the same as those employed in Public Schools—that the teachers should be paid and should be experienced Public School Teachers—and whatever else occurs to him as bearing on the subject.

The sermons should be preached three or four months before the opening of the school.

4. The pastor should make a personal canvass of the households (members of the church where are children)—explain his plans, ask for cooperation and endeavor to secure a promise of attendance.

If he is willing to make a sacrifice for the benefit of the school himself he may quote John 12:25-26 and ask his parishioners to do likewise. If he does so he will find himself well repaid. No man ever sacrificed a part of his summer vacation in this way who did not get a rich reward here and now.

People can be persuaded to do more for their children than for any other cause, and the children being guided well will lead their parents—the Summer Bible School field is the most fruitful of all.

5. Frequent announcements from the pulpit should be made.

6. Articles should be published in the town or city papers in regard to it.

Always it should be kept before the people that it is a REAL BIBLE SCHOOL that is contemplated—not a hand craft, industrial, or play school.

REAL THINGS attract worthwhile people—in fact almost all persons have some quality in them that makes a real thing attractive. Children are particularly susceptible to the appeal of a REAL THING.

7. A competent set of canvassers should visit every house in the neighborhood armed with the Word of God (II Tim. 3:16-17; John 5:39) and prayer and proper literature—each having his or her own district—being given about one week in which to do the work, and understanding that at a banquet prepared for them they are to present a complete report—say one week before the opening of school.

The lists which the canvassers bring in should be compiled and a letter sent immediately to every home where pupils were promised, saying that their presence should be awaited with pleasure at the opening of the school and that provision had been made for them.

8. Have a sufficient supply of all kinds of books on hand at the opening of school.

Where Hold the School

If possible in the church. If there are not rooms enough the main auditorium may be divided with curtains.

In towns where the authorities are willing the public school buildings may be used. This has been done in a number of cases with great success.

The youth who seeks God will find a rich reward.

When you practice helpfulness do not omit the "full." Much helpfulness is spoiled because it only goes half way.

JESUS ANSWERS HIS ADVERSARIES

MONDAYJesus Pictures His Adversaries. Mark 12:1-12

Men may quibble about the proper interpretation of this parable or of any other parable, if they will; but the enemies of Jesus did not hesitate for a moment in reaching the conclusion that they were the wicked husbandmen Jesus alluded to in this parable of the vineyard.

Wicked men of today, who oppose the work of the church as it represents its head, Jesus Christ, may think they are so far removed from the day in which this parable was spoken that it can not be applied to them; but in this we think they are greatly mistaken. And the sad part of it is many of Christ's adversaries do not seem to realize in the slightest degree that they are adversaries at all.

TUESDAYAnswering Pharisees and Herodians. Mark 12:13-17

Many a man has set a trap for another and has found himself caught in his own snares. Many men of the present day, "wise in their own conceits," would catch Jesus in his teaching, but their efforts only betray their own inconsistencies and reveal the baseness of their purposes.

Sometimes, in our zeal to give Jesus his rightful place in the life of mankind, we fail to recognize man's duties to man, or the fact that there are obligations one must fulfill to one's neighbor. There are duties that may be called worldly that even a sincere follower of Christ must recognize.

WEDNESDAYAnswering Sadducees. Mark 12:18-27

I do not believe we are justified in taking the position that all men who came to Jesus with hard questions were simply endeavoring to entrap him in his words, for some of these questions were really hard, and they had caused confusion and division among the people, else there would not have been such groups as those termed Sadducees, etc.

But what was confusing to them was perfectly clear to Jesus who knew all things, and when we begin to speculate about what shall be or shall not be in the heavenly kingdom it will be well to take the plain teaching of the Word of God on the subject, and pass up the speculation.

The scribe who came to Jesus with the question about the first or great commandment seems personally to have been sincere. He was well versed in both civil and theological law, and he had observed that Jesus had answered former questions wisely. However this question might succeed in arousing yet greater antagonism against Jesus; for, as Jesus said on another occasion, the people had for a long time been receiving the teaching of the commandments of men as the commandments of God; and strange as it may seem, that practice has not yet gone out of date.

But we may be sure of one thing, and that is he who loves God supremely, and whose life is motivated by this love, as manifested in his relations to his fellow men need have no worry about his own future.

FRIDAYRebuking Hypocrisy. Mark 12:35-44

Jesus sometimes used strong language in uncovering the weaknesses or sins of men. Ordinarily we would not consider it exactly nice to call any certain one a hypocrite to his face, but at times Jesus did it. At other times he simply made clear to his hearers the things that went into one's life that made it hypocritical. Many of the extreme religionists of Jesus' day were extremely hypocritical. And it is quite frequently demonstrated that some of the most extreme religionists of today show considerable evidence that they are not altogether sincere, regardless of their loud profession and self asserted loyalty.

SATURDAYSecurity in God. Psalm 37:1-11

During the recent bank holiday a banker said to the writer, "I have come to the conclusion that nothing in this world is stable. Neither houses, lands, bonds nor gold. In fact nothing material has real value. Only the spiritual can be depended upon to abide." Surely the present generation never before passed through a time when this truth has been more forcefully demonstrated. The Psalmist had learned this lesson, and he earnestly pleaded with his people that they should not trust in earthly things, but that they should "Commit thy way unto Jehovah; trust also in him and he will bring it to pass."

SUNDAYFearless Trust in God. Psalm 27:1-6

We are told that in these days of financial stress and material discomfort, the hearts of many supposedly strong men are "quaking with fear." No doubt there were times when David had occasion to give way to the emotion of fear; but he said "Jehovah is my light and salvation; Whom shall I fear?" Again he said, "Though a host should encamp against me, My heart shall not fear; Though war should rise against me, Even then will I be confident." So instead of crying out with alarm when beset by dangers all around David says. "I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto Jehovah." Why can not we have this same fearless trust in God in these days of distress?

Society Visitation Hints

For Union Officers

By Frances Loweree, Manhattan Congregational Church, New York

Personal visitation of the individual Christian Endeavor society by an officer, whether district or union, is one of the greatest factors in promoting enthusiasm for the work, and is beneficial because:

1. The society realizes that it is part of a large, far-reaching organization, and not alone in its efforts. The visiting officer would do well to stress this fact in a tactful manner.
2. Many times the officers of the society in question are a wee bit discouraged, and a friendly visit by an officer of the district or union will be just what they need to cheer them on in their duties. Point out to them, too, new ways to do old duties, to avoid monotony.
3. The district and the union are benefited because they are enabled to keep informed on changes in the society. They know when new officers are elected, and are thus able to keep their files of active members up to date.

To the visiting officer I would say, "Don't be in too much of a hurry." Plan to visit only one society in an evening, and stay to the church service, too. Make it a point to meet the minister, because we want the pastors to know that the union stands ready to help them and to back the efforts of each society.—C. E. World.

For Better Meetings

The Young People's Society of the First Congregational Church in Tucson, Arizona, has a "Bill of Rights" which includes:

"In order to permit the greatest freedom and highest realization of our purposes we adopt the following:

'Section 1. During the devotional period of music and praying the members shall refrain from all whispering and other disturbances.

"Section 2. The members shall give the chairman and other authorized speakers their undivided attention.

"Section 3. In order to obtain permission to speak during discussion the members shall stand and receive the recognition of the chairman."

There are some groups in which there is such an appetite for discussion that formal recognition seems necessary in order to maintain any semblance of order. There are other groups in which the timid are kept from participation because they are required to stand up when they speak. We visited one group recently which has enlivened and strengthened its program by the simple process of making the session entirely informal. The group sits in a semi-circle; all lights are turned out except a bridge-lamp set near the central table; neither leaders nor other participants rise when they speak. This makes the meeting a conference rather than a testimony-meeting or a recitation.—C. E. World.

Tent Work in Argentina

During the six months of good weather for tent work we have labored this year in Rosario, Firmat, Almafuerite, Rio Tercero and Hernando. Brethren Juan Pisani and Federico Juan Sotola have been with the tent all the time, while before Christmas Brother Juan Iztueta had charge and since that time the writer. Brethren Sickel, Siccardi, Farre and Zeche have also helped.

The first four meetings have already been reported. They were all successful meetings, but the last one has been the greatest of all. Hernando is a town of nearly 9000 inhabitants and though it is the next town east of Tancacha it has never had more than colportage work, except several small meetings in private homes.

We came to the place with the tent without announcement and late in the afternoon, yet that night as soon as the tent was opened we had a crowd, and from that first night until the last, five weeks later, the crowds constantly increased until we had twice as many on the outside as could get into the tent. The town has had the reputation of being so priest-ridden that it would be impossible to do much. This would have been true for a lone worker in a hall, but the tent with a corps of workers is a dominating factor and transforms the sentiment of the majority in every town where we labor.

The Ford agency gave us permission to use a corner lot, but when the priests saw the great crowds going there while only a few attended their nine-day series of sermons in honor of Saint Joseph, they got some of the clients of the Ford agency to threaten to withdraw their patronage if we remained there. Rather than cause them loss we moved into a hall across the street and the crowd followed. Then the priests got others to interfere with the owner there and threaten to take away some boarders he had, country children attending school. Then we got a larger and better hall where we can defy the priests. Their conduct stirred up resentment in the town against them.

We do not like controversial campaigns, but it is hard to avoid them. The priests began by circulating bulletins filled with vile slanders against us. Then they put on a week of special sermons against us by their best orator. We changed the hour of our meetings so that we could first listen to Brother Farre and then all go and listen to the priest. The priest used such abusive language that many Catholics were disgusted and quit going to hear him. He proved to be ignorant of the Bible and of history and his discourses furnished themes for Brother Farre the night following.

The priest had only a few women to listen to him until our crowd, nearly four hundred strong, would come in. There were three policemen to guard the meetings in the church but we had none in ours and needed none for we had the best of attention throughout. We cautioned those who went to listen respectfully in spite of all insults.

The last Sunday of the campaign Brother Farre followed a brief introduction by Brother Reina in a meeting in the plaza in which some fifteen hundred people gathered to hear him. His scholarly and forceful presentation of the defense of the Gospel won the town. The mayor and many leading people attended regularly and many have voluntarily offered to help to support the work. Several hundred publicly professed faith in Christ, but that does not mean that they are ready for baptism. They will need a lot of teaching and some of course will not go on.

Brethren Reina and Pisani will care for the work as a branch of the Tancacha church for the present, although the town merits a pastor who can live there and follow up the campaign with faithful pastoral work. What a pity that we must be so short of workers.

The priests in Hernando recently had a fight among themselves as to who should confess certain of the nuns there, their anti-Protestant orator had to leave Perdices some months ago on account of ruining a girl there.

This is the class of religious guides the Roman Catholic church has in this country, yet the people are taught from childhood up that they are the only true and authorized representatives of Christ and many old women are loyal to them in spite of their immorality and tyranny. But the men in general and the educated class in particular no longer have any faith in the priests and many would be quite willing to help to lynch them or drive them out of the country.

The town of Hernando has been completely aroused and the sympathy of the leading people as well as the poor people is now with the Gospel Mission and we can have a strong work from the start. It would be a terrible mistake to abandon a town in this condition and allow the wolves to enter and scatter the flock.

The weather is not yet very cold but we consider it more important to care for this new work than to have another campaign where we cannot follow it up to establish a mission. Pray for these hundreds of new believers and other hundreds that have begun to attend and are on the way to conversion. Pray that we may have men and means to enter all the towns in our district that are waiting for similar campaigns.

C. F. YODER.
 Almafuerite, Argentina.

FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA

The meetings for which we have been planning and praying for weeks have been held. The attendance from the very beginning was good. New faces appeared in the audience every evening. After more than a week, we counted as many as twenty-five who had not attended a previous service.

The membership of the church has always cooperated with the writer, and during these meetings they lived up to our expectations. The class in "Evangelism", which had been taught by Brother J. G. Dodds for a number of weeks, was busy during the meetings, without any urging on our part. We had a prospect list of more than a hundred and most of these were visited by members of the class or by Brother Cook and myself.

In our visits with those who had become indifferent and those who had become hardened, Brother Cook was well girded for the battle, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. His messages at the church were principally Bible Lectures and were interestingly illustrated with a large chart. We thank the Portis church for loaning Brother Cook to us and we thank him for his help.

In addition to reconsecrations, fifteen came forward during the meetings; thirteen were baptized, including one who came prior to the meetings, one was received by letter, and two are awaiting baptism. Of those baptized, three were adults, and the others children, most of whom had been studying for several weeks in the pastor's class in "The Meaning of Church Membership." There are others in the class who did not come forward, and we hope to see several more of these confess the Lord at an early date.

We believe much good will result from these meetings. And our prayer is that the Lord will richly bless the good seed that was sown.

When the forces of righteousness unite in a campaign, the Devil must work a little harder. So we find he was busy sowing the tares, but we pray that his efforts may be brought to naught. H. H. ROWSEY.

FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA

Our labors together in a Pre-Easter service with the Brethren at Falls City Nebraska, is one that will long be remembered by the writer. We began Monday evening, April the third and the crowds were good from the start. This speaks well for the preparation that was made by the pastor. Brother Rowsey is their faithful leader, and their work looking forward for the meeting showed careful and prayerful preparation. His good wife, Sister Rowsey, had charge of the music and she did her part well. We all rejoice over the number that were led to Christ at this time, and we thank God for the privilege of laboring together with him in the harvest. To the writer there is another cause for rejoicing greatly manifested in these meetings and that was the interest by the church for the Word. It was indeed a pleasure as we called upon so many of these dear people, to discuss so freely the WORD of God, and to help find the answer to so many questions in which they were interested.

I was greatly impressed with Falls City and its opportunities for the Brethren church. And our church is splendidly located. Surely the Brethren Church has a Gospel the old world needs today—A WHOLE GOSPEL. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto me." Not the world, but HIM, Christ. "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." Surely if we lift up the Word, we lift him up.

The first week I was entertained in the home of Brother and Sister Dan Sargent. The second week at the home of Brother and Sister H. J. Prichard. We surely do appreciate the kind hospitality shown in these homes. We took our dinners out, but went to the parsonage for lunch every evening after service. All these kind acts helped us to forget how tired we were at the close of the day's work. However, we will look upon these two short weeks of service with the pastor and his people at Falls City as a bright spot in our life's work.

J. S. COOK.

NORTH LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

Brethren Evangelist,
Dear Brethren:

Friday morning, March 10, 1933 man's power was demonstrated here in the Bay by a naval parade. In the evening, God exhibited his power, lifting the earth thirty inches, jarring it northward eight feet, and southward five and one-half feet. Millions of dollars' worth of brick and other walls were wrecked during these eleven seconds and some of the frame and stucco bungalows were skidded from one inch to four feet northward off of their foundations. Nearly one hundred lives were lost and many more injured; but OUR people came through safely.

Our church was one of the few that will need no repairs, and we praise God for it. True, the dishes were broken, but God is ever pleased with more fasting and less feasting.

The city, fearing panics, ordered that there be no gatherings in public buildings until the tremors were less severe and less frequent. So we met in a tent the following few Sundays, but used the building as usual thereafter.

How true it is that the mighty works of God do not have the tendency to cause men to turn to him like the power of the gospel has, and that what the world needs is Jesus, if it was Jesus himself who said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." As in the days of old, the acts of God tended to harden the heart of the unbeliever, while the Christian sees in them greater reason to say with the Apostle Paul, "I know whom I have believed, and persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."

Our pastor, Rev. John Lienhard, plans to hold a three-weeks' evangelistic meeting at Fillmore soon. After his return and after the next quarterly meeting, we will send in our regular report.

Yours in his service,

MRS. SAMUEL KIRBY,
Church Correspondent.

TRAVEL FLASHES

New Lebanon

Again I have had the privilege of leading in a revival. Due to the California earthquake and the cancellation of his engagement with them by Dr. Bauman, this Brethren church asked me to "pinch hit." "It is an ill wind that blows nobody good." I had a very fine and wonderful time during the two weeks of the meeting. I had a splendid home and good care with Sister A. J. Bowser. We had wonderful dinners out each day. I got to go hunting for mushrooms with the Postmaster. I had a day off to make a Commencement Address. The pastor with the evangelist and Brother Barnard spent a day in Columbus with the Dry Forces of the state.

One of the largest delegations that ever came to one of my meetings came (150 strong) from Dayton, 12 miles away. High School Night packed the house to the limits. Big audiences were the order of the day. Enthusiastic acceptance of the whole Gospel message was encouraging. "The Old-Fashioned Dunker Service" brought 16 ministers and a fine meeting with the sermon on "Some Strange Commandments."

The Pastor, Lester V. King, with his good wife and five daughters made every endeavor or to achieve a good meeting by keeping the evangelist busy, well-fed and in good humor. The pastor had this field most thoroughly canvassed and mapped. He spared no effort to make the harvest all that could be hoped.

I am sorry that it was not all that it should have been. Belated spring had held back the farmers so that every possible moment had to be utilized to get on the ground and get plants and seeds started. Hence there was no continuity of attendance from many prospects of the farmer type. Two weeks are not time enough for a conquest that had both to draw people and make them Christian. I'd like another chance with longer time.

I was surprised to find this the second largest church in Ohio. In the midst of Brethren of three groups, it is one of the finest fields in the brotherhood for conquest. Brother King has been here longer than most pastors last and the splendid crowds proved that he has not lost his hold on the community. He is a lovable, likeable man with talents of congeniality and fraternity not possessed by all preachers. I was glad again to have the opportunity to work with Brothers Hoover and Kinzie, with both of whom I had before been associated in the ministry of evangelism.

It was my first visit to New Lebanon church, but I hope it shall not be my last. If I preached some sinners out of the world and some church-sinners out of their sins or into a deeper consecration and surrender, then I shall believe that it was vastly worth while.

Columbus, Ohio

A part of two days were spent in this capital city of our state with the dry forces endeavoring to forestall the advance of the evils of intemperance and do our bit to save the 18th Amendment in Ohio. Brethren everywhere will need to know that this thing has to be fought or the generation that is wiser and not more moral will gain a long-time advantage. Ohio Brethren should help in the circulation of petitions to revoke the Mosier Bill and begin to work now to defeat it at the fall election because it is one of the most unfair bills ever thought out by an enemy of temperance.

Sunday School Quarterlies

The new copy is now in the hands of the printers. We shall try to be sure to have enough of this issue. If our Brethren will keep up the increase set by the last orders, we shall soon be shouting. Brethren have only one Publishing House to which to give fidelity.

LANARK, ILLINOIS

We are rejoicing for the victories that are being won for Christ and for his Church in various places throughout the brotherhood. The past few weeks have brought showers of blessings to us here at Lanark. A week of union meetings were held during the week preceding Palm Sunday. The churches of the town and one rural church cooperated in the meeting. This meeting was a season of fellowship and inspiration because of the splendid attendance each night. There were no confessions during these meetings. They were held in the First Brethren church. Merrill Davis, a student in Moody Institute, was with us to direct the singing. He did his work well and endeared himself to all. During and following these meetings the pastor with others of our workers set themselves to personal evangelism and as an immediate result of our efforts folks began to come to confess Christ. On April 9th six came. April 16th eighteen others, and again on the 23rd, three more responded to the invitation. Of this group six are heads of families. Two came by relation from the Church of the Brethren and two were life-work decisions. Eighteen have been baptized and the others will soon receive the rite.

On Easter evening our choir under the direction of Vada, our daughter, presented a very deeply spiritual Cantata entitled, "The Resurrection Hope." It was heard by a large appreciative audience. It seems that all departments of the church are moving along with a growing interest. I am led to mention especially our young people's work. This society, though only one and one-half years old, has come to be one of our strong departments. It is an exclusive group having only those of high school age. Their meetings are wonderfully interesting and are continually attracting the young people of the community. They are a willing group, ready to help out when called upon.

The pastor is just completing a "Bible Teachers' Training Course" using as a basis for our study, "The Great Doctrines of the Bible", by Evans. This has been a wonderful course in every way. I can recommend it to any contemplating such a course. It gives our young people just the kind of a foundation that they are needing. Yes, and need so much in these days. The church has kindly extended a call to the present pastor for the fifth year of service. Our work here has been pleasant and best of God thus far and we shall endeavor to keep ourselves in the center of his will for us in the future. We have our problems here the same as everywhere. The task has not been at all an easy one, but our God has brought us through thus far, has given us a harvest of souls occasionally, and has kept us a thoroughly united people. This alone is victory, for which we thank him.

I should not fail to say that a goodly number of our people are reading the Brethren Evangelist and it is our testimony that our editor is giving us a great church paper for which we are appreciative. Yes, and what we are saying of the Evangelist we are also saying of all our publications. We read them all with interest.

There is much sickness among our folks at present. Last week we laid to rest our dear Sister Livengood, wife of Elder Z. T. Livengood, who will be remembered by many of our readers, especially the older ones because of her labors with Brother Livengood through so many years in the ministry.

Let us all endeavor to be faithful in the task that he has assigned us until he shall appear. Greetings to all our Brethren in Christ.

Yours, "Under the Precious Blood,"
C. C. GRISSO.

WATERLOO, IOWA

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Every department of our work at Waterloo is doing splendid work. A marked interest has been manifest all winter in Bible study. The mid-week service of prayer and Bible study, as well as the preaching services, have brought a very fine attendance. The Church school is growing. Two Christian Endeavor societies are wide awake and challenging our young people and children.

Two Sisterhood groups are taking care of the girls and young women, as well as is the W. M. S. ministering to the women and using them as a real service for Christ. The pastor is mightily pleased with the response from each department.

Pre-Easter Services

conducted by the pastor and choirs of the church were very helpful. Seventeen were added to the church, 15 by baptism, one by letter, one by relation. The Easter Sunday in Iowa was a most beautiful day, with our people worshipping in well planned services for the day. The evening was given over to the Senior and Junior choirs who presented the, "Holy City" (Gaul).

Holy Communion Services will have been conducted before this letter is read. We are planning for the largest communion in five years.

Pray, brethren, for us, that our witnessing in this trying time for many people may be effective and very earnest. Even though many may have been severely tested, remember it is a rich opportunity to serve and witness for our Lord and Master, Christ Jesus.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

On January 2nd, 1933 we held our annual all-day business meeting, with dinner and fellowship hour at noon, then in the afternoon the business session with the election of officers.

Following is the report of our pastor, H. D. Fry: During last quarter he preached seventeen sermons, Dr. Lamb occupied pulpit twice, and Brethren Reed, Barber, and Baker, (American Sunday School Union) each twice, One Sunday evening, was given to our Christmas cantata, and three evenings we united with the Presbyterians. Evening and morning church audiences have been splendid, if anything on the increase. Considering sickness, this is commendable and encouraging.

Prayer meeting, despite sickness, cold weather, and scant money for gasoline has averaged about twenty-two (22). Have baptized and received six—three out of our Sunday school on confession of faith, and the other three on re consecration and a desire for our fellowship. Y. P. Bible Class has disbanded for a season that opportunity for musical instruction be given. During last quarter, secured services of ablest and most spiritual choir director in Valley, perhaps in State, his expenses being cared for by the choir. The ministry of music in worship services of our church has greatly increased to the profit of the church. We intend to make another effort to enlist, and entuse in a deeper life, some of our young people not staying for church. We desire that this church's every activity will be fruitful among young and old, and that especially the many young people in our community at present unfounded and unfound, may be attracted to our Lord and his service. We hope that we may be in much prayer, and fervent spirit that God will send us, if it pleases him, a real revival in the coming months, with his own chosen servant to lead us in a campaign for souls. The work is hard, because men's hearts are hard; but as we each unitedly take up the work let us have greater hope and joy. I especially commend the congregation for their love, loyalty, and generous giving to their church, and to all the Lord's work; and more than I can express, do I appreciate your kindness to the pastor's home during this long trial and affliction. Let us have faith during the new year.

I know not what shall befall me, as I tread the coming year. The past is still in God's keeping, the future his mercy will clear, and what looks dark in the distance will brighten as I draw near.

Oh, restful, blissful ignorance! 'Tis blessed not to know, it keeps me still in those mighty arms, that will not let me go. My soul is hushed to peaceful rest, on the bosom that loves me so.

Sister Fry has been ill for the past year, nervous prostration; let us remember Brother and Sister Fry in prayers. I know they will appreciate it. She is slowly regaining her health. We hope she will soon be able to be with us again. We miss her, in all the activities of the church.

One week of Post-Easter services was followed by communion, April 24. The pastor conducted the services.

Lord's Day services for past quarter have had better audiences than for many years. This, in spite of the fact that many loyal members cannot afford gasoline to come, is encouraging.

Easter Sunday, in Bible school decision services, four young women accepted Christ, making now eight awaiting baptism. One young lady previously baptized united with the church.

"The Holy City", an oratorio, was presented by the choir Easter evening, to a huge audience. It will, by request, be repeated April 30.

Foreign offering taken Easter Sunday amounted to $300.00. This amount will at least be doubled, in the next month.

Brother Fry preaches the Baccalaureate sermon, May 28. He is District Counsellor of Christian Endeavor and preaches, beginning May 1, a series of evangelistic sermons for the Presbyterian church, in a nearby community. Our young people will help in this meeting and in later ones as a Gospel team. May God bless our young people in his service, and give them souls for their hire.

We get good reports from all our Christian Endeavor societies and all auxiliaries of the church. Brother Fry has recently started the young people's Bible Study again. He is a good Bible student and is true to the Word.

We are having good attendance at our Sunday school.

We reelected our efficient Sunday school Superintendent, Halley Mackey; we think he is doing a good work with his helpers and teachers, and an enthusiastic song leader, Brother Patch. They vary the opening and closing exercises which make it very interesting and helpful in a spiritual way. His hopes are to increase our Bible school attendance, and to make our Bible school more constructive and interesting and inspiring.

We have Special Bible Fund, White Gift offering, College Fund, a special offering for needy fund, and for Washington's Children's Home.

MRS E. A. ROSE,
R. F. D. 2, Sunnyside, Washington.

A WORD FROM DUTCHTOWN

Near Warsaw, Indiana

Dear Brother Baer: Perhaps the brotherhood thinks we are off the map but will write you concerning the great revival of interest we are experiencing. We are located in the lake district of Kosciusko County, about seven miles from any large town and our country church had the same experience of many other country churches. We managed to have Sunday school, but the interest was not great. The Lord heard the prayers of the faithful and Rev. Riddle, then pastor at Warsaw, held us a two weeks revival. That was in April of 1932. Our

MOTHER'S SMILES AND MINE

By H. A. Gossard

*There are days I choose to cherish
And adore in work or play;
These days I greet at sunrise with a smile;
But a day that cannot perish
Long as heaven and earth shall stay,
Is that day in which I smiled on her awhile.*

*In the home, . . . though she was busy
With her heart, and hands, and feet,
She was never quite too busy for a smile;
Though I think she oft grew dizzy
In the cares she had to meet,—
As she toiled for me, . . . yet loved me all the while.*

*On those golden days of childhood
I reflect now as a man—
(I pity them who cannot do the same)
While my soul goes to the wildwood
Where my mother led her clan,
'Midst the birds and flowers, to play some pretty game.*

*While those days are gone forever,
They in mem'ry still remain—
In daily visions, and in nightly dreams—
I see her whom naught can sever;
And with her smiles, through ease or pain,
She bids me come, Come, on! through clear or turbid streams.*

*She's become my lure to glory;—
I'll obey her as before,
When she directed me through God's commands.*

*When we meet, I'll tell the story
Of her smiles across the shore,
As I kiss her, and caress her angel hands.

average attendance previous to the revival was around 30, but the entire community was solicited and the revival was largely attended. The Lord rewarded our effort with 13 additions to the church and more than that, there was a general reconsecration of indifferent members. Immediately after we held a business meeting. Officers were elected, deacons and deaconesses were ordained and a pastor was hired. The cloud had lifted and begun to move and we began to grow. The Lord especially blessed us in our pastor, Rev. Wm. E. Overholser, a member of the Church of the Brethren. Rev. Overholser, a very close friend of our beloved Ex-Moderator, Irwin Duker, lives about four miles from our church and while he has been offered many good pastorates in his own church, he declined to accept until his daughter could complete her High school course at Warsaw. He preached one sermon during the revival and the Brethren were so impressed by his ability they took action to have him serve regularly. He agreed to help us until his daughter completed her work. He is a powerful leader, deeply spiritual and is especially blessed in ability to get people to work. Most every one has taken some part since he has been with us. His family is gifted in music and singing, a great aid to our special programs. He is serving full time and a good number are always in attendance.

The first of March with our average Sunday school attendance of 55 we set our goal at 100 before or by Easter. A contest between the Adults, Young married people and young people began and lasted for eight weeks, ending last Sunday, April 30. Here are some of the interesting results. Every home was canvassed that was not attending services anywhere. We took in a radius of about three miles, and nearly all responded at least one Sunday of the eight. A transportation system was organized for those having no way to come (a good practice and we aim to continue). The adults increased their attendance from 16 to an average of 33 for the 8 weeks. At least 60 different people were in the class at least once. The young married people, who won, increased from 8 to 20 for a gain of 150%; the adults increased 105%. 35 different people attended this class. The young people increased from 16 to 38 for 140%. More than 60 young people attended. On April 2 for the first time in the history of our Sunday school more than 100 were present. There were 108. On April 9, we had 176, which included 30 visitors. On the closing Sunday we had 164 from our own community. We averaged 122 for the eight weeks. More than 200 different people attended, so it is possible for us to reach 200 if we continue to try. We have a great future in our young people. We have no Christian Endeavor but they respond quickly to special programs. Our Easter Cantata was composed of 30 voices. Our church was filled and some on the outside, for this program.

Heretofore with our limited numbers and finances we were barely able to meet our own expense but this year with the greater increase of interest we were able to support the Benevolent fund and raised by means of a sacrifice offering $10 for foreign missions. We solicit your prayers that we may be able to hold much of the gain we have made, and while the Lord's work is more than a mere contest for numbers, we feel it has done much good and no ill feelings arose as sometimes occurs and the whole staff of teachers and leaders did much to strengthen the spiritual status of the church.

Many of the older Brethren will be interested to hear from Elder Thomas Plew. Brother Plew and his wife are still able to attend our services occasionally, and while their years of service are telling on them, they are always a great inspiration to us. Many of us have received our baptism at his hands, and he seems to us much as the Apostle Paul did to Timothy.

The Sunday School Superintendent and Church Moderator, Louis Engle, was called into the ministry on February 19 by a doing for us." The week before Easter was devoted to pre-Easter services and Easter Sunday itself was begun in a rather different manner than in former years. At 5:30 A. M., about 75 people (from Louisville and Canton) gathered in the Canton church auditorium for a sunrise meeting. Plans had been made to have this outside, where we could really "see" the sun rise, but the Lord saw fit to permit a downpour of rain at that time and so we simply rejoiced in the resurrection memories of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, inside the building. Olive Whitted opened the program with a beautiful cornet solo, after which there were several talks given, the main message being brought by Rev. Whitted from Louisville. It was a season of spiritual feasting such as is seldom experienced and we feel it was so very worth while that no doubt it will be repeated next year, if the Lord tarries. On Easter Sunday there were four confessions, six baptized, and six confirmed, and the day was fittingly closed by observing Holy Communion, at which time 165 brethren participated. The total number of confessions during the regular services of the church for the first four months of this year is forty-three. Of these 21 have been received into church membership, and most of the others will also be received in the near future. We were happy to have one young man present his life for missionary service on Easter Sunday. The missionary spirit is certainly on the increase here, and we enjoyed the visit of Brother Yett very much. That the entire church seems to be missionary-minded was evidenced by the amount of the Foreign Missionary Offering, which was over $650.00.

The Sunday school attendance averaged 305 for the first four months and is steadily increasing, the attendance being 378 last Sunday. The S. M. M. girls celebrated S. M. M. Fellowship week, during which time a fellowship program and luncheon was held for the girls of the church and Sunday school. Fifty-nine girls came out to this meeting and as a result, a new Junior S. M. M. has been started with 30 members, and the Senior society received several new members. The Senior girls also took charge of a mid-week prayer service, at which time we were privileged to have Miss Lucille Guiley, one of our own S. M. M. girls (who has been accepted for missionary service in India) give a very fine talk based on the S. M. M. slogan, "Do God's Will."

The two weekly Bible classes are being finely attended, as well as the Men's Fellowship meetings which are held monthly. A prayer group meets after the Thursday afternoon Bible class each week; and the evening prayer meetings are being conducted by various members, with a very greatly increased attendance.

As a church we are very happy in the knowledge of James 1:17. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, WITH WHOM IS NO VARIABLENESS, NEITHER SHADOW OF TURNING," a characteristic which certainly is found in none else these days, and so we keep looking up for that great Day when we shall enjoy a reunion, which will far surpass the blessed times we enjoy at our State and National Conferences (happy as those times are)—the time of 1st Thess. 4:13-18.

unanimous vote of the church. His name has been presented to the District Examining Board for further action.

We extend greetings to our former pastors and friends and again ask your prayers that we might continue to grow and be a bright spot for Brethrenism out here among the lakes and resorts where the temptations are great and worldliness has in the past predominated.

THE REPEAL RESOLUTION

By Edward B. Dunford, Attorney, Anti-Saloon League of America

Citizens of the United States will vote on a question of transcendent importance when they take part in the election of delegates to the Conventions which will act on the proposal to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment.

This question involves the moral issue of whether permission shall be granted to any unit of Government to legalize the traffic in intoxicating beverages. It also involves the important question of where the Legislative authorities shall reside as between the National and State Governments.

The Eighteenth Amendment provides one uniform National policy of Prohibition and contemplates the united effort of State and National Governments for its enforcement.

The Seventy-second Congress on February 20, 1933, passed S. J. Res. 211, proposing to repeal the above amendment and to substitute therefor the following, which, if ratified, would be the Twenty-first Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The proposal reads:

"Sec. 1. The Eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"Sec. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"Sec. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by Conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

This proposal marks the first time in our history that there has been a formal submission by Congress of a proposal to expressly repeal a provision of the Constitution of the United States. It is also the first time that a proposed Amendment to the Federal Constitution has been submitted by Congress to Conventions to be held in the states.

By this action final responsibility has been definitely placed by Congress upon the voters in the several states. No national issue involving as many potentialities for good or evil in this and in coming generations has ever been placed before the voters of the nation. Therefore, every voter should carefully study the legal, social, and economic results of retaining or repealing the Eighteenth Amendment.

MOTHER

By Ruth Waymire

*She wanted to go to far-off lands
To see the world, to roam.
But many years have come and gone
In the village she calls home.*

*She longed to sing to the multitude,
To make them laugh or cry.
But the song she sang so softly
Was a baby's lullaby.*

*She yearned to speak with wisdom rare
The words her Lord revealed.
But the fellowship she had with him
Remained within her, sealed.*

*But still her Spirit wanders far—
She sings an old time hymn.
With simple words and loving heart,
She points the way to him.*

*Lord, bless the ministry of these
Our Mothers, who with hands
All toil-worn, forgot themselves
To obey Love's commands.

FIRST CALL TO THE

Fiftieth Anniversary Conference of the Ohio Brethren Churches

This is the first call to our next Ohio Conference of our Brethren Churches.

The date is June 20-23, 1933.

The place is Dayton, Ohio.

The theme is, "Our Stewardship in God's Commitments."

It will resound with historical and reminiscent studies and addresses.

Principal men of our churches have been asked to "do their bit."

The purpose of this "call" is to start putting it on the map as a great Conference. In a beautiful city, in a beautiful church with plenty of room for every emergency, with the lowest cost of travel and the lowest prices for "keeps" after one is there, this should be an outstanding conference. Music will be in charge of Donald Bame and Robert Cline. With several choirs in the Miami Valley and with the great organ of the Dayton church and with an organist with a National reputation, the music will surely be right. This is the call of the Moderator,

CHARLES A. BAME.

THE STRANGLEHOLD OF THE BREWERS

The April 14 issue of The Civic Bulletin, of Albany, New York, is devoted to reprinting the most startling facts in Ernest Gordon's great book, "When the Brewers Had the Stranglehold."

In 1916 the U. S. Government seized a car load of secret documents, letters, reports, etc. of the U. S. Brewers' Association, and many of these amazing letters of the brewers to one another—their trickery, bribery, corruption and bulldozing methods, were all laid bare when the Government printed these letters in a public document, which letters Mr. Gordon gives in his book, many of which are reprinted in this issue of The Civic Bulletin.

This Bulletin shows how the brewers raised their corruption funds and how they spent them; how they bought the press and labor leaders, corrupted politics and sought to break down the U. S. Constitution.

A copy of this 16 page Civic Bulletin, containing over 20,000 words, giving so many startling facts concerning the brewers, taken from official sources, can be had for only ten cents, by addressing its editor, Rev. O. R. Miller, Albany, New York.

HOLY Mother Suttée

In these days, when so many, especially in the United States of America, fall easy prey to the idea that seems to be abroad that "India is all right. Gandhi will lift her up," I want to tell them about a suttée which took place here recently in the presence of hundreds of spectators. The woman was heavily drugged and seated on the pyre. She took her dead husband's head in her lap (whereat, say the Hindus, the corpse smiled) and was burned to death, while the Hindu priests drove back the men and pushed the women forward to see this "holy woman," while they exhorted them to "go and do likewise," and to follow the example of a holy Hindu wife. The District Commissioner was at the time a Hindu, and reports are rife that he was appealed to by the police by wire, but that he replied, "Let it alone!" Later, his wife (the highest lady in the district) was one of the thousands who came to this shrine to offer worship.

The ashes of the poor woman were hardly cold before her three little girls were brought to the place, and their little tear-stained faces were rubbed with the ashes of "holy Mother Suttée." Their future may better be left unmentioned.

MOMENTS That Make History

One hundred and six years ago the French Consul in Algiers came to protest to Hussein Dey against the plunder by the Dey's ships of cargoes belonging to French merchants. The Dey became excited and, with the fly whisk which he had been wielding, he lightly flicked M. Deval's face. This constituted a technical insult against the dignity of France which brought on a three years' war, changed the face of North Africa, brought the Muslim-Mediterranean Empire under European control and gave impetus to the French penetration of West Africa and the vast Sudan.

Thirty-three years ago a forged document, purporting to come from the foreign diplomatic body in Peking, enraged the Empress Dowager of China, who exclaimed, "Let us exterminate these foreigners before we eat our morning meal!" Thus a lie which produced a moment's wrath brought on the Boxer movement, a slaughter of Chinese and foreigners, the invasion of Peking by the Powers, the disappearance of the oldest throne in the world, and the break-up of the Chinese Empire.

Sixty odd years ago a Chinese cart, a springless vehicle like a dog-kennel on wheels, curtained and dust-covered, trundled in through one of the massive gateways of Peking. In it sat a solitary Englishman, unwilling to attract the eyes of the curious and hostile Chinese. Although he had come to help and heal the Chinese people he was unheralded and unwelcomed. But, as a result of the work which this medical missionary began, the throne of China was touched and Western medicine received Imperial recognition to the ultimate benefit of uncounted millions.

THE New Jerusalem

The New Jerusalem of today has strangely changed to one who knew it under the Turks. From suks,* shops and streets comes the confused murmur of Arabic, but not in the former strength and volume, for Hebrew is fast becoming a living language, and is the most widely used medium of speech and print in the city. Indeed, a recent census for Palestine records that out of a total Jewish population of 175,006, 165,632 Jews speak Hebrew.

The city grows amazingly. The population has increased since 1914 by 60,000. On the way to Bethlehem now stretch the new suburbs, and looking across the city and beyond, the eye rests upon the imposing buildings of the Hebrew University, Government House, the Italian Hospital, the Strauss Health Centre, the Scottish Memorial Church (dedicated to King Robert the Bruce), the King David Hotel, the Rockefeller Museum, the Abyssinian Building, with its heraldic sign of the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, and the lofty towers and domes of the new Young Men's Christian Association, which will be opened at Easter by Lord Alenby.

An event of greater importance than this will be the opening this year of the new port of Haifa—probably by the Prince of Wales. Here will end the oil pipe line which starts twelve hundred miles away at Kirkuk in Iraq. Four million cases of oranges, valued at about £1,825,000, will be shipped this season, together with an ever-increasing volume of merchandise from this busy port. Improved communications increase tourist traffic, and between Jerusalem and Jaffa there is now a motor-bus service.

The stabilization of the currency is fostering trade everywhere in Palestine. The days are happily over when the Turkish majidi and bishlik were paid by the authorities at a quarter less of their value than they accepted them, and when their purchasing power in the shops varied every twenty-four hours. English, Arabic and Hebrew are inscribed on the coins, reminding one of the three languages which were current here in the time of our Lord—Latin, Greek and Hebrew. An interesting item on the coinage and one which appeals to Jews, is the inclusion under the word Palestine, of the two letters Aleph and Yod, letters which commence respectively the two Hebrew words which signify "Land of Israel"—a term fraught with prophetic significance. Fear on the part of the Arabs of the final supremacy of the Jews is without doubt the root cause of the fierce antagonism which exists between the two races.

UNIFORM DRY PIN

The national temperance organizations have adopted a uniform pin for all friends of the Eighteenth Amendment to wear and display in the present temperance emergency. This is an attractive pin, with a gold alloy rim, carrying the slogan "Retain 18th Amendment."

The pin has been designed and produced by the new National Prohibition Emergency Committee which was brought into being at the dry temperance conference held in Washington, March 7 and 8 to make plans for the fight to retain the Amendment. The National W. C. T. U., the Anti-Saloon League and the other 34 national temperance organizations are cooperating in the functioning of this united committee. Col. John E. Edgerton, former president of the National Association of Manufacturers, is the temporary chairman of the Committee and the Committee headquarters are at Washington.

The uniform pin is intended to accomplish two things—display the strength of the dry forces by identifying millions of dry sympathizers and benefit the finances of the dry organizations. The pins will be sold to individuals for 25 cents each and the profits will go into the treasury of the various dry organizations. Quantities can be obtained from the offices of any of the national dry organizations or from the National Prohibition Emergency Committee, 642 Investment Bldg., Washington, D. C.

WANTED—A WORKER

God never goes to the lazy or the idle when he needs men for his service. When God wants a worker, he calls a worker. When he has work to be done, he goes to those who are already at work. When God wants a great servant, he calls a busy man. Scripture and history attest this truth.

Moses was busy with his flocks at Horeb. Gideon was busy threshing wheat by the wine-press.

Saul was busy searching for his father's lost beasts.

David was busy caring for his father's sheep.

Elisha was busy plowing with twelve yoke of oxen.

Nehemiah was busy bearing the king's cup.

Amos was busy following the flock. Peter and Andrew were busy casting a net into the sea.

James and John were busy mending their nets.

Matthew was busy collecting customs.

Saul was busy persecuting the friends of Jesus.

William Carey was busy mending and making shoes.—Unknown.

Why Support the Church College

It is our conviction that there has not been for a long time so much danger as now of church colleges being pushed into the background and finally into the discard by state schools and richly endowed non-denominational institutions. Church schools have been putting up a hard fight in the face of handicaps for sometime, but in these days of acute financial distress the denominational school stands to suffer more severely from lack of support than other institutions of higher education, unless there is a revival of appreciation and loyalty. And if the state succeeds in driving the church out of this field of education, it will be a hard blow to the church.

The progress of the church in the long run largely depends on the church college. A certain denomination had its early home and chief strength in the state of North Carolina, but it built no college in that state until many years afterward. However a college was built by the members of another section and far corner of that brotherhood where the church was weak. This college grew to strength and prominence, and as a result the church in that section was gradually led out of weakness into strength. It kept its youth, intensified their denominational convictions and strengthened their fighting spirit. Whereas the original home of this church lost much of its leadership and numerical strength because it neglected higher education. This is the judgment of leaders of that particular church. Such testimony could be multiplied from experienced educators and church leaders. The church cannot afford to allow her institution of higher education to be taken from her. She must keep it to increase her strength to accomplish the work which the Lord has committed to her.

But there is danger that this shall be done. The church pioneered in the field of elementary education and taught the state how to do the work. When the state realized the great value of such education to her own perpetuity and welfare, she took unto herself entirely the work of educating her children by means of free, tax-supported schools and the church was dispossessed of the opportunity. Then the church launched out upon education of a higher level in order to continue her educative influence upon her youth, and academies were established in large numbers under the control of the church. The state soon learned the importance of this advance in education and began to build up free secondary schools which rapidly took away the patronage of the private academies, and church controlled education was again a thing of the past. Again the church pioneered in a further step in the field of education and began to build colleges so as to control the completion of education. This is perhaps the most critical and strategic step of all—most critical, because it takes the youth away from the home and the local church for the first time, and strategic, because it finds youth at the period in life when decisions and preparation must be made for life work. Again the state quickly seeing the value of higher education, began to build colleges also and to compete with the church in this new field. Will the church eventually be driven out of this field of education by the state's greater resources, as she has out of elementary and secondary education? Some think so, but we do not, if the church has the courage and the conviction and the consecration to maintain higher education that is distinctively Christian. The trend of modern education in the state schools and the richly endowed, independent universities is presenting to the church schools their greatest opportunity.

In these great universities there are many irreligious, godless and atheistic professors wielding a powerful influence on the youth against faith in God and the Bible. And if the actually atheistic teachers are not yet numerous, as Dr. A. T. Robertson thinks, yet there are many who are godless and Christless. They sneer at faith and denounce it as a violation of intelligence. They teach that the Bible is in irreconcilable conflict with science. They give to life and experience a mechanistic interpretation that has no need of religion and no place for God. Thus they are undermining, not only religion, but civilization itself. Something must be done about it. The righteous indignation of the Christian conscience demands it. This is the church's opportunity.

Three things are being attempted.

First, there is a crying out against such teachers and teaching on the part of some noble hearted educators and church leaders, who think it possible to arouse sentiment to support a move to free our state universities of such poisonous instruction. But the obstacles in the way of such a course seem insurmountable. The basic difficulty is the prevalent belief that state education is and must be essentially godless, that the policy of the separation of the church and state requires the separation of religion and education.

Second, practically every denomination has built, or is building, churches on the fringes of the state university campuses, hoping to entice some of the students, particularly of their own church affiliation, to come under their protecting care and influence, and may thereby be given some antidote to the poison injected into their hearts and lives. We say godspeed to all such churches who are holding out a true Gospel light. But such efforts at best are so feeble and ineffective, when considered with the bigness and difficulty of the task to be done, that they mean almost nothing. The Christian Statesman says: "They will be as futile to stem the tide of atheism flowing from the godless state schools as would a man with a broom to sweep back the ocean's onrushing tide."

Third, there is the building of church colleges, which by the very nature of their institution and control, can be kept free from the poison of godless teachers, if the church so wills it. Here, we repeat again, is the church's opportunity, an opportunity which our own church has seized upon. In the building and maintenance of such a school as Ashland, the church is doing its part toward counteracting the faith-destroying teachings of the state schools and providing a place where our own young people may be given the advantages of higher education distinctively Christian in character and environment, and also advantages of instruction and training in Christian leadership. It is to such a school as we have established at Ashland that Brethren students are invited to come, where the place of God in his universe is acknowledged, the revelation of God in Christ is accepted, and the Christian teachings and standards are held before the minds of youth. In such a school there is little danger that a student who comes to college a Christian shall have his faith destroyed because of the college. And it is to the financial support of such a school that National Conference has requested the churches to make their contributions on Educational Day.

One thing that is troubling the church is the fact that more members are concerned about what they can get and store up for their future welfare, than what they can do for the glory of Christ and the salvation of their fellowmen. The selfish spirit, no matter how piously it expresses itself, never adds to the power and vitality of the church.

Most of the so-called modern revolt of youth is merely a revolt of modern youth. In their casting off of the traditions and standards of their elders and striking out for independence of thought and action, they are likely neither worse nor better than have been the sinning, rebellious youth of every age. The drama of human life, or tragedy as it often is, persists in being repeated. And adults seem not much improved over youth. They go on in their independence and waywardness, leaving Christ and his ideals and spirit out of their program and life.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Is religion for you a cloak or an armor? It makes a vast difference which it is.

If people used less cold cream and more of the milk of human kindness, there wouldn't be so many wrinkles to worry about.

Fortunate is the man whose habits are for him and not against him.

The heaviest cross the Christian has to bear is the one made by the crossing of his will with the will of God.

The idea of a suffering Christ is almost as hard for us to accept in all sincerity as it was for the Jews of old, because it involves so much of self-denial on the part of the disciple.

Brother C. A. Stewart, vice moderator of Ohio Conference, has a word this week about the coming meeting in Dayton. He is right, the pastor alone isn't enough to represent a church at a district conference. Send a delegation. The date—June 20 to 23.

Dr. R. R. Teeter, our business manager, writes about Evangelist subscriptions and other things in his department. We are especially grateful for the expressions of appreciation that have been coming to the Evangelist office and wish to thank all who have cooperated to make the church paper the great means of blessing that under God it has become.

A successful evangelistic campaign was conducted in the Dayton, Ohio, Brethren church preceding Easter with Dr. W. S. Bell as the preacher. Brother R. D. Barnard is the much loved pastor of this church, and on a recent trip to Ashland reported about sixty persons to have taken a stand for Christ during the campaign. But we shall await his written report for further details of the victory.

Brother W. A. Ogden, pastor of the church at Fillmore, California, writes in a personal communication accompanying his subscription renewal to The Brethren Evangelist: "We are in the closing week of a three weeks' revival campaign with Brother John Lienhard of North Long Beach as our evangelist. We are having the largest attendance of any meeting we have held during our more than six years at Fillmore. There have been nine or ten decisions to date. The spirit of conviction is present night after night and we believe there will be many more to find Christ as the meetings continue."

Brother W. H. Schaffer, pastor at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, informs us through his church calendar that his good people completely surprised him two weeks in advance of his birthday with the presentation of a new suit and a pair of shoes. One of the members remarked that the reason they did not give him the money was that they feared he might give it to missions rather than buy the clothes and shoes, to which the pastor replied they were probably right. Well, anyway, it shows the care that people will take of the pastor they love. Such experiences help wonderfully to bind pastor and people together.

Dr. W. H. Beachler, who, in addition to his duties as pastor, is busy these days, as we have learned, with commencement addresses and lectures, for which he is so splendidly endowed, took time out to give four days of preaching service to Burlington, Indiana, closing with a communion service on the fourth day following a sermon. Three were added to Christ by confession of faith, and the field is said to have shown promise of still further reaping if time had permitted a continuation of the meetings. This church has been without preaching services, but has been keeping active by means of the Sunday school.

A card from Brother W. R. Deeter of Carleton, Nebraska, informs us that he is "getting back to normalcy" after his experience in the hospital and he is "thankful for seeming complete recovery." He preached a Mother's Day sermon on the morning of the second Sunday in May and a baccalaureate sermon in the evening. He is to have baptismal services on the evening of May 25th, which means souls are being saved. He recently assisted in a Church of the Brethren communion service five miles out of Carleton. This is another evidence of the growing fellowship between the two Dunker groups that gives hope for the future.

In her "Fifty Years Ago, and Now," our correspondent from Milford, Indiana, reminds us that the Brethren congregation of that city is fifty years old and recalls some of the leaders who were prominent in its beginning. Among them was Dr. G. W. Rench, who is still active in the service of the church at New Paris, Indiana. A church cannot have lived that long without having accomplished much for their Lord, more perhaps than is evident or can be estimated by human wisdom, but God does not forget or overlook any service. It is encouraging to know that the lamp of this church's influence has not been allowed to go out, even though in recent years it may not have burned as brightly as formerly. The Sunday school, the W. M. S. and the young people have been holding on and performing their service with perseverance, and now the whole church has taken on new life under the capable leadership of Brother W. I. Duker, who took on this pastorate the first of the year along with his public school work in Goshen. A number have been added to the church and the people taken on new courage.

Dr. K. M. Monroe, secretary of the Seminary faculty, gives us another installment of news regarding that institution, reporting the recent graduation exercises, concerning which we made mention in these columns recently. The Seminary faculty members continue teaching in the college till the close of college, then in the Summer School for the summer, except Prof. McClain, who is doing work for the Foreign Board and will engage in Bible Conference work. Prof. Monroe's remark about plans for next year's work suggests to us the advisability of churches searching out their talented and consecrated young men and women and sending them to Ashland to be prepared for Christian work. This is a thing some churches have seemingly felt no responsibility for doing. Every congregation ought to be ambitious to supply at least one minister in a generation for the ministry. It is better for the church as a whole for a dozen churches to send in one new student each for the ministry than for one church to send in a dozen. Every church ought to be making its contribution to the future leadership of the brotherhood. It will mean much to the churches thus cooperating.

The First church of Philadelphia continues to press forward under the capable leadership of Brother A. V. Kimmell, who upon a recent visit to Ashland, the occasion of the Foreign Board meeting, told at the Ashland church prayer meeting something of the very important place that prayer is having in the program of their church. Our correspondent refers to it in her report, saying the first Wednesday in each month is set aside as a day of prayer. The entire day is given over to prayer, sessions being held forenoon, afternoon and evening, when hours are spent in prayer, and by means of which the church is brought close to God, and empowered, and the spirit of fellowship and mutual understanding is caused to abound and problems are solved and difficulties settled in a marvelous way. This reminds us of the prayer meetings held in the Jerusalem church as reported in Acts. A week of Bible lectures brought to a close on April 9, saw seventeen confessions of faith. At their impressive Easter service $2,000 was laid on the altar for foreign missions. Later the amount was raised to $2,200, which no doubt represented much real sacrifice.

PRAYER REQUESTS FOR THIS WEEK—

Pray for an evangelistic campaign to be held at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, beginning May 24th, with Brother R. Paul Miller as evangelist—W. H. Schaffer, pastor.

Pray that the church may rise to meet the crisis in the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana.

Pray for an offering from every member of every church on Educational Day, the first Sunday in June.

An OFFERING from EVERY CHURCH on EDUCATIONAL DAY

An Appeal From The Deans

The Church and the College

Professor E. G. Mason, Dean of the College

Dean Mason

It is an inexorable law of nature that each generation must acquire the permanent and enduring heritages of the past by a process of learning known as education. In addition, each generation must be able to interpret these heritages in terms of the society in which it lives. It is obvious then that the broader and more complete this education is, the greater will be the capacity of each generation to meet and solve the problems with which it is faced. In this generation, a broad education has come to mean (1) the acquisition and understanding of the contributions of past generations to the knowledge-content of the present; (2) the preservation of a fine balance of the intellectual or cultural, spiritual or moral, and physical or bodily development of the individual; (3) the attainment of certain skills peculiar to the capacities of each individual; and (4) the ability to apply this knowledge and these skills to the business of living. The accumulation of knowledge-content has become so great that now the period set aside by custom for its acquisition is too short to master it, so society has come to demand a higher education for its leaders. In other words, higher education or a college education can not be left out of modern society.

The work of the Church is largely concerned with that phase of education that deals with the spiritual or moral development of each generation. Moreover, the Church has fostered general education, and is the mother of the college, the institution of higher learning in which the rich heritages of the past have been preserved, and the wonderful opportunities of the future are opened. The Church and its part in the present program of higher education can not be over-emphasized, but its very life is dependent upon the retention and the increase of its contribution to the three-fold nature of modern higher education. The Church and the principles for which it stands must be perpetuated from generation to generation, if it is to survive and function in the lives of men. In other words, the Church dare not be left out of higher education.

Right here is the critical problem of the Brethren Church with respect to Ashland College. Stated very simply, the Brethren Church can not long survive unless it contributes its full share to the program of that higher education which modern society demands of its leaders. The Brethren Church can contribute its spiritual and moral teachings only through a college over which it has control. Ashland College is distinctly Brethren and is now under Brethren control, but can it remain so long if it is not supported strongly by the Brethren Church? The answer is NO.

Brethren support is the key to the situation, and this support constitutes a challenge to the Brethren Church. Support can be given in three different ways, all or any of which will greatly increase the influence of the Church in modern higher education. First, Ashland College needs more students from Brethren homes throughout the brotherhood. It may cost the parents of a Brethren boy or girl a little less to patronize a college closer home, but it weakens the influence of the Brethren Church upon higher education. Second, Ashland College needs the moral support and confidence of Brethren people and Brethren ministers, not their destructive criticism and willingness to listen to idle rumors. Third, Ashland College needs the financial support of the Brethren Church, not only in order to retain recognition in the great accrediting agencies for colleges, but also in order to preserve the control of the college by Brethren interests.

Faithful to the End

By Dr. J. Allen Miller, Dean of Ashland Seminary

St. Paul has a wonderful word about continuing faithful to one's trust to the end. He says, "Moreover, it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful" (1 Cor. 4:2). Now a steward is one to whom another's affairs are entrusted not alone for safe-keeping but for profitable administration. Our Lord also upon one occasion said that only those who endure to the end shall be saved. Here is indicated the same principle of faithfulness to a charge. Now what practical and personal applications of this great teaching can we make as to ourselves?

First of all, we are members of the Church and as such we have certain obligations. These we voluntarily and sincerely assumed when we became members of the Church. These are also obligations which can neither be shifted nor left unmet, if we would retain our sacred relationship to our Lord. Of the Church founded by our Lord he himself says that it can never be prevailed against. He says that he is the builder of it. And he adds there are no powers that can prevail against his Church. I am devoutly hoping that every one who reads these few lines has this firm conviction that will never permit him to be shaken in his faith. He who belongs to the Church which Christ is building can never be lost. This is the certainty of personal salvation through faith in Christ.

Dr. Miller

There is however another aspect and that is that to every member of the Church a task has been properly assigned. This individual work for the most part takes the form of supporting the particular work of the Church with which the individual stands identified. As for example, I am addressing for the most part, doubtless, readers who are members of the Brethren Church.

Upon an organization such as the Brethren Church certain specific tasks are definitely imposed. They are those necessary to the most successful carrying out of the work committed to us as a people. Among these are to be mentioned the local activities of a working congregation or assembly of believers. Of these tasks I will only say that unless they are kept going failure comes to such a group as a Church. There are also the wider activities of the larger whole that must be kept alive and going if the work committed to us as a people is to live and progress. I refer here to the work of Missions whether at Home or in Foreign Lands, to the Publication interests which are so important a factor in the propagation of the Gospel, to the care of at least some of our older people—especially the aged ministers and the Brethren Home.

But in addition to the special interests and activities named there remains another interest which is both basic and essential to the full and complete carrying forward of a Church program. I refer now to the EDUCATION OF OUR YOUTH. Certain provisions have been made by the State, that is true. But the Church has always insisted that in part at least there belongs to her the right and therefore there rests upon her the duty of directing the education of her children. What is so universally accepted as a principle, namely, that a group of people, like the BRETHREN CHURCH, has a right to offer to, and direct the intellectual and spiritual education of her youth, I will not here argue.

I have written all the foregoing to say a few very simple but inescapable things. They are: If the Brethren Church constitutes a part of the Church of the Living God and if as members thereof we sincerely desire to carry on the work committed to us THEN WE MUST CONTINUE THE FAITHFUL SUPPORT OF ALL OUR INSTITUTIONS. We can not hope to have a BRETHREN CHURCH unless we pay the price of her maintenance in every possible manner. This is the basis of my plea for the support of ASHLAND COLLEGE on Educational Day.

Do You Still Want a Brethren College?

By Dr. R. R. Haun, Dean of Men and Professor of Physics

This is not a rhetorical question. It is a question put in all seriousness. I am sure that your answer would be that you must have a Brethren Seminary to train Brethren ministers. However a seminary could be associated with any college or university. Our seminary professors say they would rather have it associated with one of our large churches so that their students could see how the work of the church should be carried out in a practical situation. But I raise the question, do you want a Brethren College, where the whole Bible and Brethrenism are taught along with, and as a part of, secular education to young men and women who are preparing for every walk of life and profession?

I am sure, too, that the Brethren church has been answering that question in the affirmative for many years in the past when people have given so unstintingly to endowment and when they held the college before their congregations for constant prayer, discussion and financial assistance. But I raise the question, "Do you still want a Brethren College?" If the answer to that is "yes", then several things must be done by Brethren people.

In the first place, to have a Brethren college we must have Brethren students. This can not be a Brethren college if the Brethren students constitute only a small percentage of the student body. The other students here must be taken into consideration, too, and their religion is not Brethren. They can not be refused admission for there would not be enough Brethren students here for a college. We wish that there were. And when our Brethren fathers and mothers, pastors and leaders, send their children here instead of to other denominational and faith-destroying universities then we can have a Brethren college.

In the second place the church will have to continue to support the college with financial assistance. This will continue as long as it remains the custom among colleges for the student to pay only part of the cost of his education and the rest is to be raised by some other means. A gift of five dollars every year in the Educational Day offering means just as much to the college as $100 given to the endowment fund. Five dollars a year from every member of our church would be equivalent to a couple million dollars in permanent endowment funds. And who could not give five dollars a year to the maintaining of a worthy cause if they really wanted to and felt the need.

And then, too, Brethren people must continually keep the Brethren college before them in their thoughts and prayers. I do not see how a church can claim to be a booster for the college and never give that college any consideration in its program. How can a Brethren college be maintained under criticisms instead of prayers? We make mistakes here for we are not perfect. But I challenge you to find a college where Brethrenism is upheld any better or, for that matter, where the general tenets of Christianity are lived and taught in a finer way. I have personally been enrolled in five different institutions of higher learning and have had occasion to learn something of the life and teachings in a good many more and I testify with conviction and sincerity that I have never found another institution that even approaches Ashland in its Christianity and in its moral life and teaching. I am proud of Ashland College and think you should be too. Brethren, be boosters for your college and remember us in your prayers, not in your criticisms.

Education and the Christian College

By Doris C. Stout, Dean of Women and Associate in Elementary Education

From every corner we hear the statement, "Higher education is undermining our spiritual world." The questions before us as a brotherhood supporting a Christian College are, first, What is education? Secondly, What is our purpose as a Christian College? and third, Are we defeating our own purpose?

The old conception of education was to indoctrinate—to imitate. The individual was given a "philosophy of life" from the church and was taught to reverence God and the King. They educated for acceptance, not improvement, and as a result education became remote from life.

Education is life, it is action. Knowledge is no longer a passive, immovable solid, rather it has become liquified. Knowledge is actively moving in all the currents of society today. Education today is endeavoring to develop social powers and insights realizing that through what we do in and with the world enables us to read its meanings and measure its values. With such an approach we find development of special intellectual interests and the integration of personality. Education gives one the ability to review facts impartially and objectively and in so doing build up the capacity to analyze and synthesize. Too, education gives meaning for self-expression. Bode says, "The democratic ideal in education is not merely to fit one for a job, but to insure him the opportunity to have life and have it more abundantly."

Miss Stout

If education is all of this what should our purpose as a Christian College be? Ideals and appreciations are the normal outcomes of intellectual reconstruction. A philosophy of life is necessary. Through ideals and appreciations a philosophy can be built up if thinking and reflection take place. Our daily problems can not all be settled by science, neither can tradition solve them. They have to be answered according to our standards of living—our philosophy of life, which should be constantly growing and reconstructing itself. Education needs to touch all of life. There should be both intellectual and emotional participation and growth. Hence to teach all of life should be our aim.

Since education in the true sense of the word is life, it cannot undermine the spiritual, for the spiritual is not a thing set apart and off by itself, it should be an integrated part of our personality. Each individual in order to live a rich, full life must express himself—himself, mark you, and not another. Plato once said, "The slave is one who in his actions does not express his own ideas, but those of some other man." We need to be guided in our thinking in order that we may gain the ability to think clearly for ourselves. Character is more than subject matter, self realization should be our goal.

It is my sincere conviction that the Denominational College has a very definite part to play in the education of our youth. If the individual is to develop harmoniously his physical, intellectual, aesthetic and moral qualities he must find self reaction and self expression in a life of social activity. Any institution which truly educates must do this for the individual. What College would be better equipped to meet all the phases of life that make for an integrated personality than is the Christian College with its wholesome and Christian environment?

The Nation's Pet Snakes--A Parable

By Jas. E. Clarke

Once upon a time, many years ago, and following custom which had long prevailed in other lands, some men came into certain American communities with snakes for sale as pets. That statement should not surprise, as it may, for there are still parts of the world where men peddle snakes.

They were beautiful little snakes offered by these tradesmen. They were perfectly harmless, the people were assured, and many bought them as pets.

In the course of time the people of these communities where pet snakes abounded began to realize that they were enduring much suffering of many kinds—inefficiency, disease, poverty, crime and insanity. Naturally, they began to investigate the causes of this individual and social suffering. For many years the cause could not be found and conditions become worse.

One day a discovery was made. It was that all of the pet snakes, beautiful though they were, and gentle as they seemed to be, were poisonous. Without the knowledge of their owners and practically without pain, they would insert their fangs beneath the skin and deposit poison.

When this discovery had been made there followed a careful investigation of the effects of such poison. It was found that boys and girls became dull, fell behind in their classes; dropped out of school because they had absorbed some of this poison. Men and women who had been efficient workers lost their skill, became unable to see well and often lost their jobs entirely and were reduced to poverty.

As the investigation proceeded it came to pass that in some cases persons affected by this poison were denied all chance to work in their chosen occupation. For instance, railroad managers discovered that men who were victims of the snake poison could not read orders correctly, see signals clearly or act quickly enough in emergencies. As a consequence, such men were the direct cause of many wrecks, costly in money and human life. So the railroads made a rule never to keep in their employ any such victims of the snake poison.

Having made such discoveries, the intelligent people in many communities undertook to teach all other citizens, especially the boys and girls, concerning the effects of the poison, and to persuade them to get rid of the snakes. Unfortunately, the effect of the poison was such that many of the victims could not be persuaded at all, or, if persuaded, were unable to carry out what they knew to be best for themselves and their families. The conclusion became generally accepted that dependence must be placed mainly upon the education of the young people concerning the effects of such poison.

But a serious obstacle was encountered. Naturally enough, the spread of knowledge concerning the effects of the poison caused such a loss in business to the dealers in snakes that they took counter measures. They also put on a program of "education," in the effort to convince people—especially the young people—that the snakes were not poisonous. Freely they gave the attractive little reptiles to boys and girls in the effort to form the pet snake habit.

At length the people who sincerely sought the welfare of their children and their communities became desperate. They determined to forbid the sale of snakes and several communities passed laws that these creatures could not be sold. But the snake lover could still go to a nearby town and buy and the laws passed were not very effective.

People put their heads together and determined that they would make laws which would effect whole counties. They did so, but still snakes could be secured from adjacent counties and still there were plenty of people, indifferent to the public welfare, who were more than ready to deal in snakes for the profit to be had.

It was the welfare of children for whom the more intelligent people were most concerned and in one state a state law was passed, forbidding the sale of any of the pet snakes within four miles of a school house. This law was a great help, but it did not apply to large cities and it was still possible to secure snakes and cultivate the habit of keeping them as pets. Next the people decided to forbid the sale of the creatures anywhere within state boundaries. But, of course, some were still sold on the sly and some could be secured from other states, and it was found that, in spite of all of these efforts, many of the older people were hopelessly poisoned and many of the boys and girls were seriously infected.

Finally the situation became so bad that the people of the nation rose up and said, "We will no longer allow any traffic in snakes in the whole United States."

That is why and how we got national prohibition. Shall we legalize the snakes again?—The Presbyterian Advocate.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

SIGNIFICANT SIGNS

No one need be called an alarmist today who sounds a note of warning regarding the condition of human affairs, and the conflict to which the nations seem to be inevitably drifting. A recent address of Mr. Lloyd George at Sheffield has aroused widespread interest and comment in Britain. It was a clarion call to the churches and was the subject of a leading article in The British Weekly, entitled "The Churches and the Menace of War". Here are some of the utterances of the former prime minister of Great Britain: "There is an economic war between all nations, the worst of the world has ever seen, and actual war is preparing. They are all marching to the battlefield with the dove of peace embroidered on their banners. . . . Now you can hear, if you listen, the rumbling of the cannon underground, getting louder and louder. That is the world we have to deal with. What is going to happen?"

This is one of the menacing signs of the times in which we live. Over the world there hangs the shadow of impending war, and when the conflagration will break out no man knows. Another sign to many people less menacing perhaps but none the less significant was the recent visit of the Prime Minister of England and Sir John Simon to Rome to interview Mussolini. At the time this editorial is being written there is a strong feeling of "rapprochement" between Great Britain and Italy, and many there are who see in this the possibility of the speedy revival of the ten kingdoms of the Roman Empire. Elsewhere we have referred to the persecution of the Jews that has arisen in Germany. Out of this many people expect that there will be a large exodus to Palestine, and a great flow of wealth into the Holy Land, thus further fulfilling God's purposes there.

Let us not be deceived into thinking that such striking events as these and others that are happening today are the result of blind chance and without significance in the prophetic plans of God. They are undoubtedly preparing the stage of human affairs for the culminating events of this age's history, even though they may not be the subject of specific prophecies. Surely God is speaking very plainly to the world in the happenings of today, and coming events are casting their shadows before.—The Evangelical Christian.

VILE PUBLICATIONS

The action of the Legislature in Ontario in taking steps in the form of a bill to prohibit the publication of obscene, seditious or blasphemous articles will have the support of every right thinking man or woman within the Province. For too long have the purveyors of muck and filth been allowed to broadcast their uncleanness through the medium of the printed page. It has been a mystery to multitudes of people in Ontario how certain of these obscene sheets were allowed to continue their calumny and veiled blackmail. That they have a certain measure of support is certain or else they could not continue publication. So long as there are people to be found who will delve into the muckheaps of the world and dredge the sewers of human filth and obscenity for so called news there will be readers for the pabulum they serve up. Toronto is cursed with several of these sheets whose only appeal is to diseased minds and debased imaginations. There is no excuse in the world for their existence at any time, and in times like these when it is generally found that sedition and filth go hand in hand the Government should take stern measures in dealing with these scandal sheets. We know it is not by law and by legislation that the Kingdom of God is going to be established upon the earth, but the law can do a lot to make conditions here better for all. There is no reason why publications such as these complained of should be allowed to corrupt and debase young men and women, foment disturbances within the country and flaunt their vile propaganda in the face of decent Christian people—Evangelical Christian.

"IMPROVES WITH AGE"

"Improves with age!" We have seen it in connection with advertisements. In some cases the ads may not have meant much to the reader, for as a recommendation the words must get their significance from the character of the thing to which they are applied. But they should have a world of meaning when applied to a Christian; for they indicate a Christian ideal. A Christian should improve with age—becoming more intelligent concerning spiritual things, more thoughtful and considerate toward others, more kind and sympathetic and charitable and fruitful. His experience of God will become rich and satisfying—that is, if he has been the right sort of a disciple in the school of Christ. And his faith will become stronger, less susceptible to circumstances and the external things which may bear upon it. If, then, a Christian improves with age, why should he look toward advancing years with unpleasant foreboding? It takes the years to bring his character to maturity. And that is the thing that counts most.—Religious Telescope.

UNBELIEVABLE BILLIONS!

Many a citizen has thought a little, in the past few weeks, about the most expensive of all national luxuries.

In making out his income tax return he has been reminded that something more than two dollars out of every three which the government takes from him for federal expenditures are military dollars. . . .

Men who are not shocked by these figures of wasteful and ridiculous excess are deeply grieved when a church or a group of churches asks that military expenses be reduced!

If we lived in a rational and really practical world, the general outcry would be not against the forces that would reduce our military outlay, but against any man who hindered or delayed that reduction.

We live, of course, in a fantastically unreasoning world, where France wants to be armed against Germany, and Poland against Russia, and the United States against Japan, and Italy against France, and Japan against China or Russia—no nation seeming to consider that present militarism may be a greater menace than any possible enemy of the future.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

MODERNISM IN AUSTRALIA

The churches in Australia have not escaped the controversy with Modernism that is agitating our own and other continents, the source of which in that country seems to be the University of Sydney. This institution is under Presbyterian control, but in its theological school, known as St. Andrew's College, there are students from the Congregational and Baptist denominations as well. These students have been sitting under the instruction of Professor Angus, whose interpretation of the Bible and Christian doctrine has been increasingly alarming to evangelicals.

From Rev. David C. Hughes, a Methodist minister of Randwick, we learn that among other strange ideas of Professor Angus are these:

Jesus did not believe until the end that his death was necessary. Jesus believed in forgiveness by moral conditions, not by object outside of self. The disciples were not above committing forgery to establish their views. Philippians 2, from the religious point of view, was meaningless, for we could not conceive of such objective reality. Such a God as this was no God to us—the passage was mythology. Concerning the martyrdom doctrine of Jesus, Paul could not have had the ideas of Peter and John. They knew him as a martyr. Paul knew Jesus as spirit and made a mythical Christ connect with a historical Jesus. Gethsemane showed a young man who did not want to die, but was ready to die, if necessary. Paul's Christology was unhistorical and speculative. His mythology was based on a historical figure.

Before this reaches the eyes of our readers a meeting of the Sydney Presbytery will have been held to discuss the question of demanding the professor's resignation, but we should not be surprised if the motion did not carry. Here, for example, is a former Moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly saying that Professor Angus "is doing a magnificent work among the students at the University." Here is another Presbyterian minister who gives his opinion that the professor is "the greatest New Testament teacher Australia has ever had," and so it goes. The nearly twenty years of the professor's teaching in which he has turned out many classes of young preachers, has done its work, and this is the result of it. A correspondent writes us that the theological schools in all the colonies, Melbourne, Adelaide and Brisbane as well as Sydney, are more or less contaminated, but nothing is being done. And nothing will be done, we fear, till our Lord comes.—Moody Monthly.

unable to end their pains by death. Suppose that it was for eternity. But a far worse fate awaits the unbeliever in our Lord Jesus Christ.

Demons and Hell a Reality

Imagine if we can what it will mean for that kind neighbor, that beloved son or daughter, husband or wife to have to spend eternity with such creatures. How it should drive us to pray daily that they may be saved from so terrible a fate, for hell is real. The demons are real also and fearful beyond human imagination. Yet men will build the structure of their entire life just on the slippery edges of hell. Although demons belong to the unseen world, they are no less real and sometimes God pulls back the thin veil that separates us from them, and lets a man look through.

There is music in the air about us, but our ears cannot catch the notes until the radio has done its work. The air about us is full of angels but our eyes are not made to see them (Heb. 1:14). They are no less real and God has often sent an angel through the veil that separates between the visible and invisible world.

Unseen World at Death

Last winter, some five miles from where I now sit, a woman lay dying from the result of a sinful life. She had the doctor to promise to let her go without pain and the needle lay on the stand nearby. She had persuaded some friends to remain at her side until the end. During the night they were talking on common subjects as usual when a sudden expression of terror flashed upon the face of the dying woman. She threw her arm across her eyes as if to hide a horrible sight. Then, springing up in bed with a terrible scream, she fell back and was dead.

At death, what terrors open up before the eyes of the lost no mortal tongue can tell. Our Lord warned over and over again of the place "where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched" (Mark 9:44). What a joy awaits those who fall asleep in Jesus. As they close their eyes to this life and open them beyond the veil, there are the angels of God ready to conduct them to mansions in the skies (Luke 16:22).

The terrible scene of suffering brought on by the fifth trumpet, brings to end the first woe. But there are two more to follow (Vs. 12).

The Sixth Trumpet

"And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God, saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels that are bound in the great river Euphrates" (Vs. 13, 14).

The voice locates the sin. Abel's blood cried unto God from the ground (Gen. 4:10). On the day of atonement, the blood of the bullock was placed upon the horns of the golden altar in the earthly tabernacle (Lev. 16:18). Then, the horns cried to God for mercy for the sinner. Now they have been outraged and cry for vengeance. Probably people have been using religion as a cloak for their meanness.

Four Evil Angels

These four angels are evil. If they were not, they would not need to be bound nor would they destroy men when set free. We can thank God that these great magnates of power are not free in our time, for if they were not bound they would have rushed forth on their mission of destruction, long ago.

They have been chained in some remote age that is past. At the flood, some angels kept not their first estate but left their own habitation (Jude 6) and through the daughters of man, corrupted the human race (Gen. 6:1-5). These angels are still in chains and will remain so until the judgment day (2 Pet. 2:4). When these four angels were chained we do not know. They may have led man into rebellion at the tower of Babel for they are chained in that region. Or they may have been chained ages before Adam and Eve were formed.

Fallen Creatures

It is the very nature of a fallen creature to delight to destroy and to bring others down to its own level. Why does the boy delight to shoot the bird and why does the man delight to teach the boy to swear and take his first smoke? It is thus with these locusts or demoniacal creatures.

Let us note that they are not true earth locusts for they are commanded to hurt no grass nor tree, but only those who have not been numbered in the company of the sealed ones (Ch. 9:4). They are intelligent creatures; they have heads like a man and are able to distinguish the seal of God.

These fearful creatures are evil in disposition and are armed with power to torment. A half dozen mosquitoes make life almost unbearable for me but there is some comfort in being able to take vengeance and kill one. But there is no indication that these infernal locusts can be caught and killed. They dart where they will and live in darkness. They have shells something like turtles, only they are of iron; probably making it impossible to destroy them.

Suicide Impossible

They have stings like scorpions. A person stung with a scorpion will often roll on the ground for agony, gnash the teeth and foam at the mouth. For five long months these creatures are free to torment mankind. The length and breadth of this woe can only be known by those who experience it. Death itself is preferable, but strange to say, even suicide is impossible (Vs. 6).

When Satan tormented Job he was not allowed to kill him but here are men desiring to die and death flees from them. Why wouldn't a man die if he put the end of a shotgun into his mouth and pulled the trigger? It may even be that these infernal pests will have power to prevent such an act.

God's Merciful Provision

When God drove Adam and Eve out of the Garden of Eden and placed Cherubim to keep the way to the tree of life, he did a merciful act. They had sinned and death was at work in their bodies. Suppose they would have gotten to the tree of life in this terrible condition and have lived forever in a mortal body. Imagine if we can a man with a cancer, eating away at his body and yet he cannot die. God in his mercy has made it possible for this body to die and then when we get our new body, a body that will never get sick nor tired, we will again have right to the tree of life. Here we see the terrible plight of men, tormented and yet

How to Run a School

1. First of all there should be a complete understanding between the pastor and teachers on the one hand and the pupils on the other—in that the great purpose of the school is to make the pupils acquainted with their Savior—that Jesus loves them and that we must know him and his Word in order to please him.

2. That to attain this end discipline must be strict—just as in Public School.

3. That everything is done in LOVE and that LOVE is the principle of the School—John 3:16 the motto and point of departure.

4. The school each day should begin with an opening exercise of not less than twenty minutes. A hymn, a chapter (specially relating to the Lord Jesus) a prayer, a hymn, reciting of special verses, a full list of which is given on pages 111, 112 of "The Way of Life."

5. At the close of the opening exercises the classes in a perfectly orderly manner should file out to their own class rooms and take up their tasks the same as in Public School.

6. About the middle of the morning they should have a recess of fifteen minutes.

7. Whether having a daily closing exercise is profitable is a debatable question—much no doubt depends upon its character. But beyond all question there should be a great closing exercise at the finish of the term.

Each class should be assigned a limited time to show something of what they have accomplished.

The community will be astonished at what they see and hear.

The following slogans are repeated in concert at the opening exercises each day for the first two weeks at the Third church, Chester.

We will pray for our school each day.

We will not miss one day.

We will do our best.

We will boost our school.

All these things we will do for Jesus' sake.

These maxims said in concert arouse great interest and enthusiasm.

How true they are to these principles the history of the school shows—percentage of attendance the past year, 95.

Stars and Emblems

The work done to get a Star or Emblem varies with the grade.

In more advanced classes something more should be required for each award, and in the lower classes something less; until finally the Kindergarten; one verse perfectly recited should be sufficient for a gold star, one question in their Catechism should be sufficient for a yellow heart or a yellow star, etc.

Every spirited child will try to win all these. If a child only wins half the number it has done well—as they all represent practically perfect work.

Of course it is understood that each pupil has his or her own individual Star Report Card and that all cards are put on display in a conspicuous place in the room.

A large card is also posted in the Assembly Room with class pitted against class.

JESUS AND HIS FRIENDS

(Lesson for May 28)

Lesson Text: Mark 13:33 to 14:9. Golden Text: John 15:14

MONDAY

Jesus Warns His Friends. Mark 13:33-37

It is so easy to become somewhat careless or indifferent toward the consummation of an event that is long delayed. Jesus had held close communion with his disciples in regard to the events that should accompany the close of his earthly ministry, as well as to the things that should come to pass after his earthly career had been brought to a close.

Knowing the common trend of human nature, and desiring to spare his friends the consequences of their own weaknesses he warns them of their danger by relating the brief story of the return of the "lord of a house" from an indefinite stay in a far country.

TUESDAY

Jesus Anointed in Bethany. Mark 14:1-9

In spite of the intimate conversations between Jesus and his disciples, it seems they were slow to comprehend the nearness of the close of his earthly ministry. Seemingly no thought had been given to any special preparation for this end and for the care of his body after the terrible tragedy should have been enacted. But while he was at supper in the house of one of his most appreciative followers a most devoted and humble woman did for him what his disciples had failed to think of doing, when the box of precious ointment was poured over his head. It was an act of love on the part of Mary, the gentle perfume of which still pervades the house of humanity.

WEDNESDAY

Jesus Among Friends. Luke 10:38-42

While Jesus spoke the truth about a permanent place of abode when he said "The son of man hath not where to lay his head," he yet had friends who were always willing to furnish him with lodging or a resting place in lieu of his own lack of such. Among the most cherished of such homes was that of Mary and Martha and their brother Lazarus.

It was while stopping for a brief while at this home that Jesus found occasion to teach Martha, and through her to teach the whole world, that there are things in this life that are of vastly more importance than common household cares or physical comforts. While there is no intimation that these common duties should be neglected yet he would impress Martha and us with the thought that spiritual needs should take precedence over physical comforts. It is a lesson on the importance of learning to put "first things first."

THURSDAY

Ministering to Jesus. Luke 8:1-3

There are but three verses in this reading for today, but they have opened a thought to the writer that never appeared before in his many years of Bible study and teaching. This thought will not be given now as a positive conviction, as there is not sufficient time to give it proper investigation. But the thought is this, that in ministering to Jesus, as the subject of today's reading indicates, not only the twelve apostles accompanied Jesus in some of his travels, but at least on the occasion of this journey, there were certain women who were under particular obligation to Jesus, because of the healings that had come to them, who also joined this traveling "evangelistic party" that they might minister to the needs of Jesus and the twelve. Read verses 2 and 3 and see if they do not indicate that such services were rendered during the journey.

FRIDAY

True to Jesus. John 6:66-71

It is not always an easy thing to follow Jesus. Perhaps it is more difficult for some to recognize his intellectual and spiritual teaching than to accept his physical ministrations. Anyway, when he frankly stated to the large group of his disciples that "no man can come unto me, except it be given unto him of the Father," many of them "went back, and walked with him no more." But when the question of following was put to the twelve Peter answered, "Lord, to whom shall we go?" And we are glad to note that at least eleven of the twelve stood true to him until the end.

SATURDAY

Friendship Rewarded. Luke 22:24-30

The tendencies of human nature quite frequently "cropped out" in the association of the twelve with Jesus and with one another. Their simple humanity was manifested in their conduct on many occasions, but perhaps nowhere more strikingly than in the contention among them as to which one of their number was accounted to be greatest.

It was a beautiful lesson Jesus taught them when he glorified "service."

How many there are who are always willing to accept service, but are not so willing to render it. But Jesus told these faithful ones, that because of their faithfulness to him in his "temptations" they should "eat and drink" at his table in his kingdom.

SUNDAY

Jesus' Love for His Friends. John 15:9-17

Expressions of love are variously made, and, sad to say, they are not always sincere. Witness the many divorce and breach of promise suits that clutter up our courts. Also many protestations of love to Jesus or to the heavenly Father are equally insincere. "Why do you call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?"

One can not read the verses indicated in the lesson for today, in the light of the succeeding events in the life and death of Jesus, without feeling that his protestations of love for his friends were as true and sincere as God himself.

"I thought on my ways,
 And turned my feet unto thy testimonies.
 I made haste, and delayed not,
 To observe thy commandments."

The Kind of Evangelism We Need

By Rev. E. M. Slichter

Vice President Commission on Evangelism, East Pennsylvania Conference of the Evangelical Church.

This burning message by Mr. Slichter to the Evangelical Church is good for the Brethren church and for all churches, and the evangelism he suggests is the mission of the church, both in the home land and on foreign fields. It was previously published in The Evangelical Messenger.

We do need an evangelism. The meager progress organized Christianity is making forcefully expresses that need. It is a serious question whether we are gaining or losing. The thin veneer of genuine Christianity that overlies a mass of pagan selfishness in even these parts of the world generally considered Christianized, is a mute appeal for a genuine evangelism. When we read the Sermon on the Mount and try to square our customs and practices by its precepts we are puzzled.

We are the inheritors of an industrial system that is unchristian in spirit and product. It is unchristian because it is producing greed, luxury, lewdness, softness, weakness, effeminacy and disdain at the so-called "Top" of society and another type of selfishness that fruits in bolshevism and radicalism at the bottom. We have Wall Street greed at the one end and the situation in the coal fields of Pennsylvania and Illinois at the other. Rich men's sons and poor men's daughters racing to hell together—the one damned by money, the other damned by poverty. And for the most part the American pulpit stands in a swaggering, apologetic posture, makes frantic gestures to invite attention and mutters pious incoherent platitudes that are not apropos.

If we look in another direction the picture is no less disquieting. The aftermath of the war with present world conditions has left the people of the country pleasure mad. From coast to coast Hollywood's sinful pre-eminence for lust and obscenity is everywhere manifesting itself in immodest dress, indecent dances, salacious literature, vulgar stage jokes and obscene plays and pictures. From high schools and ward schools, where dancing is not only taught but frequently made compulsory, the Bible is kicked out; and from fashionable clubs run by nominal, luke-warm church members, or their children, where debutantes stagger half dressed and often drunk down the steps of the modern dinner dance to lives of proud, selfish, useless, barren, domestic infelicity, comes the same shallow sound as a tinkling cymbal. We bravely count our increasing church members and our great gifts to missions, and education, and overlook the fact that most of our young people from our families are very much at home on the ballroom floor, but strangers in the prayer meeting. We boast of our great Sunday schools, the classes of which are often taught by poorly equipped teachers, who have no training in leadership, who know nothing of the fundamentals of teaching, of the psychological approach to reach that pupil for Christ. The result is these pupils are irreverent, inattentive, unprepared, and badly behaved. We overlook the streams of youths and adults that pour away from the church at the church school and worship hour to spend the day spooning, joy-riding, feasting, singing silly songs or crowding places of amusements such as ball parks during the summer and in the fall of the year football parks, even to movies and swimming pools.

Parenthood has lost its conscience and authority. The home is on the breakers of the divorce courts. Preachers are denouncing divorce and then marrying divorced couples for the fee. The laymen are busy making or repairing fortunes. The women-folk are absorbed in society, while the young people are going all the gaits down grade. So far as genuine, bold spirituality goes, a spirituality flushed with the joy of witnessing to the divine presence of the risen Christ—they are both ignorant and indifferent.

We have a type of culture that is producing an intellectual pride that is as pharisaical in its attitude as were those to whom Jesus referred when he thanked the Father that some things were hidden from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes. This so-called modern culture is producing a science which ignores a first cause, a psychology without a soul and a system of ethics without a moral dynamic.

On the one hand we have an avowed atheist in one of our eastern colleges, declaring that he has made a survey that sixty per cent of the teachers of science in our secular colleges do not believe in God or immortality, and that fifty per cent of the students who enter college with religious faith have lost it when they leave. But this would not be so disquieting if the subtle enemy had not crept within the walls. When confronted with great questions of God—personality, inspiration, the atonement, the resurrection and immortality—many modern critics, preachers and teachers stammer in a learned but uncertain and unsatisfactory language.

A certain congressman writes in a magazine that he had asked four questions concerning inspiration, the atonement, the supernatural element in religion and the resurrection, of representative ministers he had met, and all had begun their answer with, "The consensus of modern scholarship," etc.

The general public knows little of the results and less of the processes of literature and historical criticism, but they know enough to know that the attitude of scholarship to the Bible has changed, that the ministry is hamstrung by doubts and intimidated by learned conjecturers. Their tone of authority has gone, their passion for souls modified, and their zeal turned to promoting reforms rather than to preaching a prophetic message of life and love and power. Today we are about to substitute sanitation and service for salvation, reform for religion, and education for regeneration.

Facing such conditions we need a revival of evangelistic preaching that will set preachers, including evangelists and pastors, to preaching the simple spiritual truth of the gospel, and cause them to become so busy interpreting the essence of the deep and fundamental things of Christ and his kingdom to a generation of selfish, pleasure-mad, money-loving, nerve-racked, Sabbath breaking, profane, gossiping, adulterous people, that they have no time to stop and quibble on either side of the question of the authorship of Pentateuch, the truthfulness of the story of Balaam's ass, and of Jonah and the whale and similar matters. What has an ancient redactor to do with the modern need of regeneration?

In my judgment both sides of this controversy are wrong, in that they are shifting attention to mere collateral issues. Someone has said: "The critics will take care of each other and God will take care of the Book."

Let's preach, "Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God." St. Paul said: "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of men's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and power; that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

We do not need a sensational superficial evangelism, but we do need in this our day an evangelism that centers about such great themes as prayer, the atonement, regeneration, the Holy Spirit, the kingdom of God, brotherhood, holiness, love and service. We need an evangelism in which the divine element is conspicuous. Once the Lord said to Gideon: "The people with thee are too many—lest Israel vaunt themselves against me saying mine own hand hath saved me." The same danger exists today with much organization, blowing of trumpets, building of tabernacles, organization of committees, publicity, counting of cards signed or hands held up, and the getting of funds. If we do not beware there will be many who will give praise to the evangelist or preacher, but few to give glory to God saying: "We never saw it on this wise."

We need a revival of individual work for individuals that will run through the home, the Sunday school, the League and our social life, putting into practice today the methods so beautifully set forth in the first chapter of John, where we read that Andrew found Simon and brought him to Jesus, and Philip found Nathanael and said: "Come and see."

We need a revival of Practical evangelism that will set men who are as shepherds over flocks to planning and praying for the souls of men, until their people will catch the spirit. Then together they should plan, play, organize, train special workers, inspire and utilize the home, Sunday school, Christian Endeavor League, the laymen and the lay women, cottage prayer meetings, personal worker's bands, open air meetings, in short any and all methods to win men, women and children to Jesus Christ.

Finally, we need a revival of Pentecostal joy, boldness and power that will make Christian believers true and loyal witnesses for Jesus Christ. This, and this alone, will enable us to break into the enemy's ranks and take men captive by the attractive power of the magnetic Christ.

It seems to me that in the main today the church in America is content to follow the line of least resistance, work on the most favorable material, confine itself to a well defined group of people instead of boldly breaking into the most unfriendly camps and subjecting her methods and her messages to the most drastic test. The early church turned the world upside down. It made evangelists of persecutors, created a new and ever-increasing constituency, invaded every rank of society, threw down the challenge of a joyous life before kings, governors, and pagans and constantly recruited her ranks from the most stubborn and uncompromising material.

Saul was found praying, the jailer and his family were saved, and even Festus listened eagerly to him who said: "Would that thou wert altogether such as I am." In mission fields the same thing is happening; idolaters become worshippers, yellow faces and black light up with a new found joy. Something like this must come to us if we hope to take our communities for Christ.

reached us, our first thoughts were: "How will this affect our Church and people in Long Beach? What will this do for our Missionary Offering? Will Brother Bauman be able to hold our revival as planned for so many months ahead?" Of course we were disappointed to hear soon afterward that it would be impossible for him to conduct this meeting for us.

But our hearts were soon gladdened when we found we would be able to have Dr. Charles A. Bame come and lead us in this revival campaign. So with little change in our plans we began the meetings on Easter Sunday evening and continued for two weeks, closing on Monday evening with Dr. Bame's famous lecture: "Remaking America."

It is not necessary for me to speak of Dr. Bame's ability as a Gospel preacher and evangelist. His fame is known too well among our churches for that. Even though his time has been given to office work in our Publishing Interests the last few years, he has lost none of his evangelistic effort nor love for lost men. His sermons throughout the campaign were straightforward, convincing and helpful. I am sure the church appreciates the services rendered us during his stay here. We hope he may return some time later for a three or four weeks' meeting.

The immediate results of the meeting were 20 confessions for the first time and 5 received into the church by letter and relation, making a total of 25 responding to the invitation. Of these 16 have been received into the Church at this writing. Eleven were baptized in the baptistry at the church on the last Sunday of the campaign. Several others are to be baptized in the stream just as soon as weather conditions permit. Due to the hard rains the streams are too high and cloudy to make such a service beautiful as it should be.

But these figures do not altogether give the results of this meeting. Friends have been made for the church which will result in permanent good in the future. We believe many are thinking favorably our way and will soon come into the church. There was another confession last Sunday, with another promised for this Sunday. We hope this will be an added blessing to be experienced each Sunday by the church. We believe the evangelistic spirit has been created which will continue.

We were glad to have with us on Easter Sunday our returned missionary, Brother Yett. He filled the pulpit ably on Easter Sunday morning and then showed his pictures to a full house in the evening. At the close of this service Dr. Bame inaugurated the revival campaign. Then Brother Yett filled the pulpit the following Friday evening in the absence of Dr. Bame. Our Foreign Missionary Offering was the largest the church has ever given to Missions.

The inability of many of our members to give financial aid, the carelessness and indifference of too many church members to the church, the unrest and doubt hanging over the people, along with some local problems has made our work the most difficult of any year since we have been here. However the Lord seems to be pointing the way out and this gives us added zeal and faith to continue the fight however hard it may be. We ask an interest in the prayers of all God's praying people.

SEMINARY NOTES

Friday morning, May 5th, two young men graduated from our Graduate School. These young men, Brothers Arthur Carey and Elmer Keck, have completed their four years of College work, and three years of Seminary work in our Graduate School.

The preceding Sunday evening, our Baccalaureate service was held in the Park Street church, with Dean J. Allen Miller bringing the message.

At Seminary Chapel on Tuesday morning, a preparatory communion meditation was given by Brother L. S. Bauman, and Thursday evening over thirty men attended our special communion service, with Brother McClain presiding.

The writer of these notes gave the Graduation address at the College Chapel, speaking on the subject, "The Place of the Christian Minister in Modern Life."

Dr. Miller, Prof. Stuckey and Prof. Monroe continue their teaching in the College for another month. They expect to remain in Ashland for some work in the summer school, with several trips to Conferences and Young People's Camps of the church. Prof. McClain is carrying on work for the Foreign Mission Board, and endeavoring to consummate his work at the school before leaving for the West for conference work.

We are already making plans for our work next year, and invite any interested in Seminary work to write either Dean Miller or Associate Dean McClain.

NEW LEBANON NEWS

Some time has elapsed since a report of the activities of the New Lebanon church has appeared in the columns of this paper. For this we ask forgiveness. For it is to these news items we always turn first when receiving the paper.

For some 6 months this church has been planning for a revival meeting for this spring with Dr. L. S. Bauman as the evangelist. When news of the earthquake

FIRST BROTHERS CHURCH OF PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA

We have been reading in the Evangelist how the Easter season has been a blessed time, in many of our churches throughout the brotherhood.

We, in Philadelphia, are happy to join our voice with theirs to say that we had a Joyous Easter season also. The first week of April, from the 2nd to the 9th, inclusive, was given to special meetings, with Dr. A. I. Brown as our Bible teacher and lecturer. These services were largely attended, and strengthened our faith anew, in the Bible, as the very Word of God!

On Sunday, April 9th, Dr. Brown gave a special message to the 'teen age boys and girls of our Bible school. As a result, 17 of them stepped out for Christ, some of whom were baptized on Easter Sunday.

Easter Sunday morning was a merged service, at which time, the young people of our Bible school rendered an impressive program, in commemoration of the Resurrection. This exercise also set forth a strong appeal for sending the story to those who had never heard, making a fitting time for the lifting of our missionary offering.

We had with us our three little boys born in Africa, Roger Jobson, Lester and Paul Kennedy, who stood in the center of the platform, holding the offering plates, while every department of our school, from the Cradle Roll to the Home Department, sent up their contribution. Then, too, each organization of the church gave an offering, until $2,000.00 were laid on the altar for Foreign Missions! Our pastor then offered the prayer of dedication, and the congregation stood to sing with full hearts "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

Thus far, this amount has increased to $2,200.00, which we know represents, perhaps, more than ever, sacrificial giving. We are reminded of the Scripture, 2 Cor. 8:2.—"How that in great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty, abounded unto the riches of the liberality."

On Wednesday, May 3rd, we held our regular Spring Communion service. The day was given to special prayer. It has been our custom for some time, to set aside the first Wednesday of each month as a day of prayer. Many have been the blessings received, by so doing.

The evening began with a baptismal service, which makes a number of accessions recently. Then followed the blessed Communion, at which time we had the largest attendance ever recorded.

So we feel, we have much to thank God for in Philadelphia, as we go forward in his service.

Church Correspondent.

FOUR DAYS AT BURLINGTON

No, not Burlington, Iowa, but Burlington, Indiana. One of the smaller, but splendid, substantial congregations of Indiana is located at Burlington. They are equipped with an excellent church building and parsonage; And having been without a pastor for some time, Brother Willis Polk was instructed by the Board to write me if I could come for several days and do some preaching and conduct for them a communion service. I found that I could be away during April 17 to 20 inclusive, and I went.

We had eager listeners to preach to, and very good audiences, made up of the church people of the various churches of the community. Three choice young people made their decision for Christ. We came away regretting that we could not continue for another ten days. There was every evidence that many more could have been led into the Kingdom. The final service was a deeply spiritual and uplifting communion service following the sermon on the fourth night.

Our stay among these good Brethren was a continual round of pleasure, made so, because of the many congenial contacts, and genuine hospitality. The good home of Brother Polk and his faithful wife was something of headquarters; but from there I branched out into various other delightful homes and covered considerable ground even in four days.

I would say that this group is in remarkably good shape even in the absence of a pastor. And there were times when I was almost tempted to wonder if, after all we pastors are as important as we sometimes think we are. Perhaps so. A young man, Brother Hanna is at the head of the the Sunday school, and he is to all appearances doing a good, sound piece of work, being loyally supported by the entire membership of the church.

It was my pleasure to meet Brother and

MY LAST WORD ON BROTHERS HOME CRISIS

In the Evangelist of May 6 I made a sincere and genuine appeal for help for the Brethren Home. It was a proposal that seemed possible. I consulted with every member of the Board and others and the plan was approved. The HOME must have support. Just remember that. I have received some encouraging replies. But not nearly enough to carry us through.

Just remember the proposal—One Hundred or more individuals, churches or church organizations give at least $1.00, and as much more as possible, for a period of ten months.

Surely that does seem possible.

Remember that it is an institution of the Church.

The total cost of running the Home is very moderate. Superintendent and Matron and all help for work and caring of the inmates is only $1,400 per year. Annuities, interest and Land Bank payments, doctor bills, and funeral expenses have accumulated until we can not meet them with the small income. TO CARRY ON THE HOME WE MUST HAVE HELP. Where are the responses to my 200 letters and the appeal?

Please turn back to the appeal in the Evangelist and read it again. Pastors, please respond to my personal appeal. I have hope and confidence that the brotherhood will help us.

I can do no more. I am only the unfortunate representative of the whole brotherhood called upon to bear a burden that must be shared by others. I am speaking for the whole Board of Directors. Sincerely,

J. ALLEN MILLER.
Ashland, Ohio.

Sister Ankrum and their fine family, both at Burlington and in their Flora home. All in all it was a delightful trip. It was a quest for money for Ashland College that took me to Burlington the first time. I was glad to go this time free from the duty of asking for money. God bless the Burlington people.

"FIFTY YEARS AGO, AND NOW" Milford, Indiana

"God moves in his mysterious way, his wonders to perform." Early in the year 1833, a little body in Christ as the only Lawgiver, was collected in our town of Milford when arrangements were completed for other services to follow which were held in a sister church. The Progressive church, as it was known then, had a steady growth and many were added to its membership through the evangelistic efforts of Rev. R. F. Mallot, Rev. S. H. Bashor and Rev. G. W. Rench. But it was not until October 24, 1886 that the new church was dedicated. At that time it was considered as one that reflected much credit to any town. Its tall spire still points upward and the old bell has lost none of its charms. The old stone threshold is deeply worn where members and friends have stepped upon it, many, many having gone on. They have left another impress, too, that of a devoted Christian life upon the hearts of their fellow-men. It is just as our beloved Longfellow so beautifully wrote:

"Lives of great men all remind us,

We can make our lives sublime;

And departing, leave behind us,

Footprints on the sands of time.

Footprints that perhaps another

Sailing o'er life's solemn main,

A forlorn and shipwrecked brother

Seeing, shall take heart again."

Pastors, too, have come and gone, and the church not always been privileged to have the preached word. Yet we "carried on" along the lines of Sunday school work and that of the Woman's Missionary Society. Then, too, a number of our young people from 14 years and on are affiliated with the Young People's Union, a group of 100 or more from the churches of the town and township. They meet in one of the churches each Sunday evening at six o'clock. One of the outstanding things they did recently, was to sponsor a series of meetings beginning on Palm Sunday and closing on Good Friday night. At the close of the old year of 1932, Rev. W. I. Duker of Goshen heard the call "Come over to Milford and help us." Since New Year's Day, we feast every Sunday morning on the good things he has in store for us. Rev. Duker and Mrs. Duker are "back home" when they are in Milford. Already a number have been added to the church by baptism and plans are being made to hold a communion service on the last Sunday in this month, May 28. The Milford congregation extends a cordial invitation to those who might feel a desire to worship with us in this particular way.

Yours in the Master's work.

HATTIE V. GROVES.

WITHOUT GOAL POSTS

"A university professor was talking recently with a group of his students. He called on them to be men and play the game of life. 'But how are we going to play the game of life,' one of the students asked,

'when we don't know where the goal-posts are?'

"That is the trouble; how are you going to make a great life when you have no assurance that life itself has any meaning or purpose, or significance? If there are no goal-posts, there can be no game. Our first business is to find the goal-posts for the greatest of all adventures."—Selected.

DYOLL BELOTE, Pastor.

OAKVILLE, INDIANA

I would like to challenge 999 other men and women of the Brethren Church to give one dollar apiece for two months,—May and June—to pay the $2,000 indebtedness on the Old Folks' Home at Loree, Indiana. The need is desperate, for if lawsuits are started, some of the creditors may ask for a receiver, and what a shame that would be. We already have $30,000 or $40,000 paid on this fine property. Why take a chance of losing it now. Send money to Henry Rinehart, Flora, Indiana.

S. LOWMAN.

EDITOR'S NOTE

This splendid suggestion of Brother Lowman's is in harmony with the plan proposed two weeks ago by Dr. Miller for the Brethren's Home Board, and we are sure Brother Lowman will be glad for us to say for him, though we have not time to consult him before going to press, that he will be glad to have his challenge go forth on the basis of the Board's plan, namely, a dollar a month for a period of ten months, or any shorter time that the one making the pledge may consider necessary. Any one making a pledge of one dollar per month for ten months, has the privilege of canceling his pledge at any time that it becomes necessary before the ten months are up. Of course all who can, will be glad to go through the entire time with the Board. But those who find it impossible to give that much should not fail to give what they can. If you can give only a dollar a month for a period of two or three months, or five months, or perhaps 50 cents a month for ten months, do not fail to do that, it will be gratefully received by the Brethren's Home Board.

GENERAL CONFERENCE PROGRAM NOTICE

All organizations and individuals who have been asked to have a part on the National Conference Program are asked to send their programs and subjects in immediately. All have been written to,—some several times. If subjects and programs are not in by June 1st, the Executive Committee will supply the same. Also,—all addresses, sermons, etc., are requested in writing. You may deliver them according to your wish, but have them in writing to present to the Conference Secretary. The Conference will convene August 21 to 27, at Winona Lake, Indiana. The Executive Committee asks the hearty support of all in bringing the program to its final form by June 1st.

Executive Com. Sec.,

CHARLES H. ASHMAN,
Johnstown, Pa., R. D. 5.

SECOND CALL

To the Ohio District of the Brethren Church.

Every church in the Ohio district should have upon their hearts the District Conference which will be held in June in the Dayton church. This conference should be a matter of deep concern and earnest prayer for every member of the church in Ohio. It is not going to be an easy thing for the churches to send delegates to this conference. But great things are not accomplished in an easy way, and we cannot reach goals that are worth while by sitting down and complaining about the rough, hard way. Every church should be represented by more than just the preacher as a delegate. This conference is not for some group that is not worth while, but for the Brethren church that God has called into existence and given a definite work to do. We must remember that God has given us great opportunities in this part of his vineyard, and if we are going to be efficient workers his business must be cared for. Conference is the place that we meet to plan for the future.

We have all learned in the recent past that material things are not abiding and they do slip away from us. But the church is a living and an eternal institution and deserves our attention, our money, our time, our prayers and our all. The greatest investment we can make is in our church. The church will not run by itself and we cannot afford to let it run in a haphazard way. Every one should be interested in it, and make every sacrifice possible that it may be of the greatest service to the world. This cannot be done unless there is unity, for in unity there is power. There cannot be unity unless we all have a part in the work of the church. This then demands that every church be represented in the conference. Pray earnestly and definitely that the Lord will make it possible that we may meet in conference at Dayton, Ohio, and plan together under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, that there may be a great awakening in the Brethren church, and that God will use us in a mighty way to glorify his Name.

Set your faces and head your cars toward Dayton, and, the Lord willing, we will meet you there.

C. A. STEWART,

Vice-Moderator.

Business Manager's Corner

APPRECIATION

It is now nearly thirty days since we mailed the last notices to a group of Evangelist subscribers whose terms of subscription have expired. We have received an unusually large response to our appeal for renewals, but yet there are quite a good many who have not yet renewed. We appreciate the hearty response we have received from the many, and sincerely and sympathetically urge the remaining unrenewed subscribers to make a real effort to have their paper continued.

Who Needs the Evangelist

We have received many expressions of thanks from our subscribers to whom we have been sending the Evangelist, though their subscriptions are past due, but we will quote from just a few, representative of the many.

One pastor writes, "You have certainly been more than kind in continuing the paper through these months. I have been enjoying every issue."

An isolated sister, living in Pennsylvania, with her church membership in Illinois, writes, "I can not get along without the Evangelist, as that is the only way I get any church news, and I am a TRUE Brethren." Hallelujah! May her tribe increase.

Another reader says "I am not a Brethren, but The Evangelist is sure O. K., and ought to be in every BRETHREN home. There will never be a time when The Evangelist will not be a welcome visitor in my home. May God favor your cause in leading souls to Jesus." If a member of another denomination will say that about OUR church paper, what should our own members say?

We trust these testimonials may give courage to any faltering Brethren who may feel hard times urging them to give up their church paper, and that they may be led to say "By the help of God I will sacrifice something else in order to still get the spiritual sustenance that comes through my church paper."

The Brethren Annual or Conference Minutes

Quite a number of pastors have not yet made remittance for the number of copies of The Brethren Annual that were mailed to them upon their publication.

With every package that was mailed was enclosed a colored slip stating that this was being done in harmony with a resolution passed by the last General Conference, and that each congregation was expected to pay for its proportionate number of the total number printed. The price of twenty-five cents per copy is also printed on the cover of each copy.

Sunday School Accounts

Invoices were mailed to all Sunday schools upon the receipt of their order for supplies for the present quarter. Because of the banking conditions all over our country we have not made any special effort to collect accounts against our Sunday schools that ordered their supplies on credit; but as we feel the effect of the banking situation more than any single Sunday school can possibly feel it, we will appreciate it very much if these schools will do the very best they can in an endeavor to pay these accounts.

R. R. TEETER, Business Manager.

A Statement from the Seminary Faculty

We desire first of all to offer sincere thanksgiving to God for his continued blessing, which has been poured out upon us through the churches and pastors, through the Women's Missionary Society and National Sunday School Association, and through the many faithful Christian friends whose gifts have made our work possible. "We give thanks to God always for you all." Without your prayers and your help this Brethren Seminary could not have carried on and made progress.

Together with you, we realize that the times are very difficult and that the support of the Church's interests has meant genuine sacrificial giving on the part of many. In such giving we have tried to share as the need arose, and we have found spiritual blessing in doing so. However, we believe that better times are at hand. And those institutions which get ready during the days of adversity are the ones that will make the greatest progress in the days of prosperity. If the Brethren Church expects to take advantage of the coming days, to build new congregations at home and abroad, we must prepare the men and women who shall be called of God to do this work. For such a ministry our Seminary exists.

We believe that the immediate future presents to the Brethren Church the greatest opportunity in all her history. People on every hand are realizing that temporal things have no certain value, and they are ready to listen to the message of Eternal Life. Many are sick of hearing unbelief from modernistic pulpits, and are actually searching for a Church that stands without wavering for the Word of God. The world is hungry for the Bread of Life. Many of our pastors are finding an unusual response to the Brethren message. The harvest is great, and ready. We must go on preparing laborers, therefore, lest we be found wanting in the day of opportunity.

The Ashland Theological Seminary belongs to the Brethren Church, teaches the Faith of the Brethren Church, and is answerable to the Brethren Church. As teachers in this institution we believe in the future of the Church. We believe in her message because it centers in Christ and is founded upon the whole inspired Word of God. We can see no salvation for men in mere educational processes, scientific technology, social reforms or political expedients. Modern religion stands uncovered, powerless to save. Our only hope is Christ, the Eternal Son, who entered human life by virgin birth, died upon the Cross in our stead, rose again from the dead, for whose coming we watch and pray. In him alone there is life eternal. Apart from him men are lost and forever doomed under the abiding wrath of God.

What Christ taught, we must teach. What he believed, we must believe. The servant is not greater than his Lord. As long as the Seminary stands for these things, she deserves the prayers and support of the Church. If she ever turns to any other Gospel, we believe the doors should be closed and the Church's money spent for some more worthy purpose.

These are some of the reasons why we presume to ask the churches and our many individual friends to remember the Seminary work on Educational Day. We ask, first of all, something that all can give—YOUR PRAYERS TO GOD ON OUR BEHALF. We have found by experience that he answers prayers according to our needs.

THE MASTER TEACHER

By Coradel Jacobs

"And he began again to teach by the sea side: and there was gathered unto him a great multitude, so that he entered into a ship, and sat in the sea; and the whole multitude was by the sea on the land."—How many, many times do we read just such passages as this, in the New Testament. Teaching was Christ's life;—his purpose; it was his constant task.

Then, is it not fitting that we should take him as our example? That we should cultivate or instill within ourselves those characteristics that set him apart as the Master Teacher?

What were Christ's objectives in teaching? To lead his disciples to trust God completely, and love him as their Father; to win them to active faith in himself as the Son of God; to teach the Christian way of life, in contrast to merely formal religion and worldly living; and to prepare and train his disciples to be active workers, faithless, and leaders in spreading this faith and this way of life throughout the world.

The great instrument of God's Spirit is the truth. Truth must be instilled in the life of the teacher and since it was deeply embedded in the Spirit of Jesus, he was fittingly qualified. Jesus believed not only in the seeds that he sowed but also in the soil.

Christ, in his teaching was original and independent. His teaching was based on life, not theory. He saw Eternal Truths in common things and had a keen knowledge of men. The Words which fell from his mouth were as poetry. None more beautiful with thought have been heard.

Not only in his teaching was he the Master, but his character was a greater teacher than his words, as was his works.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

If all the churches will search out their ambitious high school graduates and send them to Ashland to be added to the above splendid list, what a fine enrollment of Brethren students we might have. Let the pastors present this possibility on Educational Day, along with their appeal for an offering. Remember the slogan—A new student and an offering from every church.

P. S.—Those who put their "Hoarded Gold" into the Educational Day offering will be guaranteed protection from federal prosecution!

From twenty-seven to ninety-five per cent of the students in Christian schools in Japan who come from non-Christian homes become avowed Christians before they graduate. These schools are the greatest evangelizing agency which the Church in Japan has. The bishop of one of the great denominations in Japan is authority for the statement that forty-five per cent of all the baptism into that church are of students in their Christian schools.

The Day for the Remembering of Sacrifices

Memorial Day is a day set apart for the remembering of sacrifices. That has been the underlying thought from its beginning. When it was nothing more than a "Decoration Day", the basic sentiment prompting the strewing of flowers on departed soldiers' graves was the desire to fan the flames of memory and to cherish with fresh intensity the recollection of what they did and meant to their comrades and country. It is a beautiful and noble thing to remember, and also a sacred duty to remember, the lofty heritage of service and sacrifice that has been handed down to us.

He is a thoughtless ingrate who forgets, or will not bestir himself with memories, and by reason of his mental indolence he becomes an impoverished and disinherited son of the past. He has no capacity for possessing because no power of appreciating the spiritual riches that have accumulated through sacrificial services rendered by men and women under trying circumstances. His soul is small because it is self-centered and empty because he has no memory of, nor gratitude for, that by which others have enriched the common life. Greatly to be pitied is he who does not remember the sacrifices of the past.

And, that men may be stimulated to remember, there is need of these Memorial days, and the spiritual leadership of the people will do well to encourage the preservation and the observance of such days in the highest and truest manner possible. If men could be led to be more mindful of the sacrifices of the past, it would be a service of incalculable worth, and would be manifest in many ways.

The Price of Liberties

For example, he who remembers at what price his liberties were secured, will not carelessly let them slip from his grasp, but will cling to them with purpose and determination. Men who do not think for themselves, or who do not remember experiences or trends of the past (and there are hosts of such people) are easy prey for politicians and demagogues. They supply the harvest for newspaper propaganda, and the dupes for the political spell-binders. What they read in bold print they believe without thinking and what they hear from smooth-tongued orators they accept with utmost credulity. There is no disposition to "search the Scriptures", so to speak, or to "reason within themselves", or to call in question the things they read or hear. They are as credulous in many respects as children. What a demonstration of unthinking credulity our nation has experienced! When has there been a sorer need for citizens, particularly Christian citizens, who are able to remember and are determined to think for themselves?

The Folly of War

For a second example consider that men who remember, are likely to be strongly convinced of the folly of war, and ready to give encouragement to policies and programs that tend to lessen the causes of war and promote peace among the nations. Their minds are stirred with the remembrance of the thousands upon thousands who have marched in serried ranks under the battle flags of the nations and have been mowed down by the lords of war as a farmer mows his wheat. How prodigal have the nations been with men! Aye, how prodigal our own nation! She scattered them like seeds at Gettysburg and on Flander's fields. What vast numbers have been called upon to leave their peaceful walks of life never to return, or to return maimed in body or impaired in mind! Unpleasant though it is, yet it is profitable to be reminded of the somber side of war, rather than the dress-parade side, that we may not forget the horror of it. We are not unmindful that real and permanent peace can only come as Christ is enthroned before the nations of the world, and for that glorious event we work and pray, but we cannot remember the sacrifices offered without number and in vain to the god of war without being moved to do our best to make effective protest against carnal warfare.

The Liquor Traffic

Again, we may have an example of what a little serious thinking and remembering will do for one in relation to the liquor traffic, granted, of course, that he has the right kind of a conscience. Any one whose experience goes back to the days of the legalized saloon, cannot help remembering, if he had any accurate information about the situation, what a terrible curse the drink traffic was, and will be moved by that memory to a strong determination to do all within his power to destroy the evil. And this is a time for the stirring of memories along that line. Many seem to have forgotten or they are holding their recollections in abeyance for some strange reason. Many others seem to have lost courage and have come to feel that aggressive opposition to the return of the legalized liquor traffic is useless. While some have become intimidated through political influences. There is need to remember that the cause is the Lord's and demands our loyalty. There is need of a revival of the old-time fighting spirit that obtained among the temperance forces and courageous Christian people. The call is especially urgent in Ohio at present to stand up and do some real fighting. Unless the Mosier bill is defeated (which seems possible), the state delegates to the Repeal Convention will be 100% wet.

This is a crisis time for the forces of righteousness and Christian people ought to be found standing united and strong for the cause. Individualism and disaffection will as certainly prove fatal among Christian and Prohibition forces as among mountain climbers. Three young men were roped together as they climbed the Alps. One stumbled and fell, the second fell with him, the third got home safely. But at the little Alpine inn none would speak to him. The host shunned him. His sweetheart avoided him. His mother broke down in sorrow. A whisper was heard on every hand: "He cut the rope." No man lives unto himself, and assuredly no Christian can act in a selfish, individualistic way in the presence of a danger that so threatens the entire social fabric.

The Place of Religion

More important than all other examples is it to consider the effect of remembering and pondering concerning the place of religion in the life of our people and nation. And, of course, by religion, we mean the Christian religion. Christ and his Gospel were laid into the very foundation of our national being. And religion continued for many years to be an important element in the superstructure reared thereon, and has entered into every phase of our common life. Even at the present time, discouraging as moral conditions are in many respects, religion is the finest, most abiding and most faithfully sustained portion of our country's values. The churches have kept up more nearly to their normal standards of spirituality and power than have other lines of activity kept up to their standards. Industry has practically closed down, but the churches have only opened the wider. The labor situation is at a standstill, but the work of the church goes on in most cases without a break. Banking operations were suspended the country over for a season to prevent a financial collapse of a nation wide scope, but the churches continued and still continue to do business right through the depression, though naturally greatly handicapped and at much sacrifice. But sacrifice is a spiritual resource and the church thrives on it. Commerce and trade have practically ceased to function, but the church has suffered very little retrenchment in comparison in its foreign missionary service and practically none at all in its home evangelism. When we consider these things we are more strongly convinced than ever of the supreme worth of religion and that it deserves first place in the lives of all people.

But when we remember the needs, we realize that perfection is far from being reached, that the church is not without its challenge and religion does not begin to occupy the place in the lives of men and women that it ought to have. The gospel message must continue to find entrance into new hearts and become increasingly more effective in the character and lives of those who have received it. The fires of devotion must be kindled more generally and more brightly in the home and all the wider social environment of the individual. Religion must seek to renew and reorganize and re-motivate life in all its relations and activities. Christian men and women must rise to a higher plane, separate themselves from the contaminating influences of the world and center their hearts and minds more completely in him whose they are and whom they serve. Remembering these things, how vast the reach ahead appears!

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The meeting at Roanoke, Virginia, with Brother R. Paul Miller as the evangelist, came to a close, so Brother Koontz, the pastor, informs us, with "80 decisions for Christ including new converts and reconsecrations."

Two young souls were baptized into Christ last week by Brother Dyoil Belote pastor of the Ashland Brethren church. One was received Sunday into the fellowship and the other will be received promptly. The Communion on May 21 was largely attended and was a very blessed service.

One good brother writes: "Give us the news of all the churches as far as possible and some preaching." That is just what we are doing, "as far as possible." We can give the news only when it is sent to us. So, will the church correspondents and pastors not neglect to write, at least once a quarter, and oftener if you have something you would like to report? Pastors are also invited to send digests of sermons, or brief editorials to the "Voice of the Churches". It's your move now.

The secretary of the Ohio district conference, Brother L. V. King, has a word in this issue about the coming state meeting in Dayton, June 20 to 23, and also calls attention to the fact that some churches have not responded to the appeal for statistical reports. Cooperation is the key to success in such matters. That holds for pastors in other districts as well as those of Ohio, and it is to be hoped that in this fiftieth anniversary year of the organization of the Brethren church there may be a one hundred per cent reporting of Brethren statistics.

In a communication from Brother S. M. Whetstone of Goshen, Indiana, dated May 8th, he writes: "We had another good day yesterday. 560 in Sunday school, which is slightly above our average. Had a fine communion service last night too. Last Friday night more than 300 Brethren young people met here for a 'blossom time banquet' representing northern Indiana churches. Shipshewana Camp and Ashland College were emphasized by the different pastors." Brother Ephriam Culp, of Goshen, paid a visit to our office recently and was enthusiastic about the growth and prospects of the Goshen church under the leadership of their pastor and his splendid co-workers.

Brother S. C. Henderson reports the work of the Lord at Roanoke Indiana, where he is the faithful undershepherd. A two weeks' revival conducted by the pastor, resulted in eight additions to the church, six by baptism and two by relation. Two others had previously been received by baptism, making a total of ten new members. Brother Henderson says his people are loyal and that peace and good will reign in their midst. That, we have noticed, has usually been the prevailing spirit in Brother Henderson's pastorates. He is accustomed to build his people up in the ways of righteousness and peace. And we are glad to believe also that we have some splendid people at Roanoke, and capable local leaders.

We learn through Dr. J. Allen Miller, that the Brethren Home Board is encouraged by the response being made to the appeal to meet the present emergency. If responses continue to come in as they have been, the church will be able to meet its sacred obligation to the old people who are dwellers in the Home and also save the properties that were in jeopardy. In this connection, Brother Homer Anderson expresses an attitude of loyalty which is quite prevalent regarding this critical need, namely, one of quick response. If every church would do as much as Pleasant Grove, there would no longer be an emergency.

The Southeastern District conference will convene at Bethlehem church, Virginia, on June 14 to 15. Brother John F. Locke is pastor of the entertaining church, and Brother Frank G. Coleman is the conference moderator. We are just in receipt of the program from the secretary, Brother H. W. Koontz, too late for publication this week, but we are glad to call attention to it, and to urge our brethren of the Southeastern District to plan for a large attendance. We know the splendid rural church near Harrisonburg will give you a royal welcome and fine entertainment. The secretary-statistician requests us to remind pastors of that district that unless their statistical report is sent to statistician in time to be tabulated, they "thereby deprive themselves of a vote in all the deliberations of this conference." That calls for immediate action.

The South Gate, California, church is rejoicing in the blessing of God upon their work, and they attribute their success to the growing spirit of prayer in their church life. The pastor writes in his church calendar: "Thank God for a people who believe in earnest, old-fashioned prayer meetings. We do not mean to boast, but humbly speaking, when any church can have 50% or more of its membership present each Wednesday evening on its knees,—brethren, God will bless and honor such a church. For a praying church is walking with God." Then he recalls the Scripture: "While they communed together and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them" (Luke 24:15). Brother Polman is truly at the heart of the matter. Get a church in large numbers to praying,—praying earnestly and by the inspiration of the Spirit, and you have it where God can use it.

We appreciate the good report from Brother Ray Klingensmith concerning his work at Ankenytown church, Ohio, for which he cares in connection with his Seminary work. This church is very much alive, the young people especially displaying a commendable loyalty by their attendance at the pastor's Bible study class, their singing for the church services and their missionary enthusiasm. But the faithfulness manifested is not limited to the young people for the older people are also commended. The fact that they have not allowed themselves to get behind in finances is evidence of devotion to the Lord's cause. The meetings of the Official Board in connection with evening meals is a splendid suggestion for other churches similarly situated. Usually there is to be found a way of taking care of the church's "house keeping" requirements if resourcefulness is applied.

Brother Freeman Ankrum, pastor of the church at Flora, Indiana, reports four new members added to the church since last report and forty-one altogether since he took up the work a little more than two years ago. He rightly takes courage from the fact that the new members are active in the work of the church. He states that the Brethren church is now the largest numerically of the seven churches in that town, though the Church of the Brethren is close on its heels. The Sunday school is showing progress and is well officered, while the teachers are stressing the teaching and authority of THE BOOK. We note the once-a-month meeting of teachers for instruction and study in problems and methods. We do not hear so much about the teachers' meetings as we once did in relation to the work of our Sunday schools. We are glad to see that some are maintaining it in some form or other. It helps to unify thought and improve method.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter gives us an encouraging report of the work at Smithville, Ohio, where his leadership is bearing fruit in a splendid growth. The Sunday school contest of seven weeks resulted in a marked increase, averaging 207 per Sunday, and the gain over last year seems to be holding up well. The revival of two weeks conducted by the pastor with the cooperation of local leadership resulted in thirteen accessions to the church, eleven by baptism and two by letter and relation. And with these new members the church found its way into seven new homes. With the fine local leadership and the harmony this church possesses, it has a bright future notwithstanding the apparently overchurched

The Heroic Dead and the New Patriotism

By Dr. William H. Beachler

Memorial Day is here again. And now, as ever, it challenges us to think, and to consider the present in relation to the past. Memorial Day would have us reconsider our national heritage as a fact, at the same time putting new edge on our consciousness, and keeping us reminded that because this heritage did not drop out of the sky, but because others in the past made it possible for us, it is therefore a priceless and sacred trust.

It is almost needless to recount that we have this heritage because in the very outset a group of superb, gallant, practical men felt keenly together; they thought far ahead into the future and clearly together; and they acted courageously and fearlessly together. I refer to the founding fathers. But to make real their bold and amazing dreams the patriot fathers had to fight, enduring hardship and suffering, and many of them had to die.

Still later another desperate and bloody war had to be fought out among ourselves in order that national unity might be preserved. And it was preserved. And more recently we participated in a horrible, staggering world struggle. The whole affair was so vast and confusing that the issues did not seem as clearly defined as in our former conflicts. But we went into this conflict. We were told that it was a war to end war, and a war to make the world safe for democracy, and we seemed to believe it.

And this is what we told our boys as they went forth, for we had to tell them something. Those wonderful lads went forth in response to the voice of duty. They made their contribution. Many of the number came home maimed for the rest of their lives. And others did not return. Because war is war some of the number who went forth now sleep beneath the sod of foreign battlefields. We count them among our heroic dead.

And thus, as we think of our nation's past, and our heritage, we think of God. There are times when we think we can see his hand leading and pointing the way. We think we can see the outworking of some of his plans. At other times our follies and mistakes must have made great drains upon his loving forbearance and mercy. And then we think of those men of great minds and fearless, hopeful hearts, who, in the face of grave perils launched an astounding national experiment, or shall we say, enterprise? And we think of that multitude without number who made the supreme sacrifice. Nor do we pass by the wonderful women in those several generations who, amid the darkness of war prayed, and hoped, and worked, and wept, and sacrificed, and suffered through it all. Oh, yes, brave, loyal, daring womanhood had a great part—only God knows how great a part—in launching this heritage and preserving it safely in times of terrific stress for us and future generations. How vast and staggering is the multitude of OUR heroic dead! Brave men and brave women make up that multitude. And they are OUR heroic dead. How proud and humble we ought to be to

"...the new patriotism vigorously holds that whereas right may now and then lose a battle, it never loses a war. This is not the first time black, forbidding clouds have hung over our nation. More than once in the past crises have arisen which tested to the utmost our nation's mettle. This is testing time now. Nor can I escape the notion that the most vital consideration at this moment is not, How hot is the fire? but, What kind of gold are we?"

claim them! Our heritage became possible because they dreamed, and dared, and died. And we honor ourselves on this and every Memorial event when we pause to honor them.

But we have only met half of the challenge that comes to us with each Memorial Day when we have strewn flowers, and recounted the valor, and sacrifice, and heroism of our heroic dead. The other half of that challenge lays upon us the solemn duty to consider soberly our great heritage and our relation to it. How strictly like true men and women are we acquitting ourselves in the present moment? How deserving are we making ourselves of a great past, and of a great present heritage? What are we doing to redeem it from graft and corruption, and to preserve it against the hand of the despoiler? How seriously bent are we on handing it on to other generations, purified, strengthened, and improved? Unless each Memorial Day drives us to frankly face such and similar questions, then the day has failed, and we have failed, and our nation is little better for having had an added Memorial Day.

Thus I am led to suggest that if we are to pay our debt to the past, and discharge fully and faithfully our duty to the present and the future, we must exercise ourselves along the lines of truest citizenship, and express ourselves, and serve our nation and generation in terms of the new and larger patriotism. If God had a part in making possible our present heritage (and we most certainly believe he did), we do well to remember that he operated and functioned through men and women to do it. We also do well to note the quality, and the caliber of the men and women he used. And inasmuch as we firmly believe God is still vitally interested in our nation—its safety and its future—even a glance over our past will enable us to see clearly the type of men and women we must be if God is to use US in this grave crisis time in our nation's life. Only such men and women, I am bound to believe, as measure up to the standards of true citizenship, and are actuated by the new and larger patriotism, can be of service to him in such a time as this.

Now just what do we mean by the new patriotism? I shall not attempt to answer the question by bringing together a mere collection of words which might, or which might not, represent something deserving to be called a definition. I had rather have my answer represent an attempt, humble as it may seem, to indicate what is at the very heart of it—the new patriotism. Oh, yes, most assuredly, the new patriotism has a heart.

For example, the heart of the new patriotism is a thinking heart. You say, we don't think with our hearts, but with our heads. Well, maybe sometimes we think with our hearts too. At all events, the new patriotism thinks; It thinks clearly, fearlessly, independently. It is discrim-

GIVE YOUR YOUTH TO BE TRAINED AND YOUR MONEY TO TRAIN THEM

What Your Educational Day Gift Will Do

By Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D., President of Ashland College

1. Your Educational Day gift will help the general cause of Christian education. Nowhere else in the world can you expect education to be builded upon, and to conform to, Christian ideals except in a Christian school and such schools are, for the most part, denominational colleges. If you have any interest in this phase of our common life, you will help by an offering to the cause on June 4th.

2. You will very materially assist in keeping an arts college in such a position as to make possible complete preparation for later seminary work. This is important. As our seminary is now organized, its full course can not be completed without graduation from a four year college course. The Board of Trustees decided upon this course three years ago and the plan has been in operation ever since. Up to this time the graduating classes have been small but from this on, likely more will graduate because they have had time sufficient to come on up through the arts college and finish the three years' seminary work.

3. Moreover, you will assist in keeping our recognition up to standard. I can not possibly overemphasize this point. Those of us at the place where this is a burning question, realize as perhaps others can not, just what this means. If this college loses its place in the standardizing associations, its future is exceedingly dark. It is wrong and wholly indefensible for a constituency to maintain a college and urge young people to go there and prepare for life and then have the matter of their recognition to hound them as long as they live. Christianity and its rules apply to colleges as well as to daily living, and so far as I am concerned, I want no part in thus cheating young people. That is not Christian education. Honor is more than skin deep. We boast of being a whole Gospel church. If so, then a good place to begin is at the College. This may sound like strong language, but the situation demands nothing less.

4. Educational Day is placed in our church calendar by the authority of National Conference and if you want to be loyal to ALL the interests of the church, your gift will also help in this regard.

Three things will make a complete program of Educational Day in all the churches: a sermon stressing the need of Christian education, the directing of worthy young people to Ashland, and an offering commensurate with the ability of the congregation and in keeping with the amount asked by the Board of Trustees.

The pastor is the key to the situation. Will you all respond to this plea?
Ashland, Ohio.

"A successful education rests upon a tripod of a balanced mental diet for body, mind and soul."

Help Keep Ashland College and Seminary on the Map

By W. S. Bell, D. D., President Board of Trustees

We are all proud of the achievements of our educational work. From a small and financially depressed school, Ashland College and Seminary during the past few years have gone forward and are now rated schools of the first rank in educational standing.

Through efficient leadership and the united support of the Church and of Ashland city this progress has been made.

The College like all institutions has suffered from this long period of depression. We have done well in not suffering loss from our investments to this time. The Faculty has shown a spirit of loyalty to the school and been willing to take their share of financial losses in waiving two months' pay during the present school year.

The College has lost during the past year in what is termed as living endowment, which comes as gifts to the school and if the gifts are no larger than during the past year, our standing will be endangered. The actual invested money of the school is about $315,000.00 in permanent endowment. This represents the money given for endowment to the College and Seminary. The educational standardizing agencies require that we must have $500,000.00. In this we are allowed to capitalize our gifts made to the school annually as income on the ratio of 5% on rated principal as endowment. For example, a gift of $5.00 is rated as $100.00 living endowment.

Hence our appeal for an Educational Day offering on Sunday, June 4th. At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees this was considered imperative in the face of the present situation.

The minimum amount we are asking the church to give this year is $2,500.00 which will work no hardship on any, if all do their "bit". Gifts of $5.00—$1.00—$.50—$.25 or ten cents will put this across easily and it means much at this time. We are asking every pastor and church to give the people an opportunity to contribute and to make Sunday, June 4th, a real Educational Day. Arrange a special program—call attention to the place of our College and Seminary in the work of our church and boost for our only school.

A GREAT MAN'S LAST WORD

As if he were speaking from beyond the curtain of the grave, William Jennings Bryan, in his last will and testament, presented in two striking paragraphs what he believed to be the most essential thing in life. This is what he had to say:

"While I have devoted a large part of my time to the study and discussions of political questions, I feel more interested in religion than in politics, because religion is the only influence that controls the heart, out of which are the issues of life.

"Next to religion, I am most interested in education, because education can and should increase one's capacity for service. But education will not be a benefit to its possessor and a blessing to society unless widely used. I am anxious that each intellectual ship shall be equipped with a moral rudder sufficient to control its course in life's stormy sea."

Ashland College Merits Your Support

True interpretation of life with its meanings and purposes can come only from those who have truly found and experienced a new life in him who is the Light of the World. Only eternity will reveal the ultimate good accomplished through Christian instructors who have willingly assumed a double duty; namely, mastery of their own specific field, plus an intimate knowledge of the Word of God.

There are many reasons why ASHLAND COLLEGE should be enthusiastically supported. The following are a few:

1. ASHLAND COLLEGE maintains an exalted standard of scholarship. The faculty, a high percentage of whom have the Ph.D. degree, are leaders in their respective fields, and are being widely recognized. Her graduates are going forth into the various fields of endeavor, many with marked success.

2. ASHLAND COLLEGE promotes a wholesome social atmosphere. The work of the Gospel Teams, Y. M. C. A's, Glee Clubs, Departmental Clubs, Honor Societies, and a well rounded athletic program leaves no time for the so-called questionable social functions.

3. ASHLAND COLLEGE aims to preserve and foster a deep spiritual life. Both faculty and student body meet each morning at the Chapel for a half-hour period devoted to singing, prayer, and inspirational messages. Any system of education that neglects to train man's moral and spiritual nature can never be called Christian.

4. ASHLAND COLLEGE is now training many of the future lay leaders of the Brethren Church. Graduates leave her halls of learning to assume the duties of life. Some go into fields where there are no Brethren churches. There, if they have been thoroughly trained in a Brethren home, a Brethren church and a Brethren college, they immediately become a potential nucleus for a new Brethren church. The conservation of our present membership as well as future growth depends in a large measure upon this very thing.

5. Last, but by no means the least, ASHLAND COLLEGE has in connection a graduate school of theology, ASHLAND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY. The future ministry of our church is now being trained here. Thus the College and the Seminary with unity of teaching and singleness of purpose will be great factors in the co-ordination and strengthening of all Brethren work. This will assure growth and expansion.

The goal set for this year, ten cents per member, would be small even in a depression twice as severe as the present one. If every member of the Brethren Church will deny himself just ONE ice cream and put its cash equivalent in the EDUCATIONAL DAY OFFERING on JUNE 4, we can go over the top in the good old American way.

Believe It or Not

By Professor Loren T. Black

Historically, the Brethren Church has stood for a type of education which taught the fundamentals of Christian living along with a curriculum of cultural school subjects. From the articles of incorporation of date of August 29, 1888, we quote the following in regard to the aims and purposes of your college:

"Article I, Section 1. The Object of the Corporation:

"The object of this corporation shall be to establish and maintain a College or University for promoting Education, morality, religion and fine arts, and to secure to its members and patrons the advantages of Education in all departments of learning and knowledge, especially the education of men of approved piety and talents for the ministry of the Brethren Church."

This year 1933 finds Ashland College better equipped and prepared than ever to carry out the original purposes of the incorporators. Today you will find the school standing solidly upon these foundation principles. The fruition of the efforts of the founders of our school is being enjoyed by the Brethren students who are privileged to be here. Now your sons and daughters can choose a course of study from a wide range of subjects. This was not so fifteen years ago. Those of you who have not visited the college at frequent intervals can not possibly realize the wonderful changes brought about by those to whom you have entrusted the management of your school. To the best of my knowledge no other Ohio college has been improved so much. The success of our graduates in all walks of life bears ample testimony to this statement.

Yet in spite of this most welcomed progress some few Brethren pastors and laymen do not give wholehearted support. In fact, some openly criticize in no constructive way. No college is perfect, but most of them are striving to arrive. It is my humble opinion that most criticism in this instance is due to the lack of understanding of things as they are. Out of the some one hundred and fifty Brethren pastors, how many actually know many up-to-the-minute facts about the school from FIRST HANDED SOURCES? The best thing that could possibly happen to the cause of Brethren education would be for every pastor to make a special trip to Ashland and visit the school for one week. Yes, visit the class of every teacher, talk with the students, attend their social and religious meetings, and sample the very atmosphere of campus life. What message would these pastors carry back to their congregations? Well, it would be revealed in the increased numbers of Brethren young folks entering their own college in September, 1933. Even the Educational Board would be amazed at the amount of sacrifice exhibited in behalf of Educational Day offerings. The "On to Ashland" motto would inspire Brethren young people who would really prefer their own school. To know about Ashland is to be a booster.

In certain churches the idea seems to prevail that only those who are selecting the ministry for a life work should go to Ashland. In answer to this opinion it is true that at present approximately only one student in twenty is preparing for the ministry. This however is done in the graduate Seminary after four years of preparation in regular college studies. About one-third of the students are looking forward to teaching positions. They prepare for both elementary and High School positions in many states. Others are pursuing the four years of undergraduate work necessary to enter the professions of law and medicine. A few others are starting various types of engineering study with the intent to transfer to some engineering school after one or two years. Suffice it to say that every Brethren young person who has graduated from a first class high school should find out exactly what his school offers before considering any other.

Another idea seems to prevail in some nearby church districts. That is, that Ashland is too far away from home for son or daughter to go. They should go, according to some parents, to a nearby school, so they can return over week ends. Personally I know of no college which is concerned with the success of its students that recommends this plan. There are certain desirable features in the young person's life which can best be developed by temporary separation from home. It has been reported that parents even in the Pennsylvania and Indiana Districts think Ashland is half way around the world away! When one thinks of the sixteen students from the Pacific Coast who are at Ashland this year, well—they must go far away to school. Remember that these California boys and girls come almost from the very doorsteps of some of the world's finest universities to attend their own Brethren school. Such is true Brethren loyalty.

Some "Inside Information"

By H. H. Rowsey, Member College Board of Trustees

In referring to our Educational Day Offering, Dr. Jacobs has written in the "Evangelist": "I solemnly warn the friends of the College that, UNLESS THE GIFTS ARE INCREASED, we will be dropped from recognition." In this article I want to draw aside the curtain, and allow you to see just a bit of what this would mean to us. And all of these statements are based on what actually happened before we received recognition.

I am able to pass this "inside information" along, because I had the happy privilege of helping in Dr. Anspach's office during my last year as a student at Ashland. During that year many problems, relative to recognition, were presenting themselves. Both Dr. Jacobs and Dr. Anspach were working early and late, in an effort to secure recognition for the credits earned in OUR college.

H. H. Rowsey

Information relative to teachers, equipment, finances, etc., was being filled with the various state departments of education. In some cases these professors made trips to other states, to confer in person with State Superintendents. In one such instance, two personal trips were made before the Superintendent agreed to recognize our work. Then before he had made this decision a matter of record, he was called through the portals of Death. His assistant was appointed to the office, and he was harder to convince than his predecessor had been. The result was that young people who had graduated from Ashland and secured schools in that state, (and there were a number of them), could not secure their certificates nor their pay checks, until this matter was cleared up. So we can see the necessity of retaining our membership in the North Central Association, for this eliminates all of the above, making our credits good everywhere.

Before the days of our membership in the North Central, the same process was necessary, when credits were transferred from Ashland to Graduate schools. The College was constantly in correspondence with such schools seeking recognition for the credits of former students, who were enrolling for advanced work. And during Association meetings our officials would do their best to arrange for personal conferences, in order that they might convince these officials that Ashland was qualified to do standard work. In many cases students were accepted on probation, and given no standing at all, until they had proven their ability. Some schools would not admit the students to the Graduate School, until they had taken a full year of work in THEIR under-graduate school. And a few wanted to discount our work still more. ALL OF THIS HAS BEEN CHANGED. OUR CREDITS ARE FULLY RECOGNIZED EVERYWHERE, AND WE MUST KEEP THEM THAT WAY.

50 NEW STUDENTS and $2,500 for ASHLAND COLLEGE

In order to do this Dr. Jacobs assures us that our Educational Day offering must be at least $2,500. If our offering should decrease and the College would be dropped from the Association for but one year, it would be a serious matter. The year before we were recognized by the North Central an Ashland College graduate made application, in person, for a teaching position in a school, located in a state where Ashland's teacher training work was fully recognized. This man was unusually well qualified for the position, and was so assured by the Superintendent. In fact he seemed ready to hire him, (I was present) until he ascertained that Ashland was not a member of the North Central. And even when assured that Ashland had the endowment and had met the other requirements, but was merely waiting until the next meeting to be received into membership, he had no further interest in the applicant. He insisted that since his High School was a member of the Association, it WOULD BE IMPOSSIBLE FOR HIM TO HIRE A GRADUATE OF A SCHOOL WHICH WAS NOT A MEMBER WITHOUT DIRE RESULTS when time for inspection came. So it is plainly evident that we cannot conscientiously urge our young people to attend OUR College, without doing our best to see that it remains a standard and fully accredited school. And I sincerely believe that the Church will never allow the College to take a backward step in this direction.

After meeting the standardizing requirements of the College, the Church has succeeded in securing a standard Seminary. And it is one of which we may well be proud. The former degree of "A.B., In Divinity," was the laughing stock of the educational world. When presented to Graduate Schools, sometimes they did not try to conceal their mirth, and they were always energetic in saying, "There is no such degree." But this, too, has changed. Since graduating from Ashland I have received many catalogues from theological schools. And it is rare indeed, to find any school with requirements for the Th.B. as high as they are at Ashland. The Seminary deserves our support, and this year offerings may be made for the work of the Seminary as well as for the College. A decrease in offerings will most assuredly affect the work of the Seminary, the College, and the work of the Church in general.

It is our privilege to send our young people to OUR school where they may receive an education "under influences which are positively and avowedly Christian." Let us keep faith with them on Educational Day so that when they graduate, or transfer, their work will be fully accredited and recognized anywhere and everywhere.

condition of that community. At the recent business meeting of the congregation Brother Carpenter was given a unanimous call for another year as pastor, and some new deacons and deaconesses and a trustee were also selected.

President Jacobs gives us a brief report of the commencement activities that have taken place thus far. They have all been of a high order. Two events mentioned deserve special comment, namely, the glee club entertainments and the May Day exercises. Having heard both glee clubs sing, we are not surprised to learn of very highly complimentary comments being made concerning the programs that have been given by both these singing organizations among our churches. And concerning the forenoon program on May Day, we have not known of one such program in years given under the auspices of Ashland College that has been so universally praised by those who were in attendance. The crowning of the May Queen was, as usual, a beautiful exercise. As to the play that followed, nothing need be said about the character of a drama so widely known as Shakespeare's "As You Like It," and it was rendered in a very creditable manner. The thing we wish especially to commend was the absence of anything of an objectionable nature. We understand something of the difficulty of maintaining such outdoor programs on a high level that befits a Christian college of the historic background that Ashland possesses, but we are glad to note that our college authorities are making an effort to do that. And Dr. Jacobs' statement that "Ashland has its own traditions and customs", its own "history", "peculiarities", "ideals", and is making no effort at "copying after" any other college, gives us encouragement to believe that one of its ideals is and will be to maintain a high regard for Christian standards and the proprieties in entertainment, even though they be somewhat old-fashioned. To hold to such ideals will require courage on the part of our educational leaders, because of the fact that the modern trend is all against it, and they deserve the encouragement and commendation of Brethren people for their efforts in that direction.

68 MILLIONS NOT CHURCH MEMBERS

The Home Mission Commission of the United Lutheran Church says that over 68,000,000 citizens of the United States are not church members. Every second person we meet belongs to no church, Protestant, Jewish or Catholic. Over 17,500,000, in cities of over 100,000 population, are not church members. In the three great cities of the Pacific Coast—Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles, there are 1,500,000 unsaved souls.—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

"The Lutheran tradition has never become aware of the Kingdom of God as a social and mundane reality" is to us a pivotal sentence in an editorial appearing in the Christian Century of April 26, under the heading, "Hitler's New Religion." . . .

Barring the fact that this is not a tradition with us, but a doctrine, we agree. The reason Lutheranism has not become aware of the Kingdom of God as a social and mundane reality is, first, because it is content to accept the idea of Jesus himself who declared, "My kingdom is not of this world." The New Testament's testimony to the significance of this characteristic extends from Pentecost to the final vision of St. John. Always both the "other-worldliness" of the Kingdom of God, and the opposition of the kingdoms of this world to the power of the pure gospel are in evidence. . . .

In the second place, history knows of dozens of "visible" Kingdoms of God announced as the work of divinely inspired leaders. An analysis of their principles invariably reveals a composite of politics and religion wherein the mistaken claims for power and temporal authority ultimately corrupted the teachings of Jesus. Their final form has been either a hierarchical absolutism or a gradual disintegration. Rome in 1517 was an early illustration. Russia prior to 1917 was another. The Geneva government of Calvin's day was, fortunately for the modern era, only partially successful and the Cromwell regime in Great Britain did not long survive its great leader.

Neither in Holy Writ nor in human experience is awareness of the Kingdom of God as a social and mundane reality a sign of correct apprehension of Christianity.—The Lutheran.

God's Tenth

By Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D.

In touching the question of giving, or paying, we touch the most vital point pertaining to the consecration and spiritual power of the church. In saying this, we speak from experience, as we certainly speak according to Scripture. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, . . . and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts. If I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." (Mal. 3:10). Here, plainly, the payment of tithes is made the condition not only of an abundant outpouring of the Spirit but temporal blessings are definitely promised in the succeeding verse. "And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts." Prayer, testimony, effort, self-denial—how often do we hear these duties mentioned as summing up and fulfilling the requirement of tithes! But "tithes" means money or other property of equivalent value; and the effusion of God's Spirit and material prosperity is here made contingent upon bringing in these tithes and paying up these dues to God.

A tenth of his income was required of the Jew to be set apart, and sacredly devoted to God's treasury. And this was the first tenth, and not the last tenth; the first fruits, not the dregs and leavings. And while the amount is not specified in the New Testament, the same principle is carried over. "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him" (1 Cor. 16:2). Here is consecrated giving—laying by in store—a certain sum apart, and made sacred to God's use, and which thereafter one should no more think of using for himself than he would think of taking the same sum from his neighbor's pocket. And here is proportionate giving—"as God hath prospered him." Ought the proportion to be any less under the gospel than under the law? Surely not when we remember that we have as our exemplar One who, "though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich." In the light of such high standards, who can say that at least we ought not to give one-tenth of our income to the Lord's work?

Two Surprises

If any Christian who has never tried it will make the experiment, conscientiously following it through to the end in prosperity and in adversity we predict for him two surprises. First, he will be astonished at the increased amount which he is enabled by this method to give to the Lord's work, and, secondly, he will be astonished at the increased spiritual and temporal prosperity which the Lord will give to him. For observe that here is an instance where the Lord actually makes a challenge to his people, and sets up a test case, saying, "Prove me now." Taking this Scripture in connection with others, we find that there are two points to be demonstrated.

1. That faithful and proportionate giving will be rewarded with super-abundant spiritual blessing. The statement does not require proof, since experience has stamped it already as an axiom. Other things being equal, that Christian who opens the broadest outlet for charity, will find the widest inlet for the Spirit. The health of a human body depends upon its exhalations as well as upon its inhalations. It is reported that a boy who was to personate a shining cherub in a play, on being covered over with a coating of gold-leaf which entirely closed the pores of the skin, died in consequence, before relief could be afforded. Woe to the Christian who gets so gold-leaved over with his wealth that the pores of his sympathy are shut, and the outgoings of his charity restrained. He is thenceforth dead spiritually, though he may have a name to live.

2. That faithful and proportionate giving, which is another name for tithing, will be rewarded with abundant temporal prosperity. This is a saying hard to be received, but it has the emphatic support of Scripture. "Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine" (Prov. 3:9, 10). This is but one specimen of many from the Old Testament. "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom" (Luke 6:38). Do we believe these words of our Lord? and can we question that they refer to abundant temporal returns in recompense for abundant giving?

Let us now throw light upon this subject from a few inserted leaves from a pastor's note-book.

One says:

The Guinea Means and the Shilling Means

"I knew a widow of limited means who was remarkable for her liberality to benevolent objects. But a sad change came into her by an unexpected legacy which made her wealthy, and then her contributions began to fall below the amount of her straitened finances. Once she volunteered; now she only gives when importuned, and then it is as meagre as if the fountains of gratitude had dried up. Once when asked by her pastor to help a cause dear to her heart in her comparative poverty, and to which she gave five dollars then, now she proffers twenty-five cents. Her pastor called her attention to the surprising and ominous change. 'Ah!' she said, 'when day by day I looked to God for my bread. I had enough to spare; now I have to look to my ample income, and I am all the time haunted with the fear of losing it and coming to want. I had the guinea heart when I had the shilling means; now I have the guinea means and the shilling heart.' It is a fearful risk to heart and soul, to become suddenly rich,

This is one of the reasons why God lets many of his best children acquire wealth so slowly, so that it may not be a snare to them, may not chill their benevolence; that, when wealth comes, the fever of ambitious grasping may be cooled, and that benevolence may overtake avarice."

But let us introduce another illustration furnished from a pastor's observation:

"A parishioner, who was a dear friend, read his pastor a page from life's history to this effect: When a small boy, he gave his heart to Christ. He was engaged in a brickyard to carry clay, often on his head, for twenty-five cents a day. Then he vowed that one-tenth of his income he would give to his God. This he conscientiously did, and prosperity followed until his income was $10,000; and then the trial of his life came, in which he went down in financial disaster. He would not give one-tenth of $10,000. Here his faith balked. He said, 'After disaster had swept all away, I learned what I had not known before—that it is easier to give one-tenth of $72 than of $10,000. A man is truer to God who works for twenty-five cents a day, and has less temptations and more strength to meet them, whose income is $6 a month, than $833 1-3.' He regained wealth, but it was in strict compliance with the vow of his youth, which his disaster enabled him to fulfil until his death."

Tithing Pays in Business Prosperity

There is a Christian league in this country, banded together to promote systematic giving. It brings every member into covenant to keep a strict account with the Lord, and to render him one-tenth of the income. An annual report is made by each member, giving a statement of his business and spiritual prosperity. The secretary recently told us that the results have been surprising even to the most sanguine advocates of the tithing system; that not only has the income of the missionary societies receiving the funds been greatly increased, but that, out of thousands entering into this league, all but two or three have reported greatly increased business prosperity. Are there not some things to be proved which we have not yet dreamed of either in our philosophy or our mathematics?

Colgate's Soap

Here is another instance from a well-known life. We find the statement in print, and believe from what we have heard, that it is substantially correct:

"Many years ago a lad of sixteen years left home to seek his fortune. All his worldly possessions were tied up in a bundle, which he carried in his hand. As he trudged along he met an old neighbor, the captain of a canal-boat, and the following conversation took place, which changed the whole current of the boy's life:

"Well, William, where are you going?" "I don't know," he answered; "father is too poor to keep me at home any longer and says I must now make a living for myself."

"There's no trouble about that," said the captain. "Be sure you start right, and you'll get along finely."

"William told his friend that the only trade he knew anything about was soap and candle making, at which he had helped his father while at home."

"Well," said the old man, "let me pray with you once more, and give you a little advice, and then I will let you go."

"They both kneeled down upon the towpath (the path along which the horses which drew the canal-boat walked); the dear old man prayed earnestly for William, and then gave this advice: 'Some one will soon be the leading soap-maker in New York. It can be you as well as any one. I hope it may. Be a good man; give your heart to Christ; pay the Lord all that belongs to him of every dollar you earn; make an honest soap; give a full pound, and I am certain you will yet be a prosperous and rich man.'

"When the boy arrived in the city, he found it hard to get work. Lonesome and far from home, he remembered his mother's words and the last words of the canal-boat captain. He was then led to 'seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness,' and united with the church. He remembered his promise to the old captain, and the first dollar he earned brought up the question of the Lord's part. In the Bible he found that the Jews were commanded to give one-tenth; so he said, 'If the Lord will take one-tenth, I will give that.' And so he did; and ten cents of every dollar were sacred to the Lord.

"Having regular employment, he soon became a partner; and after a few years his

JESUS FACES BETRAYAL AND DENIAL

Lesson Text: Mark 14:10-72; Golden Text: Isaiah 53:3

The Last Supper. Mark 14:12-21

To Brethren people this is a familiar story, for since the Brethren interpretation of the record of this event is somewhat different from that of most of the churches, special emphasis has been placed upon it in all "old fashioned" Brethren preaching.

By many, this is called "The last passover supper," but Brethren do not believe Jesus ate the passover with his disciples at this time, but that he only "desired to eat it with them." The Brethren interpretation is that Jesus was himself crucified at the hour the passover lamb was to have been slain, thus making it impossible for him to observe the "Jewish passover" at this time. But it was his last supper with his disciples.

TUESDAY

The Communion, or Eucharist Instituted. Mark 14:22-26

Here again Brethren differ from many other people in the interpretation of the events of this evening. The International Sunday School Lesson Committee calls this the "First Lord's Supper," but Brethren make a distinction between the Lord's Supper and the Communion, or the partaking of the eucharistic emblems. Brethren consider the common meal eaten together with the Lord and his disciples to be the Lord's Supper, and the partaking of the broken bread and of the fruit of the vine as the communion.

WEDNESDAY

Peter's Denial Foretold. Mark 14:27-31

At the conclusion of the supper and the institution of the communion, Jesus and his disciples retired to the Mount of Olives, where the stage was all set for the beginning of the greatest tragedy of the ages.

Jesus, knowing what the night and the day following would bring forth in the development of the great plan of redemption, warned his disciples of their coming disappointment, which would be an occasion of offense to them.

But, in spite of his positive assertion that nothing could give him offence, Peter was warned that three times he would deny his Lord before the cock should crow twice. One should be sure of one's self before making such positive statements of personal faithfulness.

Praying in Gethsemane. Mark 14:32-42

Many people pray when overtaken in some great calamity, who have never prayed before, but the life of Jesus was a life of prayer, even from the beginning, and it was not because of his awareness of swiftly closing life that was before him that he prayed in the garden of Gethsemane, but because his entire earthly career had been according to the "will of God," and under the direction of God, and now as it is drawing to a close he must continue that close fellowship with the Father, whose will he had sought to always carry out, and which fellowship enabled his humanity to bear up under the load his divinity laid upon him.

FRIDAY

Betrayal by Judas. Mark 14:43-50

Could such a thing be done without injury to the cause and effectiveness of Christ's ministry, we would gladly "delete" this story of the perfidy of man from the account of the glorious ministry of our Lord. But such a course would rob the account of Christ's great sacrifice for man, of the illustration of the effect of covetousness and greed upon the heart of a man who loves money more than he loves God or the Son of God. Not all men would actually and knowingly betray their Lord for thirty pieces of silver, but many men do place a higher value upon the possession of silver and gold than they do upon the Lord's work that he has delegated to his followers.

SATURDAY

Denied by Peter. Mark 14:66-72

What a contrast the dual nature of man affords. Brave, bold, bluffing Peter. Ready to fight for his Master with the sword in one moment and then, just a little while later, frightened into denying having ever known him by the question of a harmless maid. No, he did not mean to deny him, he meant to be true, but he followed him afar off, too far off to receive the strength to be had only by a close walk with the Lord. Poor Peter, we feel sorry for him, but we are glad he still had a conscience that would lead him to tears because of his weakness, and an honesty of purpose that led him to "strengthen" his brethren after he was "converted."

SUNDAY

Thirsting for God. Psalm 42:1-11

In some ways Peter and the Psalmist David were alike. They both "thirsted after God." And David found relief in tears as Peter did many years afterward. David says, "My tears have been my meat day and night."

And these tears bore a message to him, for he says "they continually say unto me, Where is thy God?"

If weeping and shedding of tears could satisfy one's thirst for God, then we would pray for more tears and more weeping; but tears and weeping alone will not satisfy such thirst. There must be a doing of God's will if one would expect to learn to know him.

The publicity committee can probably do as much as any other committee to make the Christian Endeavor society a success. Something out of the ordinary must be happening in order for the publicity committee to produce publicity. This committee may encourage other committees to work by announcing the accomplishments and plans of each committee. This may be done effectively by posters.

Posters with action and color call attention to coming programs or socials, plays or conferences. Posters should tell "when" and "where" and enough "what" to arouse interest and curiosity. Crowded posters are not often read, but a blank space attracts attention.

Pictures are not absolutely essential, but neatness and accuracy are. Never be afraid to use a ruler, for a ruler is the best friend you have to assist in making the poster well balanced. The doctor is no assistance after the patient is dead. Neither is a poster of any use if exhibited after the program is held. A poster should be posted at least two weeks in advance of that which it advertises.

A poster is stationary, but a successful publicity committee advertises wherever it goes by word of mouth and by wearing Christian Endeavor pins.

Why I Am a Missionary in China

By the Rev. Perry O. Hanson, Taian, Shantung, Missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, 1903-

"North China calls, 'Fill up the gaps.'" This was one of the cablegrams read by Dr. John R. Mott at the Student Volunteer Convention in Toronto the first day of the year 1902. Boxers in China, not depression in America, was responsible for the "gaps" at that time.

My fiancée and I heard that message as a challenge. We knew something of comparative needs at home and abroad; we knew that at least five times ten million people on mission fields would receive the Gospel only through Methodist workers, while in America, the smaller field, was relatively well manned. Our knowledge of conditions abroad made the cable from North China a call loud and urgent. In 1903 followed our glad sailing to fill some gap in North China.

We were sent to the city of Taian in the Shantung Province, the place where the Boxers first trained before starting north. Their drill-ground was an enclosure, inside the wall of which were depicted in gaudily painted images seventy-two punishments of hell, a proper atmosphere to inspire a Boxer movement. More alluring to us was the fact that our home was at the foot of Tai Shan, the oldest sacred mountain in the world, to which pilgrims had come from all over China for five thousand years. The old home of Confucius was fifty miles distant and Mencius did his life work within the territory assigned to our church. It was truly the Holy Land of China. We found that by rules of comity among the missions more people were our Methodist responsibility in Shantung than live in our state—Minnesota. Our force of workers consisted of one ordained Chinese, one missionary family and two single women. There were also some Chinese lay workers in active service. The total membership of the church in our field was only two hundred out of a population of more than two million.

In those days, before Language Schools, it was necessary to start immediately teaching English in our school for boys. Although this seemed liable to interfere with language study yet it brought to me at once wonderful possibilities for producing needed workers through our Christian schools. As the immensity of our task grew upon me, there was also the growing consciousness that the students in the school might become the evangelists, the educators, the physicians, needed in the evangelization of the millions in China's Holy Land.

Twenty-one years passed and our work became "of age." In 1924 our number of workers was sufficient (twenty-five ordained men) for us to organize our Shantung Annual Conference. There had been gratifying progress along all lines with good growth in membership, lay workers, increased number of organized churches and a better standing among the people in the regions occupied.

Now eight years more have passed and there is a better spirit on the part of the Christians as they are making the church their own. We have little groups of believers dotted here and there all over our great field. There are scores of our former students actively engaged in Christian work in churches, schools and hospitals, or good laymen helping in volunteer service. Our great task is well begun but it is a great enterprise which will require many years for completion. It is my joyful privilege to be among friends helping, advising and giving necessary encouragement. Where in America can a man find such an immense opportunity? How could I be content to occupy any pulpit in any church in America after such experiences in building the Kingdom in this great field?

There is greater need in our field now than ever before. During recent years there has been a movement to destroy idols in Taoist and Buddhist temples. Today in our city, which has been for centuries a great pilgrim center, there is not an idol standing. There has never been any program of helpfulness under temple auspices but the people have had something visible in the objects of worship which might stimulate their religious instincts and act as a restraining influence. Now there is the opportunity to put Christ into empty and receptive hearts and perhaps enthrone him in the empty temples.—Missionary Review of the World.

HOPE FOR CHINA—HALF THE YAMEN CONVERTED

Letter from T. D. Payne, China Inland Mission, July 9, 1932 Luchang, Western Yunnan, China

Apostolic Christianity has not died out in China. A village of Tibetan-Lisu Christians, out here in Western Yunnan, has turned as a unit to the Lord and has remained steadfast for more than a year. They have been fined, beaten, and thrown into prison because of their faith. First, four men were beaten fifty strokes each with a board and fined about four months' wages each because they started to erect a Christian meeting house. Then the school tax of the village was increased and other unusual burdens were laid upon them. Since they were not permitted to have a chapel they met in the open air, the women on one side of the road and the men on the other. The laird who rules them raided this meeting place one day as they were worshiping and tied up with ropes one of the brightest young men. He was dragged to the Yamen and beaten with boards, one board after another being broken on his body until four boards were destroyed. The fifth board left him unconscious, with his body badly injured, large patches of skin being completely gone. He is still in jail, bound with a chain to a post. The war-lord told him that if he will pay some money he can be released, but the prisoner declares as he is guilty of no wrong he will not pay anything. The laird has conscripted the young men among the believers until now his soldiers are all believers. I am told that they gather around the man chained to a post and hold divine services.

The sound of the hoards coming down on poor Mr. "Fifth Month Happiness" converted half the Yamen, it seems. Last Saturday (July 2, 1932) when I visited the place to see if I could arrange for a settlement, half the Yamen came out to shake hands with me. (Handshakes are the sign of a Christian Believer in these parts.) The sergeant of the militia, who had not believed before, said to me in front of the laird: "Come to my home village and teach us, and we will all believe." The laird glared daggers at him, but the sergeant insists that he is going to live and die a Christian.—Missionary Review of the World.

MISSIONARIES AS EXPLORERS

By Edwin Tarrisse

The word "missionary" carries the idea, generally speaking, of one who proceeds to heathen lands to carry the gospel message to the heathen. While of course, this is entirely true, yet missionaries have rendered other and very different services to mankind. It is not generally known that to these brave people we are indebted for many of the tropical products that contribute to the comfort and safety of modern life.

It was the Jesuit missionaries, laboring among the aboriginal inhabitants of Peru, after its conquest by the Spaniards, who discovered the virtues of the bark of the cinchona tree. They found the natives of Peru employing it in malarial fevers, and after testing it themselves, they exported shipments of it to Europe, where it soon became a valued and well-known remedy. For a long time it went by the name of Jesuit bark the ground bark being administered as a powder, but when modern chemists found out how to extract the curative properties of the bark, it was given the name it bears today—quinine.

In their efforts to Christianize the heathen scattered throughout the vast areas of northwest South America the missionaries also discovered a tree that grew, more or less in those regions, the sap of which was valuable in stopping the flow of blood from a cut. This was also gathered by them, and in time made known to the civilized world. Today, in Europe, it retains the name, "Friars' Balsam," and in Latin America of "Balsamo Catolico."

In more modern days it was a Protestant missionary, toiling among the natives of the Niger River delta, in West Africa, who discovered the valuable properties of the stones of the fruit of the oil palm. The natives were accustomed to discard most of the stones, a few being crushed and the kernels removed, after pounding and cooking off the oil-bearing fruit surrounding them, because they were sweet and pleasant to the taste. The inquisitive missionary examined these edible kernels, and found them very oily, so much so that he tried to persuade the white traders to buy them and extract the oil. The traders, however, thought this merely an eccentric idea, almost as foolish as trying to convert the natives, and would do nothing about it; but the undaunted missionary sent some of the kernels to Europe to be tested.

It was found that the kernels contained large quantities of oil that was valuable for a great many purposes, edible and otherwise, and a trade in them sprang up at once. This has grown so fast that today it is second only in importance to that of the fruit itself. It was not long, moreover, before another use was found for this product. It was discovered that the nut-cake from which the oil had been pressed made a splendid cattle food. Everyone now knows that oil is fattening and palatable, and evidence of the wholesomeness of the kernels upon the cattle was shown by the sheep of the natives. These animals greedily ate all they could find of this waste. The use of the nut-cakes very greatly increased the value of oil-palms.—Young People.

the church. We hardly realize that we are definitely started in our third year since taking up the work in this community. In some way they have been years of "The Canker Worm." Economically no one needs to be reminded of the discouraging events. Yet in the face of trying difficulties there has been added to the church 41 people since taking up the work here. That which inspires and helps meet the trials of the day is the fact that many of those who have come in are at work and filling places of responsibility.

The Sunday school is well manned with teachers and officers. It has been having a fine average attendance. Once each month the adult teachers meet for instruction, and study of lessons and methods. There are seven churches in Flora. The Church of the Brethren and the First Brethren being the largest. The membership of these two are about even. The last comparison the First Brethren church was possessed of the largest membership.

The times which we have been passing through have tended to discourage many who depended upon sight more than faith. There are those here who think that the church should be closed "until prosperity returns." Naturally some of these were none too liberal when there was "prosperity." The fine group of young people here, and children are a guarantee of the future of the church, provided they are rightly treated and shepherded by the older folks now in the church. The Sunday school averaged for April that which was one of the best averages in years. Efficient teachers and workers are providing special programs and numbers from time to time that are an inspiration to pastor and people. Emphasis is being laid in all classes on the teaching of THE BOOK as first and final in all things.

It was our privilege to spend a few days in West Virginia last Fall and bring a message to the Oak Hill people on a Wednesday night. There was a fine audience of old friends. They are struggling along now without a pastor hoping that they will be able to eventually get back to work on a pastoral basis. On the way back to Indiana one night was given to the church at Glenford, Ohio, where we spoke in our home church to an appreciative audience. They too have suffered in going through the years without pastoral service. Just Sunday preaching and that only half time will never build up a congregation.

We here at Flora covet an interest in the prayers of the faithful that the work might continue. There are many new bright spots that help to hide the old dark ones. What Flora has done in the past is as nothing in comparison to what she is able to do, if fully awakened to her powers and opportunities.

SMITHVILLE, OHIO

Just a few news items to let you know that Smithville is on the map. Easter was the climax of a season of great blessing that indicates spiritual progress and growth.

The special Sunday school effort in the form of a seven-weeks' "Autocar Race" across country visiting twenty Brethren churches and Sunday schools enroute was highly successful in adding new members to our Sunday school and also new members to our church and withal in making contact with a goodly number of new people whom

The events of the commencement season thus far have been unusually satisfactory.

The Men's and Girls' Glee Clubs have already given their home concerts in our Park Street church. They were well attended and well received. The programs were of a high order.

But perhaps the first real event of the commencement season was what we call Lantern Night, when the campus was lighted with one hundred Japanese lanterns with an electric light bulb in each lantern. The campus was very beautiful lighted this way. The event was sponsored by the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.

Saturday was May Day. In the forenoon the May Queen, Miss Gwendolyn Ogle, of Ashland, was crowned before a crowd of 2,000. This was the first time Redwood Stadium ever was full. The day was ideal. Following this event, Shakespeare's "As You Like It" was enacted before the stadium. We had invited hundreds of high school seniors. The play was exceedingly well done.

This was immediately followed by the Alumni luncheon held down town. Superintendent Bowsher of the city gave the address. Professor DeLozier, the president of the association, acted as toastmaster. The event was well attended by out-of-town guests.

In the afternoon, the College defeated Kenyon College on our own grounds in a baseball game, 6 to 21.

In the evening in the high school auditorium, the Senior class put on Shaw's famous play, "Arms and the Man". I can not speak too highly of this event, especially the inter-act singing of Edwin Colburn of California and Irene Herschler, of Ashland.

All of these events were of high order and nothing objectionable in any sense was present. And this leads me to say what I have heard several other teachers say, and that is, Ashland has its own traditions and customs and to those of us who have seen them grow and have fostered them through the years, they are particularly satisfying. Ashland does not strive to be just like any other college, nor are we copying after any. We have our own history, our own peculiarities, and our own ideals and customs. These we shall keep and improve as the years come and go. Ashland has its own distinctive features which it took a long time to build and which shall not easily be cast aside.

The next commencement event of major importance is the reception of the Senior girls by the Women's Faculty Club.

Then on Sunday, June 4, Rev. Chas. H. Ashman of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, will give the baccalaureate sermon on the subject, "The Quest of Life".

ROANOKE, INDIANA

Some time has elapsed since the Brethren church at Roanoke, Indiana, has been reported in the Brethren Evangelist. In common with many other communities, we have had our share of depression and bank failures that have interfered with the material plans in church work. We are happy to say that the Lord's work still continues. We have a loyal group of folks here at Roanoke, and peace and good will reign in our midst.

Our Sunday school still continues under the able leadership of Brother Kenneth Kramer as superintendent and Howard Zent as assistant superintendent. We have a loyal class of young people, who are taught by Prof. Bryan the local High School coach. These young folks compose our church choir under the direction of Sister Myrtle Bois.

In March the men of the church had a wood-cutting bee in Brother Walter Hunke's woods. Several cords of wood were cut for the church. The ladies of the church served dinner to the hungry choppers and gave the church house a physical cleansing.

The churches of the community united in the day of prayer at our church this year. The services were well attended. The union Good Friday services were held at the local United Brethren church. Our church and pastor taking part in the service.

Just prior to Easter, the pastor conducted a two weeks' evangelistic service. In spite of the bad weather the services were well attended. Several evenings we had large delegations from the neighboring churches. The visible results of the meeting were eight added to the church, six by baptism and two by relation. Four of those baptized were young men. Two others were baptized since our last report.

The pastor recently exchanged pulpits with Elder Garber, pastor of the Church of the Brethren near Decatur, Indiana. We are expecting Brother Yett with us next Thursday evening.

S. C. HENDERSON.

FLORA, INDIANA

Many things have happened here since the last report was sent in. Some of them may be of general interest to the brotherhood, others not so. Some are happy and inspiring, others are just the reverse. Since the last report four new members have been received and added to the membership roll of we hope to win later. Another real benefit gained in the drive was the joy and blessing that came to the workers themselves. Much personal work was done. The red side came Sunday school, and he is to all appearance and profitable service rendered. And that was the goal toward which the whole school labored from the start. Superintendent H. S. Rutt and the four Antioch Conductors, Elmer Crider, John Weagley, Frank Hartzler and John Dintaman, proved to be splendid leaders.

The average attendance in our Sunday school during the seven weeks was 207, breaking all records. It ranged from 171 to 263, the latter being the highest ever. The average attendance for the three Sundays following the close of the contest on Easter was 168. This can be compared with the average attendance for 1931 of 91 and for 1932 of 127. The whole Sunday school is delighted and encouraged with the steady and remarkable growth, and that in a community that is crowded with many churches. This may be added evidence that there is a vital place in this community and every community for the Brethren church with its Whole Gospel.

Two weeks of Pre-Easter revival services were conducted by the pastor, assisted by a large number of the Sunday school and church workers. Boyd Hostetler, the song leader, and Mrs. Beniah Amstutz, in charge of the special music, rendered valuable help, as did also all the members of the chorus choir. The music was a special feature each evening. As one result of the services thirteen new members were added to the church on Easter Sunday, two by letter and relation and eleven by baptism. Three of the number are intermediates from our Sunday school and ten are adults. One unusual but pleasing fact in this result is that eleven of these accessions took the church into seven new homes. Many others should have made the great decision but procrastination, Satan's best method, won in many lives. There is no promise of salvation tomorrow. Today alone is man's opportunity. If the opportunity remains open tomorrow, then it will not be tomorrow, for tomorrow will be today. Now is God's time. Better listen to God.

Our communion service was held on Easter Monday evening with a large attendance and a very helpful service.

Our May "Church Night" was well attended and all enjoyed the fine playlet given by the Sisterhood Girls and also the social hour that followed when new members of the Sunday school and of the church were given a hearty welcome and everybody met everybody else.

Our Ashland College Men's Glee Club gave us a very fine concert on May 6. The attendance was not as large as it should have been, owing to several local hindrances. The "California Quartet" rendered very helpful service in sermon and song on two evenings of the Pre-Easter services. Thanks and come again.

At our regular church business meeting two deacons were chosen, Ephraim Swineheart and Harvey S. Rutt, and two deaconesses, Mrs. Swineheart and Mrs. Rutt. Frank Hartzler was elected as Trustee. The pastor was given an unanimous call for another year. The Lord has been very gracious toward both people and pastor during the year and a half of this present pastorate. May we continue to follow his leadership and may he lead to greater victories for Christ and his church. We are enjoying our labors with this loyal people.

Quite a number responded quickly when an opportunity was given on Sunday, May 7 to contribute to the Brethren Home in its time of pressing need, as presented by Dr. J. Allen Miller in the Evangelist. A number said at once, "The Home must not be lost to our church." May the whole brotherhood feel just that way and evidence their feeling in prompt action.

Yours to be ready for his Coming Again,
G. C. CARPENTER.

ANKENYTOWN, OHIO

Greetings in the Name of our Lord. We read with interest some of the fine reports of our churches from week to week, and we feel so delighted with the Lord's blessings upon many of them that we want to share ours with you.

During the last year, and more particularly since the sufferings of the present day have been so heavy upon us, the Lord has been especially near to our Ankenytown church. The new devotion of our congregation really first manifested itself last fall at homecoming. Many of the Brethren who came from afar seemed so astounded at the wealth of precious young life that characterized our church. They commented about it in such a fashion as this: "Our Church is getting more religion in it." And we are so thankful that such progress can be noted.

Both young and old are completely given over to the interests of the Lord. A new zeal is expressing itself in every department of the work. The young are consecrated, for which we are thankful. The pastor now for two years has met them in an hour of Bible study each Sunday evening before the church service begins. They have studied the History of the Brethren Church, the doctrines of the Brethren Church, such as, Baptism, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Value and Importance of the Bible, the Doctrine of Sin, the Holy Spirit, etc. These have proven valuable to all and have given a new interest in the Word. A splendid choir has been formed of the young folks which furnishes inspiration to all. A new missionary enthusiasm has been imparted to all, and it first took root among the young people. The young people also have a lovely new class room in the basement, furnished with indirect lights. They are very proud of it indeed.

But let no one think the old folks are asleep. Through the terrible slump of the winter they remained faithful and loyal to the needs of the church. And they did not get behind. They are helpful and ready at all times. Our last two communions have indeed expressed the devotion to him who drew us to the service. The Official Board of the church is remarkably active. They have often met for evening meals at which sessions a new constitution for the church has been built, which already has been accepted by the church. Other matters of importance have been well handled by that Board. A committee for the beautification of the church grounds has functioned splendidly. We look to see great changes brought about by this group.

The Sunday school has taken new life and at present is studying, in connection with the regular lesson, a series of catechetical studies on "Sin", "The Life of Jesus", "The Apostles", "The Bible", etc.

We recently were richly blessed by the presence of that man of God, Brother Percy Yett. He imparted a great blessing to all of us, and we were enriched by his presence.

The Mansfield Brethren recently paid us a visit, which visit we returned last Sunday night. At present we are preparing for the Men's Glee Club of Ashland College.

Ankenytown is very much at work and is looking for the Coming of our blessed Lord. Such a hope makes Christianity worth while.

BELL LEEDY, Corresponding Secretary.

PLEASANT GROVE, IOWA

"What thou doest, do quickly," is our opinion concerning the plea of Brother J. Allen Miller. It is time for action not discussion. The situation can be discussed after you have done your duty. Pleasant Grove raised ten dollars on Mother's Day, which I believe is a good gift, considering Pleasant Grove of today.

This was the largest gift, as I recall, that Pleasant Grove ever raised for the Home at one time, and there is a reason. It was the only offering lifted that day. We cannot do what is necessary when the Brethren's Home offering and the Superannuated Ministers' offering are to be taken on the same day. We believe they should be lifted on different days, as neither should be neglected. We must remember those who kept the home fires burning when money was as hard to get as it is now, and when they were compelled to travel more miles than any preacher is compelled to travel today. And let's do our part to meet this need. And "what thou doest, do quickly."

partners died, and William became the sole owner of the business.

"He now resolved to keep his promise to the old captain; he made an honest soap, gave a full pound and instructed his book-keeper to open an account with the Lord, and carry one-tenth of all his income to that account. He prospered; his business grew; his family was blessed; his soap sold, and he grew rich faster than he had ever hoped. He then gave two-tenths, and prospered more than ever; then he gave three-tenths, then four-tenths, then five-tenths.

"He educated his family, settled all his plans for life, and gave all his income to the Lord's work. He prospered more than ever.

"This is the story of Mr. William Colgate, who has given millions of dollars to the Lord's cause, and left a name that will never die."

Perhaps in these instances may be found the true solution of a great question: How shall we get the means to give the gospel to a lost world? It is no longer a question of men to go, but of money with which to send them. And the money is in the hands of Christ's professed disciples—enough and more than enough for all demands. If wrong habit has so shut up their hearts that they cannot be persuaded to give it, let us try at least to educate the next generation differently. And may it not be that the best system of education which can be devised is this of training Christians to set apart one-tenth of their income for the treasury of the Lord?

inating. It knows that black is not white; nor white, black. It knows from sad experience that the promises of an office seeker is one thing, and his performance is quite another, and that if he is without character and honor there will be little performance. It knows well enough that a politician is one thing and a statesman is something else, and that whereas we have an appalling surplus of the former, there is an even more appalling dearth of the latter. And what is more, this new patriotism has finally decided that as long as our government is directed and administered by politicians mostly, it will mean the continuation of "fat years" for the classes and a continuation of "lean years" for the masses. The new patriotism thinks. It has cut its wisdom teeth. It knows some things well enough, having paid much for the information.

The new patriotism therefore being thoughtful and discriminating, recognizes fully that our nation and the world is in a tragic tangle—a staggering muddle. And no less does it recognize that the greatest task confronting us is not merely the process of recovering from the present depression, great indeed as that task may be; But the task of correcting and removing the causes that produced the depression. That's different. The depression is not a cause; It is a result. It is a malignant and terrible boil that took form on the surface of a desperately corrupt, and abused, and outraged national body. Study the underlying causes and we must see that there were bound to be boils and still more boils. As we sow we reap. We sowed "boil seed." So I say, the new patriotism is not blind to the enormity of the task, nor the extremely grave peril of the situation.

But, associated with the thoughtfulness of the new patriotism, I also like to think there is hopefulness. I mean that the heart of the new patriotism is a hoping, hopeful heart. I believe that the new patriotism vigorously holds that whereas right may now and then lose a battle, it never loses a war. This is not the first time black, forbidding clouds have hung over our nation. More than once in the past crises have arisen which tested to the utmost our nation's mettle. This is testing time now. Nor can I escape the notion that the most vital consideration at this moment is not, How hot is the fire? but, What kind of gold are we? What sort of men and women are we? How much do we really love our heritage? As much as they who made it possible? How much will we suffer and pay to redeem and save it? As much as they? Many of them died in order that the heritage might live.

And somehow the larger patriotism believes and hopes that enough men and women still live under our flag with the spirit, and loyalty, and devotion, and courage of our fathers to fight things through to the end, and that our nation will once more emerge from the wilderness, rescued, redeemed, chastened, and safe. Notwithstanding the laments and the wails from the disconsolate and despairing, the new patriotism believes that united thought, united protest, united voting, united agitation, and united demand has not lost a whit of its power and efficacy in the United States of America. The new patriotism is therefore hopeful. But it is a hopefulness that rises far above mere blind optimism. It sees the difficulties and barriers sure enough. But it hopes and believes there is a way out.

Thus I hasten to say in the next place that in the heart of the new patriotism there is an overwhelming consciousness as relates to God. And the high spot in that consciousness is that we must bring God back to his rightful place in our nation. The new patriotism readily and meekly admits that because we have more and more relegated God to a secondary place in our nation's life; and because we have forgotten and ignored his holy laws and precepts; and because we have blinded our eyes to God's gracious guidance, and hardened our hearts against his wise and blessed restraints, we are where we are today. A forsaken and a forgotten God has been followed by the rule of gold. Placing the things we live by, above the things we live for: emphasizing and magnifying mere things, at the neglect of the unfading values and interests, we have become viciously materialistic, with the dollar mark as the symbol of success. Brotherhood, human worth, human rights sympathy, mutual helpfulness—all of these have been all too much elbowed off to the side by greed for gain, and profit, and dividends, and position. And thus the new patriotism pleads that we must bring the Ark of the Covenant home. We must bring God back to our nation, and as a nation we must bring ourselves back to him. Our nation's gravest ill is Godlessness. That ill being corrected, many other lesser ills will find ready adjustment.

I hastily conclude by proposing that if we bring God back to the place he wants to occupy in our nation, and then if we cooperate with him and follow his holy leading, we will in the truest sense honor our heroic dead. At the same time, we will be giving the most eloquent and practical proof of our worthiness of our priceless heritage. And we will be pursuing the one and only safe course which will enable us to preserve and pass on to others, this land which is our land, and which we would exchange for no other—the land which we want to be the land of our children's children. God leading—true citizenship, the new patriotism following, and working together with him. Gratis, Ohio.

The only duties that we should forget are those which we have already done.

The successful man is not he who never has had disappointments, but he who, in spite of them, has labored on.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FAIR HAVEN, OHIO

Communion service of the Fair Haven church on Sunday evening, May 28th. The usual invitation is extended.

RAYMOND GINGRICH, Pastor.

"ON TO DAYTON"

Here it is again. Soon time for another State Conference. Yes, a State Conference. But not just another Conference. This time, it is a Conference that will be different. Different in nature of program, place and occasion.

The program is different because of the occasion and place. This Conference celebrates 50 years of church history of our own faith in Ohio. And the Conference is to be held amid surroundings appropriate to the occasion.

So every faithful Brethren of Ohio who can, will plan to be in Dayton the week of June 20 to 23. Yes, the Dayton church is large and they are well able to care for every need of a large Conference. But let us surprise them. Let us turn out in large numbers. We must make it a banner Conference. So let us begin now to boost and plan to attend.

The Secretary,

L. V. KING.

NOTICE!

Conference Credentials will soon be sent out to every pastor of Ohio. If you do not receive your blanks within a week or do not receive a sufficient number, please write the Secretary.

Pastors, have you forgotten? There are still 9 churches who have not sent in their Statistical Report. Surely we want a 100% report at this the most important and best Conference yet. Save the Secretary extra time to rewrite you and Conference money, by responding immediately.

L. V. KING, Secretary.

GENERAL CONFERENCE PROGRAM NOTICE

All organizations and individuals who have been asked to have a part on the National Conference Program are asked to send their programs and subjects in immediately. All have been written to,—some several times. If subjects and programs are not in by June 1st the Executive Committee will supply the same. OBSERVE EDUCATIONAL DAY ON SUNDAY, JUNE 4

PURPOSE

To maintain the excellent standards and recognition now held by your college.

Graduates of 1932

GOALS

An offering of $2,500
The enrollment of 50 new Brethren students in Sept. 1933

REMEMBER THAT

The success of all church interests depends vitally upon the maintenance of the College and Seminary.

This offering goes into the common treasury of Seminary and College.

Your college is without value, if, for lack of your support, its well-earned recognition should be removed.

The low tuition paid by Brethren students pays but part of the cost of their education.

Every dollar you give is equivalent to twenty dollars invested in Endowment Funds.

Your gift goes to a growing cause, not a dying one.

HOW TO OBSERVE THE DAY

1. It is suggested that the Pastor might discuss the Relationships of Ashland College and Seminary to the progress of the Brethren Movement.
2. The Ashland College Alumni and former students should point out to recent High School graduates the many advantages of attending their own church school.
3. Laymen and friends of the school can show their faith, loyalty and confidence by contributing a substantial offering.

The success of Brethrenism depends upon your continued responses to all its vital needs.

Send all offerings direct to: The Bursar, Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio.

PENTECOST

The church's Birth in power

The Holy Spirit

Spirit of God, in love descend,
And make our hearts Thy place of rest;
In all our need a steadfast Friend,
To fill our store with gifts the best;

To cleanse our souls with holy fire
From sordid strains that guilt imparts;
And with Thy heavenly power inspire,
Our languid zeal, our fainting hearts;

To lift our minds to nobler things
Than earth from all its best can show—
The wealth that flies on speedy wings;
The fleeting joys, like sparks that glow!

Come in the hour of sore distress,
When deep the heart for comfort sighs;
And, with Thy soothing kindness,
The tear-drops wipe from weeping eyes!

"Lo, I am with you to the end";
Thus speaks the promise of our Lord.
O Spirit of the Christ, descend,
Fulfill to us the gracious word.

THE Ignorance of Scholars?

Some time ago a friend of mine, a university graduate, sent me an interesting specimen of scholarly ignorance. Her university had inaugurated a News Bulletin for the purpose of informing its alumni about "books which educated men and women should be reading." The University Staff of reviewers were referred to as "authoritative and unprejudiced;" members of the faculty "who have worked long in these fields and who are well acquainted with the history and present achievements in them."

Now with this background of praise, I submit one of the first book reviews made by the university staff. The book under review was on the Roman Emperor Nero, one of these modern attempts to rehabilitate the reputation of a historic scoundrel. Concerning this book the reviewers speak as follows:

"Nero has been damned alike by secular authors and the author of the Book of Revelations. This is a valiant and interesting attempt to paint the other side of the picture of an artist on the throne who tried to lift his people to higher things." (Emphasized type is mine).

Two things should be noted: First, there is no book of "Revelations" in the Bible. The last book of the New Testament is the book of "Revelation." Second, the name of the Emperor Nero is not even mentioned by the author of Revelation.

If the reviewers do not know any more about the book on Nero than they do about the Book of Revelation, they do not know much. We have learned not to expect much sympathy for the Bible from a certain type of "modern scholarship." But they might read it, at least once, to find out what it really says.

WHAT is Intelligence?

According to an index of "cultural intellectual development" prepared by Frederick Osborn of the American Museum of Natural History, the Pacific Coast states have reason to congratulate themselves. Washington has the highest rating, with California second, and Oregon fourth. The lowest are Mississippi and Louisiana. Ohio stands tenth in the list.

The ratings are based on intelligence tests and other criteria. Doubtless, there is something tangible and objective to be learned from such tests. States in the lower brackets, however, should not feel too badly. Men are not wholly agreed about the matter of intelligence. What is it? There are quite a number of scholars in America who do not believe there is a God. Yet by the intelligence tests ordinarily used, these men would rate very high. The Bible calls them "fools."

It might be well to include in the intelligence tests a question something like this: DO YOU BELIEVE THERE IS A GOD? Those who answer it negatively could then be placed in the moron group, where they belong. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge" (Prov. 1:7). Too often today the fear of the Lord is regarded as the last refuge of superstition. Men are trying to build the Temple of Wisdom without any foundation.

When some of us were children, and failed to learn our lessons, we were sometimes kept after school and required to write the correct answer several hundred times on the blackboard. Our knowledge concerning the place of future punishment is limited to the Revelation in the Word. We know it will be terrible and everlasting. Dante, who was gifted with a vast imagination, could doubtless have fixed up a very interesting and instructive punishment for the modern atheists. Perhaps he would have put dunce-caps on all of them and had them writing on a blackboard throughout all eternity the sentence "THERE IS A GOD."

One thing is certain—the day of the scoffing atheists will end in eternal disaster. And it may be soon.

THE Terrible Dilemma

With the advance of scientific discovery and application, the fears of men have been aroused lest the products and machinery of science be used to destroy civilization in one final holocaust of war. Such fears have not been groundless. We know what happened in the last war. And we also know that the nations of the world are getting ready for the coming conflict.

Recently, the League of Nations appointed a special committee to investigate the possibility of regulating the chemical industry so as to prevent its products being used in war. The committee, after investigation, reported that "any regulation of the chemical industry for the purposes of preventing substances capable of twofold use being produced with a view to war would be impracticable."

"Impracticable!" On the one hand, you cannot stop the progress of science. On the other hand, there is no present way to prevent the products of science from being used to destroy the nations. This is the dilemma of civilization.

The only way of escape is Christ.

LEARNING the Lesson

Owen D. Young, financier and author of the German reparations plan which has not worked, recently said in a speech that "The whole world is learning that treaties, constitutions, ordinances and bonds are good only to the extent that they are made coincident with basic human relationships which have the approval of that sensitive, quick acting, and dominant power, the public opinion of the world."

The lesson may seem to be very difficult when phrased the way Mr. Young has it. But the idea is really very simple. It means that men will keep their contracts and nations will keep their treaties IF THEY WANT TO KEEP THEM. When you have learned this lesson, you will begin to understand why the present world-order can offer humanity nothing certain.

Men can foretell the weather measurably well. But no psychologist on earth can tell you in advance whether the man who borrows money from you will pay it, or whether the government that signs a solemn agreement will honor it.

SOME More Rockefeller Money

Having already given ten million dollars, John D. Rockefeller, Jr. recently added fifteen million more for the purpose of developing the national parks of America.

No finer use could be made of the Rockefeller millions. Christian people have gotten so that they shudder every time the young Rockefeller gives any money to the cause of religion, because it is generally for FALSE RELIGION.

The wealthy divinity school of Chicago University was endowed by Rockefeller money, a center of infidelity. The late lamented Inter-Church World Movement was in part financed by the same source, and the churches are still reaping the harvest of thistles. The more recent anti-Christian Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry was a Rockefeller project. The temple of religion from which the errors of the Fosdick Cult go out to the world was backed by the same fortune.

Many will devoutly hope that more of the Rockefeller money may be put into the important work of preserving the beauties of Nature and making them available to more people. The revelation of Nature is limited. Nature can only tell you that there is a God, and that he is a Being of power. But Nature, at least, disseminates no lies.

You will find it more edifying to go out in the forest and listen to the Voice of Nature, than to sit at home and listen over the radio to the voice of Mr. Fosdick.

A $100,000 Bible

A private collector at an auction in London pays one hundred thousand dollars for a paper copy of the famous Gutenberg Bible. It was the first book produced from moveable type, required five years to complete, and only forty-one known copies are in existence.

If you think that a high price for a Bible, look at the Bible that you have in your home (or ought to have). Your Bible, or any other Bible, no matter how badly worn or poorly bound, is worth infinitely more than $100,000. Look at it, read it, meditate upon it, obey it, believe it. You are rich, if you have a Bible. Without a Bible, you are poor.

The Blessed Ministry of the Holy Spirit

The mind turns naturally at this season of the year to thoughts of the Holy Spirit. The Roman Catholic Church is celebrating this year the Nineteen Hundredth Anniversary of Pentecost, while Protestant Christendom celebrated that memorable event in 1930. But that first mighty empowerment of the church and resultant evangelistic movement is significant enough to merit an annual celebration. Of course the Holy Spirit needs to be meditated upon and his ministry understood and appropriated continually, but this season gives added significance to this gracious dispensation. To far too many people the Holy Spirit is little more than a universal, impersonal power and has no meaning to them individually or collectively. Many a Christian is weak in life and impoverished in thought because he has given no consideration to, and made no use of, the blessed ministry of the Holy Spirit. And many a church is without power and influence because it recognizes not, nor honors the third person of the Trinity.

The Holy Spirit a Person

Therefore at the very outset we must bear in mind the fact that the Holy Spirit is indeed a person, the third Person of the Godhead. This is made clear by many Scripture references to him. In 1 John 5:7 we read: "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one". How could language be made clearer than that? Surely if the Father is a person, and if the Word (or the Son) is a person, so also is the Holy Ghost. And the three are placed together on an equality; the three are God, therefore the Holy Spirit is God. The baptismal formula (Matt. 28:19) requires the honoring of the Holy Spirit along with the Father and the Son, thus giving recognition to his personality and at the same time to his membership in the blessed Trinity. From the record of the tragic experience of Ananias with the Holy Spirit we have testimony borne to his personality and his deity: "But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost? ... thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God" (Acts 5:3, 4). Ananias lied to a person and that person was God the Holy Ghost. Many other references might be cited, but these suffice to prove the point. Therefore we can properly speak of the "ministry of the Holy Spirit," whereas we could not, if he were only a force, or power.

Divine Presence Realized in Him

The divine presence is realized in the Person of the Holy Spirit. Nothing more fundamental can be said about his ministry than that. Micah in his prophecy concerning the Messiah, said his "goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." And the Lord himself said: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:20). That promise is being fulfilled, and will continue to be fulfilled during this dispensation in the person of the Holy Spirit. For Jesus said to his disciples: "And I will pray the Father, and he will give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; ... he dwelleth in you, and shall be in you." When one of the disciples wondered why Jesus would manifest himself unto them and not unto the world, he replied, "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and will make our abode with him" (John 14:16, 17, 23). And the abiding of that divine presence will be in the person of the Holy Spirit; the triune God represented in the life of the Christian by the third member of the Godhead. This truth is further set forth in John 15:26 and 16:7, also Romans 8:9 and 11. In the latter reference Paul refers to the Holy Spirit's indwelling under the name of the "Spirit of God," the "Spirit of Christ," and the "Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead"—all meaning clearly the third person of the Trinity, whose presence overcomes the carnal, or fleshly nature. That, and many other things will result from the blessed presence of the Holy Spirit in the Christian.

Spirit's Witness to Christian

The indwelling Holy Spirit bears witness to the Christian's saved estate and his sonship to God the Father. Here is the blessed assurance as John received it: "And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us" (1 John 3:24). Paul tells the Galatians (4:4-6) that "God sent forth his Son, ... to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son (that is, the Holy Spirit) unto your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." To the Romans (8:16) Paul writes: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Only the Christian can have the Holy Spirit as an indwelling presence, for says John, speaking of "the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him (that is, the disciples of Christ know him); for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you" (John 14:17).

The Holy Spirit Teaches

The Holy Spirit teaches us, enriches our lives and leads us into the deeper things of God. And what a wide scope of truth his teaching involves! "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you" (John 14:26). Those are the words of Jesus. Hear him again: "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: ... and he will show you things to come" (John 16:13). The Spirit teaches us to pray and intercedes in our behalf. "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." Who should not be able to get the desires of his heart across to God with such help! But still greater is the assurance in the next verse: "And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God" (Rom. 8:26, 27). Consider what that means! If we pray with the direction of the Holy Spirit, we pray "according to the will of God", and that kind of prayer cannot go unanswered. What a challenge to the church of Christ! Not only so, but the Spirit is a means of being "strengthened with might ... in the inner man" (Eph. 3:16). And, speaking of "the things which God hath prepared for them that love him," Paul says, "But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God" (1 Cor. 2:9, 10).

Sanctifier of Life

The Holy Spirit sanctifies the life that it indwells and influences the walk mightily for righteousness and peace and purity. And thus should it do. That is his desire and aim. As Paul says, "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal" (1 Cor. 12:7). And that is bound to be the result, if our attitude is one of sincerity. "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh" (Gal. 5:16). That is as certain as that day follows night. If we have the Spirit really and truly dwelling within us, we shall soon be showing forth the fruit of the Spirit. And the "fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." Unless these qualities are growing into our lives, we are mere pretenders. Let us not pretend to be spiritually minded, unless we are able to show some spirituality in our conduct. "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit" (Gal. 5:22, 23, 25). Otherwise we shall be found grieving the Spirit, against which Paul admonishes the Ephesians. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God," he says, "whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." But we shall be doing that very thing—grieving him, if we allow "corrupt communication" to proceed out of our mouths and "evil speaking", and if "bitterness, and wrath and anger, and clamour" have place in our hearts (Eph. 4:29-31).

All too many church members are causing grief to the Spirit by their attitude and walk, whereas they should rather be allowing themselves to be yielded to the purifying and empowering influence of the Spirit. Would that it might be said of all of us, as Paul was able to say of the Corinthians, that notwithstanding the sins of the past—and they had been monstrous sinners, some extortioners, some thieves and some worse—"but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God" (1 Cor. 6:11). Therefore have they given heed to his challenging question: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" (1 Cor. 3:16). It applied to them in a dozen different ways, as it applies to us—the care of our bodies, the control of our acts and the guarding of our thoughts. Paul was not calling the people to a standard that he himself was not willing to meet. He had himself been "sanctified by the Holy Spirit" (Rom. 15:16). And in that he was following the example of his blessed Lord Jesus, "Who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God" (Heb. 9:14), and who said to his Father, "For their sakes I sanctify myself" (John 17:19). That will the Holy Spirit do for us if we permit him to work his blessed ministry in our lives.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

There will be no paper published on June 24th. Any one having important announcements or news that should be published before that date should have copy in the hands of the editor not later than June 16th.

Dr. K. M. Monroe, secretary of Ashland Seminary, acknowledges receipt from Dr. Martin Shively of an almost complete set of Brethren annuals and invites some one to complete the set, or give another. See his note in the "News from the Field" department.

Professor Stuckey informs us that the Shipshewana Young People's Camp will be held at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, July 17-23, inclusive. The Indiana Bible Conference is usually held in connection with the Camp activities, but we have not yet received definite word regarding it.

Dr. Bame, our Sunday School editor, is using his splendid talents for the inspiration of young people in Commencement addresses (he has nine such addresses scheduled), and in defense of Prohibition as time permits, under the auspices of the Anti-Saloon League. Sunday, May 28th, was spent in Dayton, Ohio, where he gave temperance addresses both morning and evening, the evening message being delivered in our own Brethren church, of which Brother R. D. Barnard is pastor.

The program of the Southeastern district conference is found in this issue, the conference to be convened in the Bethlehem church near Harrisonburg, Virginia, June 13 to 15, where Brother John F. Locke is pastor. For the benefit of pastors we are repeating the reminder of last week made on the request of the district secretary-statistician, that pastors who do not have their statistical reports in the hands of the statistician before conference time are excluded from voting, by order of conference.

Brother Homer Anderson, pastor of the church at Pleasant Grove, Iowa, writes that the outlook of that church is good, because they have a capable local leadership. That does, indeed, go a long way toward making success. He sounds the note of stewardship and a warning against robbing God. We need more pulpit and press utterances along that line. If we are to be a "Whole Gospel" church indeed, we must be continually stressing the importance of stewardship and tithing, as well as baptism and feetwashing.

Our readers will be glad to learn that Dr. L. S. Bauman and Prof. M. A. Stuckey have agreed to resume their Bible studies right soon. They were compelled to drop their writing for a time because of numerous other heavy duties. In a week or two they will be back in their departments. In the meantime the ever ready pen of Brother Humberd has been filling in with his studies on Revelation. We are indebted to him for his willingness to be of service at any time.

Mrs. Cyrus Myers, matron of the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana, gives a detailed report of moneys received and articles given for the use of the Home, which report will be published next week. We were impressed with the exactness and care for details with which Sister Myers does her work. The Home is evidently in good hands and the thriftiness and industry will eventually show fine results, if we mistake not. There is still need of generous response in gifts of money and articles of staple food.

Dr. R. R. Teeter writes in his Business Manager's Corner something about collections and paying bills. Most everybody has had some experience with being hard pressed during these times and just about everyone has had some experience with debts and is able to appreciate a creditor who is patient and considerate in his collections. When you have such a creditor, show him you appreciate his kindness by doing the best you can to meet your obligations promptly. That applies to churches as well as individuals. Brother Teeter is right—every congregation ought to have a hustling agent for the Evangelist, or more than one, if your congregation is large. And that agent ought to be a hustler and continually at it.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble writes an interesting letter from Africa, giving an account of all our missionaries on the field. The medical work taken care of has been unusually heavy on all the stations. At Yaloke 7,283 treatments were given to 1,357 patients in three months, while at Bassai an interesting feature of the work is the treatment of fourteen leper children, who are said to be making rapid progress. The health of our missionaries has been better than in former reports. Advancements are being made at all the stations. The Sunday attendance at Yaloke is given as 500 and "many" souls are accepting Christ. There are 61 preaching points and fifteen chapels being supplied by workers out from Yaloke. That shows a fine evangelistic spirit on the part of the native workers.

By the time these lines are before our readers, Prof. and Mrs. Alva J. McClain will be on their auto trip west for the summer, the Seminary year having closed. The first Sunday in June will find Brother McClain preaching in the morning in our church at Hudson, Iowa and in the evening at Waterloo, where Brother Riddle is pastor. After that they will be making their way on west, taking in some of nature's beautiful scenes in Wyoming, then dropping down to Colorado where they will see more of God's beautiful handiwork. It may be that he will find time to give us some observations from along the way. If so, we shall be glad to receive them. In July Prof. McClain is scheduled to give some Bible lectures at the Southern District Conference program.

The Ohio District Conference program is published this week in the news department. Both programs given space this week are full of promise of splendid inspiration and deserve a good crowd of delegates. The Ohio meet is at Dayton, Ohio, where the Brethren "Progressive" movement was organized fifty years ago and this conference is to take cognizance of Brethren achievements through this half century. It will be an especially significant conference for Ohio people, and should be largely attended. And the Dayton church is equipped to take care easily of the largest possible crowd we can muster. Brother R. D. Barnard is the pastor; Dr. Charles A. Bame is the moderator of the conference; Brother C. A. Stewart, the vice moderator; and Brother L. V. King, the secretary-statistician, who wants statistical reports from every church before conference convenes.

The Empowered Church and Her Message

By S. M. Whetstone

In this message on the above subject we want to emphasize the thought that all the Church has is her message. That is all she had at the beginning. When the Church started there was no "organization." The elaborate machine which has grown into what we today call the church did not exist. In the beginning the church was without rituals and creeds; these things, whether good or bad, have been worked out since. Yes, we may boast of our "Imposing Spectacles and Magnificent Programs," but she had none of these at the beginning. She was without money or schools, without books or religious press, without buildings, conventions or conferences. All this little group of men had was a MESSAGE.

Church Has Nothing but a Message

The fact is, all the Church has ever had is the message. She has sought much else, and often succeeded in finding many things, only to discover the folly of it all. She has sought the patronage and protection of the state, only to learn that a state-fed church cannot save a lost world. She has sought numbers, wealth and scholarship, only to discover that without the message these are only straw assets. She has sought to build stately church buildings only to see them become tombs of religion without the gospel.

ALL THAT THE CHURCH HAS TODAY IS HER MESSAGE! Silence that, and the Christian Church goes out of business. That message is dynamic. What the root is to the rose, the message is to the church. All of her "attractiveness" comes from the message. Let her faithfully proclaim that message and other matters are of minor importance.

Christ Behind the Message

Those early Christians "went out" with their message. They went up against a hostile world too. Theirs was anything but an easy task, but with nothing but the gospel they went out. Just why are we emphasizing this message by mentioning it so often? Why is it so important? THERE IS SOMETHING BACK OF THE MESSAGE! It is a message with a life behind it; the fairest and finest; the most beautiful and benevolent, the world has ever known. BEHIND THE GOSPEL IS CHRIST. Do not mistake,—the gospel is not merely something Jesus "said" or "taught" or "did." IT IS CHRIST HIMSELF. The message was an incarnation; its authority was sealed with his resurrection from the dead. It was written in the life-beats and heart-throbs of the Son of God.

A Message Experienced

It is a message with Christian experience behind it. These men were not telling a strange tale which they had read out of books; their message was out of their own lives. To them the gospel was not a great perhaps. You never hear them saying, "I think thus and so." Every one of them was able to say, "I KNOW WHOM I HAVE BELIEVED." You cannot stop the mouth of such a man. He may be burned at the stake, but the very flames will take up the song and carry it along. You may seal him in a stone tomb, but the message rings out "HE IS NOT HERE; HE IS RISEN."

It is a message with history's greatest moments behind it. Calvary is in this message. The world will never tire of the Cross and that story of Love that knew no bounds. It is the heart-story of the entire race. It is the story of the Cross-Crowned Hill and the Son of God dying to save the lost. Pentecost is also in that message. It is the message of power as well as love. The empty tomb is there too. Yes, it is a message of life as well as power and love; the message of him Who has conquered death. His Personal Return is there in that message. Not only does he save from the power of sin, but he will return to save us from the very presence of sin.

But No Experiment

The gospel message is no experiment. Wherever it has been faithfully preached results have followed. Just about all there is of value in human history is due to the influence of the gospel in the lives of men. This blessed message has been opposed and persecuted by men, but there is nothing more evident today than that all future human progress must be in line with the teachings of Jesus.

Such is the message Jesus wants us to give to this lost world. WHO WOULD WANT A BETTER? It is incarnated in the finest life the world has ever known; demonstrated in human experience; vindicated by two thousand years of conflict and achievement. IT IS A GLORIOUS MESSAGE. What a chance we have to proclaim it! That should set our very hearts on fire.

The Message Needs Proclamation

All the gospel needs is PROCLAMATION. It does not need proof. It proves itself. You don't need to prove the soil that grows the grain that feeds the world. You don't need to prove the spring that produces the water that quenches your thirst. Neither do you need to prove the gospel that quickens the soul and plants lasting joy in the heart of a lost soul. Brother, proclaim the message. "You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

James tells us to "contend earnestly for the truth once delivered to the saints," and our most vital contending consists in an adequate proclamation of that truth. It must be told. It must have a preacher. "How shall they hear without a preacher?" Yes, "it has pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." To human wisdom the method does seem foolish. How can God expect to reach a lost

I Could Pray, If--

By Rev. Ray Klingensmith, Pastor of Ankenytown Church and Student in Ashland Seminary

If my heart were right with God;
 If I had been reading my Bible as I should;
 If I had been doing personal work and had seen the need of it;
 If I had taken my Christian duties seriously enough to be burdened;
 If I had been a minister really accomplishing something;

If I had been a missionary with power;
 If I had victory in my life;
 If I were being used of God.

But since none of these characterize me I am still sitting around jealous of other folks, bemoaning my misfortunes and lack of time, trying to make folks think I'm living the Christian life. But remember, the life apart from prayer cannot be the Christian life, regardless of what fine things folks think about you. The history of the Christian Church centers around a few praying heroes of each age. They were the leaders who made permanent contributions to Christianity; the others thought they did. Only God can control life; only man through God can influence life for Heaven. Take your Bible and read again the stories of its central characters. They were men and women plus God; most of us are yet just men and women.

Study Abraham as he holds back the lifted arm of God ready to strike wicked Sodom! Behold Elijah praying a child to life, and sealing and opening the clouds! Observe Hezekiah adding fifteen years to his life and keeping Zion from being ploughed like a field! See Daniel invading the Holiness of Heaven and wresting secrets from God! Watch the Disciples in Jerusalem praying into birth the most powerful and glorious Force that was ever known to the world! Linger with McCheyne, Muller, Gribble, Torrey, then go to your own room and confess your greatest sin—which is the source of all others—prayerlessness. You thought no one would notice it; but your valueless life proclaimed it.

The other day I was called to the 'phone by a prominent person in town. "Do you know so and so"? "Yes, surely", was the reply. "Do you know that she is reported to a certain doctor to be crazy"? "No, of course not. For what reason"? "She has been seen going to pray oftener than the ordinary (prayerless) Christian, and her sister saw her praying the last thing as she went to sleep, and in the morning when she awoke beheld the girl was praying again." So of course she must be crazy! What a tragedy in Christendom when one Christian judges the other one crazy because one believes in and practices prayer! This "crazy" girl's prayers had converted her Catholic mother, influenced a whole church and ministered to dozens of sick in the community. I thought as I went down to see about it: "Dear God, give us more "Crazy" Christians whose lives are different enough and prayerful enough to be noticed. As Paul put it—"fools for Christ's Ashland, Ohio.

world with anything so dull and stale and shiftless as man? Certainly he will never do it if he is depending upon the gifts of the preacher alone. The power is in the message, not the preacher. It is still "just a voice" for which God asks. All our Lord asked his disciples to do was to "Go into all the world and PROCLAIM THE MESSAGE." That is all he asks today. He seeks a voice. It was for that purpose that he gave to man the marvelous gift of speech. He was preparing for the proclamation of the message. What a surrender if our lips be dumb. Shall we be eloquent in trade and politics, but mute when God needs lips?

Church Must Stick to Message

IF THE CHURCH IS TO WIN, IT MUST STICK TO ITS MESSAGE. If people are to be saved, there is but one way to get results; it is the gospel. Jesus did not commission his disciples to be moral reformers or social agitators. He did not encourage them to enter politics and straighten the crooked and cleanse the foul. HE SENT THEM OUT TO PREACH THE GOSPEL. Paul had a splendid opportunity to discuss slavery when he sent Onesimus back to Philemon, but he said not a word about it; for he had a bigger message. He had the gospel. He knew that when a man once received that gospel message all other things would come right. The church must stick to her message. That is all that she needs to do. The church has the best thing in all the world for man's soul. There is nothing that can compare with it. It is when the church goes out on side issues that she encounters failure. If the church is engaged in entertaining people, the theater can easily put her out of business. If she is trying to give the daily news, the press can outdistance her. If her goal is social reform, or civic righteousness, there are clubs organized for that purpose. BUT WHEN IT COMES TO THE MESSAGE THAT SHOWS A LOST SON HOW TO GET RIGHT WITH GOD; THE CHURCH STANDS WITHOUT A COMPETITOR. The supreme task of the church is to proclaim the gospel.

Contents of the Message

Now let us consider some of the contents of this message.

First, INDIVIDUAL SALVATION IS THERE. Right here is where we must start. We shall never get a better world until we get a better man, and we will never have a better man until he is redeemed. Unregenerate man is just the same as he has always been. He is just as cold and brutal as he was two thousand years ago. It is still true that his deepest need is salvation, to get into fellowship with God, to secure the forgiveness of sin, and to be born again. The church has the message of salvation, and she is the only organization that has it.

Second, IT IS THE MESSAGE THAT GOD IS OUR FATHER. It was that that Jesus came to reveal; "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." It is a great discovery when a man realizes that God is his Father.

Third, IT IS THE MESSAGE THAT MEN ARE BROTHERS. Human brotherhood will never come to stay except it come in the gospel way. For the bond of brotherhood is more than to have the same color, or speech, or to belong to the same race.

Fourth, IT IS A MESSAGE OF HOPE to all who are fallen. No wonder John the Baptist was content to be

Music and the Great Hymns of the Church

(NUMBER IV)

By Robert E. Kline, Organist at National Cash Register and the Dayton Brethren Church

The power of music over human emotions was recognized long before we have any trace of its beginnings as an art.

Its direct appeal is to the auditory nerve, but it penetrates deeper and reaches an aesthetic faculty called the soul. The early Fathers of the Church frequently bear witness to the power and value of music. In the writings of the Greek philosophers we also find the most striking testimony to the ethical influence of music. Passages from later authors and thinkers strengthen the claim that music exercises a great influence over the heart. The delight in music is universal, it is discovered in all ages and in all races. The very youngest child is lulled and cheered by song before it can understand spoken words, and often little children can sing parts of a melody before they can frame sentences. The tone language is the universal language understood by all. The accents of joy, of grief, of melancholy and of worship are unmistakable everywhere and through them men and women can find a common understanding, who cannot so much as exchange an intelligible word.

Music was the language of those first harbingers of that peace and good will which is to prevail upon all the earth. Why should it not, in these days of misunderstanding and strife be made one of the means of promoting the universal brotherhood of man.

Prayer has played an important part in inspiration for many great hymns the Church enjoys today. The life story of John Henry Newman, composer of the old favorite hymn "Lead Kindly Light", is one of interest. This hymn has been translated into many different languages and has been sung all over the globe.

John Henry Newman was born in London, England, on February 21, 1801. His father was a banker and was so engrossed in business that he had very little time to spend with his son and left the rearing of him to his mother. She was a French Protestant—a devout and godly woman. She brought him up to take great delight in the Bible and to read books of Calvinistic theology. He entered into a deep religious life at the early age of fifteen, the impression of which never left him during his long, successful career here on earth.

His college course at Oxford was not extraordinary and did not result in great scholastic distinction, partly because just before his graduation his father failed in business, and it was necessary for him to hurriedly finish his course which he did at the early age of nineteen. Two years later he was successful in winning a scholarship in the School of Theology at Oxford which gave him the privilege of associating with the brilliant and intellectual ministers of that day.

In order to understand his career which followed, we must pause for a moment to consider some of the conditions that were existing in England at this particular time.

A new age was dawning—an age of liberalism. Men had long believed in the divine rights of kings and of priests and of a favored aristocracy. From that they had reacted and were then thinking more in terms of equal rights as man to man. Besides, the church had been brought into a condition of degradation. The services were unparalleled for lifelessness and wretchedness. Many ministers drew their salaries from the Church's endowments who did no spiritual work—in fact they were incapable of doing spiritual work and religion suffered greatly in consequence. Under such circumstances it was certain that the Church would be attacked, and it was equally certain that many friends of the Church would spring forth in her defense.

When the conflict did come, John Henry Newman was 32 years old, full of intellectual vigor and swayed by a mighty enthusiasm but physically unfit to enter into the fight.

Great events were happening in England and abroad. There was a revolution in France. The great reform agitation was going on in England. The vital question was, How were they to keep the Church from being liberalized?

At this time John Henry Newman was suffering from an attack of illness and was ordered by his doctor to Southern Europe. The conflict of the Church of England was solely in his mind and reluctantly did he leave. While on the Island of Sicily he was stricken with a deadly fever and begged to be returned to England, saying there was work for him there. For want of a vessel he was delayed in Palermo for three weeks. At last he started joyously on his homeward journey to England and it was on this memorable journey that he wrote the beautiful hymn of, "Lead Kindly Light". It was a passionate appeal for divine direction, uttered by a troubled and earnest soul. His prayer was answered. Rev. Newman was led to do a mighty work for the Church of England.

"Lead Kindly Light" is a great favorite with very many people, being a hymn that touches the heart and expresses more or less the experience of many souls.

When the Parliament of Religions met in Chicago several years ago, the representatives of every creed known to man found two things on which they were agreed. They could all join in the Lord's Prayer and they could all sing "Lead Kindly Light."

just a "voice." No wonder Paul said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel."

It is a great thing to be a voice for God. Yes, just to be a voice crying in the wilderness, sounding the message that changes the wilderness into a garden, is to engage in a great work. This is the door that opens to the church. This is the challenge before the church just now. "PREACH THE WORD."

The Devil in the Newspapers

A few days after the fateful April 7, when real beer flowed once more in our fair land, we picked up a newspaper with a cartoon on its first page that attracted us. It was in four sections and featured a lion and a mouse. The lion was named "Depression Terrors" and the mouse had a tag attached to its tail bearing the words "Our Fears." In the first section, the lion was chasing the mouse, emitting a terrifying roar, and the mouse was running to cover. In the second section, the mouse was nearing a refuge among beer barrels labeled 3.2 per cent, and the tag had dropped from its tail. In the third section, the mouse had turned on its enemy and from among the beer barrels was growling at the lion. The lion astonished and alarmed, had halted, and in the fourth section is seen to be running to cover and the mouse after it.

Turning to the back page of the paper, we saw a picture of a group of good looking men and women at a race course. They were standing before a booth with the sign "A New Deal," and one of the young men was drinking from a beer bottle. The picture carried the title, "President's Son Quenches Thirst with the New Deal Beer." His father, the President, sponsored the New Deal beer."

Just below that picture was one of another group standing by a vehicle loaded with beer. The central figure was Jean Harlow, the platinum blonde, and the title read, "Actress Christens First Truck of Beer at Los Angeles Brewery. The brewery gave a party at which employees of a dry newspaper were not admitted."

This photography furnished a setting for a display article on the first page of the paper adjacent to the cartoon, and with the subtitle: "Controversy over Kick Settled." The article reported an analysis by a federal chemist, showing that no 3.2 per cent beer had been produced in Chicago. The average of the products of Chicago's seven breweries was found to be only 2.8 per cent of alcohol by weight!

Could anything be conceived better calculated to influence youth? A harmless beverage, socially popular, commended by the highest governmental authority in the land and counteracting depression terrors!

We speak of it as "the Devil in the newspapers," not that we charge either editors or publishers with design, for doubtless they never thought about it in such a light. Nevertheless, as Shakespeare says,

"There is a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will."

The bard was thinking of the God of heaven, but his language also fits the god of this world. There is one mind back of all the devilry in the earth, and that is the mind of the Devil himself. Happy the man who is not ignorant of his devices!—Moody Monthly.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

CHURCH BUDGETS

The following appeared in a daily paper:

"With its receipts decreased twenty-five per cent in the last fiscal year, the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., as represented by its General Council, outlined new and reduced budgets. The Council considered ways and means to raise $10,000,000 for educational work, including colleges and pensions. They decided to continue foreign mission work on its present financial basis, but to cut home missions $1,250,000. The Board of Christian Education received a budget reduction of thirty-two per cent, or approximately $300,000. The budget will total about $12,000,000. Last year it was $15,000,000."

A PREDICTION THAT WILL BE REALIZED

The American Business Men's Prohibition Foundation predicts a triple consequence of re-legalized beer, if by a miracle, it should be approved by the United States Supreme Court. (1) We predict that, if legitimized, the beer trade will speedily achieve its old dominance in politics, once more establish its program of wholesale bribery of officials and party organizations in all wet industrial centers and states thereby controlled, and, as ever in the past, will resurrect its weapons of boycott and intimidation of all opponents, wherever its activities are challenged. (2) We predict that beer advertising in press, radio and movies will become a nauseating stench to the great majority of decent American citizens, a nuisance that will disgust readers, audiences and listeners alike and multiply irritations and difficulties for all legitimate business publicity. (3) We predict that under cover of a re-legalized brewing trade, there will creep back, willy-nilly, all the evils of the old time liquor traffic and that it will be found impossible to safeguard society from the returning pestilence of hard liquors, until beer has been once more legally, and this time finally, banned and deprived of government sanction and protection.

THE CHURCH PRESS

Two of our contemporaries in the religious press come to us this week in attenuated form. They have found the pasturage of religious journalism nourishing to the spirit but not stimulating to the circulation nor palatable to the pocketbook. The Commonweal (Roman Catholic) has reduced its page size, as did The Living Church a year ago, and has launched an appeal for a thousand "silent partners" to give, raise, or pledge $26.00 each for the continuance of the paper. The American Church Monthly (Anglo-Catholic) has reduced its bulk from eighty pages to forty-eight.

There seems to be a new article of faith that has been adopted by Christians of every name: "I believe that the religious press can survive indefinitely without visible means of support." The higher criticism of economics is rapidly proving that belief to be without adequate foundation.—The Living Church.

"BUY DRY"

A group of ministers of Christian churches in Cincinnati planned to lunch together. They went to a favorite restaurant. As they prepared to be seated, one of them asked whether the proprietor sold beer here. The management answered delightedly in the affirmative. The ministers declared that they would go elsewhere. They hid themselves to another restaurant and put the same question, with the same result. They continued moving until they found a place that did not serve the stuff about which the noble politicians in Washington lied. As one of the preachers stated to a proprietor, he "had not been accustomed to eat in a saloon and did not propose to begin now." (Perhaps it should be noted that one preacher who boasts of his liberality and interest in social reform tired out quickly and settled down to patronize one of the beer dispensers, while his fellows went on to find a beerless eating place).

W. S. Abernethy, of the Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., has given the dries a slogan. "Buy Dry." The W. C. T. U. is happy to take it up. It is quite legitimate. It is purely from mercenary motives that the merchants and restaurant proprietors are selling beer. Let them know that we can fight on that battleground too.

The great question is whether the dries have the courage of their convictions. It is not easy to participate in such a boycott. It often costs something. Let the dries demonstrate what possibilities of consecration and sacrifice they possess.—Christian Standard.

INDIANA BEER LAW HELD ILLEGAL

Two courts have held the Indiana beer law illegal, not on the ground of alcoholic content, but upon the ground that the manufacture and sale of a brew made legal by the United States Congress was not subject to the regulatory control of a state. The courts therefore held that the law passed by the state legislature to regulate the manufacture and sale of the brew made legal by congress was a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment which provides that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of any citizen According to this ruling, there could be no more control of the manufacture and sale of 3.2 cent beer than of any other commodity. However, there are those who hold that in providing 3.2 beer the congress and President violated their oaths of office, since beverages of the prescribed alcoholic content have been proved by scientific tests to be intoxicating.—The Presbyterian Advance.

A TRAGIC MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE

Georgians were shocked last week when the newspapers carried the confession of James Stark, Negro, that he killed Mrs. Robert Coleman, for which crime her husband, Robert Coleman, was tried, convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment.

Upon Stark's admission that he killed Mrs. Coleman, the courts and the Governor moved quickly to release the unfortunate man.

But the Governor's full pardon did not restore the four years he spent in Bellwood convict camp; it did not erase the scars that false accusation and imprisonment seared into his soul; and it did not compensate for the service he rendered the state.

There ought to be a way out of this barbarous business of sending men to death and to long terms of imprisonment on circumstantial evidence. If this is impossible then the state ought to pay a staggering sum to the wronged party or relatives. The Governor is on the right track. He says: "Other states which have wrongfully imprisoned a man have helped him get a new start in life. I believe that the Georgia legislature will appropriate a reasonable sum to this poor man." The pity is, it cannot be made so heavy that those responsible for this miscarriage of justice would feel it. Georgia's record is not improved by this latest tragic failure of her courts to place the crime where it belongs.—The Christian Index.

And Georgia's record is not unique. We doubt if any state in the Union is free to cast the first stone. Miscarriage of justice is all too widespread in connection with every degree of crime, but it is especially serious when it concerns such serious crimes as murder. Circumstantial evidence alone is too untrustworthy on which to rest conviction in such cases.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humberd

(Study Number Twenty-one)

Thirteen Months of Misery

Satan and his demons are now free, but will later be chained and held in the bottomless pit for a thousand years (Rev. 20:3). Then he will be set free again for, "a little season", to test those who have been born during the Kingdom Age. So with these four angels. Somewhere and at some time they sinned and were chained. They are still bound while God is working out his present plans for the human race. But God has use for just such trials as they can produce and at the proper moment he will turn them loose again for a short season—thirteen months.

When it speaks of a time (one year) and times (two years) and a half time (half of a year), we add, knowing that it means three and one-half years, (Ch. 12:14) or the same as twelve hundred and sixty days (Ch. 12:6) or the same as forty and two months (Ch. 13:5). So here, a day and a month and a year (Ch. 9:15), may mean thirteen months. This is over twice as long as the locusts were permitted to torment man (Vs. 5).

Death Everywhere

When these four great fallen sons of light spring from their unloosed chains, they lead an army two hundred million strong. When General Lee is said to have marched, it means that his whole army marched, so here, when these great magnates of evil are turned loose, the fallen creatures that are under their command are loosed also.

Under the torment of the locusts, men desired to die. Now they get their full of death. It is death, death everywhere, until one-third of the human race has perished. That would be some five times the population of the United States.

Think of living for thirteen months, subject any moment to be horrified, stifled and scorched by these horrible creatures. Think of your friends and relatives suffering and dying daily, stung by these infernal monsters of hell that swarm about, day and night. Certainly no Christian should be without a prayer list, praying daily for the unsaved.

Supernatural Cavalry

There are such things as supernatural horses. Elisha was protected at Dothan by a mountain "full of horses and chariots of fire" (2 Kings 6:17). Of course they were celestial horses, while here under the sixth trumpet, we have infernal cavalry of the opposite realm. We cannot imagine the horror and misery that these death dealing creatures will cause as they smother and choke and burn people with their fire and smoke and brimstone (Vs. 8).

There are hundreds of millions of men left, who will have opportunity to repent but such is the hardness of the human heart—"they repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils. . . . neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts" (Vs. 20, 21). What a catalogue of wickedness is this description of a world gone mad against its God.

Abounding Demon Worship

There is abounding demon worship. Paul tells us that in the latter days some shall depart from the faith (leave the church) and give heed to seducing spirits (turn to spiritism) (1 Tim. 4:1). It is indeed striking that spiritism, today, claims ninety percent of their adherents from the church. After the true church is caught out, this spirit of demon worship will go on and on to a terrible climax, until the three frog like demons will actually be able to persuade men that they can win in a battle with the Lord of Lords and King of Kings himself (Rev. 16:13).

Dangerous Practices

Little do people realize the danger in Ouija boards and other means of prying into the secrets of the unknown. Murder will be the order of the day, and sorceries will abound on every hand.

We often read with wonder and amusement at the strange power that the heathen medicine man can wield over his victims, while at the same time a few mysterious movements and strange words can "blow out fire", "stop blood", "remove warts" and even cure the "short growth".

Sorcery and Charming

I am not one to deny the healing power of these things. There is no doubt about them, they do cure, but we are warned to have nothing to do with "an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, etc." (Deut. 18:10). "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church" (James 5:14) is the admonition for a Christian.

Among these sorceries, we might class the great demand, in our day, for drugs, intoxicants, narcotics and cosmetics to increase the love attraction.

Neither do these people repent of their fornication. It does not say anything about adultery. Fornication is the sin of the unmarried, while adultery is an act of the married. Here is a hint that marriage has been done away with entirely and people live together somewhat like companionate marriage and let the state care for their children, if they have any at all.

Abounding Dishonesty

It will also be such a time of abounding dishonesty that even these terrific judgments will not drive them to repent of their thefts. In our time there are many forms of theft, some of which go in high class circles of society. Our very food must be protected by pure food laws to keep some profiteer from poisoning us; the government must provide a standard of weights and measurements and keep a zealous eye upon the trade; every animal passing through the slaughter house must bear the government stamp to assure the consumer that it was not diseased.

The Doubter's Dialogue

By Clarence E. McCartney

"The Bible"

Doubter: It is full of mistakes.

Believer: The Word of God is tried.

"What a bleak and barren island, to have been the place where John saw a door open in heaven; and how small, too, and yet forever memorable. I will ascend to yonder highest point, where the ruins of the temple of Neptune stand. When the Greeks put up these beautiful temples, I suppose that in their ignorance they were feeling after God, and ignorantly, as Paul said, worshipping him. Now I can look out over the sea. I will rest in this grotto protected from wind and sun. And was it here that Saint John, banished to this isle by the Emperor Domitian, and a prisoner in the lead mines heard the voice like the sound of many waters? How beautiful, now is yonder sea in the rising sun. There is the sea of glass, mingled with fire, just as John saw it.

"The isles of Greece, the isles of Greece,
Where burning Sappho loved and sung,
Eternal summer gilds them yet,
But all except their sun has set."

"Another must be coming up the path. I am not the only one, then, who seeks this sacred spot."

"A common interest evidently draws us here—yonder temple of Neptune."

"It is indeed beautiful, and the ruin of a beautiful building is even more beautiful than the perfect building itself, because in the ruin there is sentiment and personality which the finished building, unmarred and unbroken could never have. But it is not yonder temple of Neptune which has brought me here."

"Perhaps, then, thou hast come to view the sunrise on the Ægean? Nowhere in the world is there a sunrise like it."

"The sunrise is truly glorious. But what brings me here is neither the ruins of the temple, nor the beauty of the sunrise. I have come to sit where John sat when he saw the heavens opened. It was here on this island, and, according to a very ancient tradition, when he was resting in this very grotto, that he saw Christ standing amid the Seven Golden Candelsticks with the Seven Stars in his right hand."

"And that, rather than the glories of the sunrise, or the beauty of the temple, hath brought thee here?"

"Yes; here I think of the city John saw, a city without a temple, and sitting here. I reflect upon that which has made yonder temple of Neptune, and temples all over this Eastern world, only an abandoned ruin. Men come today to view the ruins, but not to worship."

"And what power think you has done that?"

"The power of divine revelation and inspired truth, what God hath said."

"But hath God said?"

"That is an old question, as old as Eden.

That was what the tempter asked the woman in the—"

"Yes, it was I who asked it."

"Thou? Thou art not yet fifty years old!"

"I am older than I look. Since ever God created man and gave him his laws, I have lived in the world; and my one question has been, Hath God said?"

"Then thou comest to the islands also?"

"Wherever faith goes, I go; as the shadow follows the sun, on sea or land, mainland or island."

"Each time I parted with thee, it seemed I could never forget thee nor fail to recognize thee when I should meet thee. Yet, in the ecstasy of the sacred places, all thought of thee departs from me. But now again thou dost appear, and even on Patmos Isle, where I would be in the Spirit on the Lord's day, I must contend with thee, thou Spirit of Universal Doubt."

"On yonder sea of glass, mingled with fire, thou readeest the words 'And God said'. But what I see and read there is different; what I see there is this: 'Hath God said?'"

"But God could say—"

"Could?"

"Yes. I mean that if you grant a God, an infinite being, he certainly could reveal himself to creatures made in his image."

"I do not grant a God. Nevertheless, I admit that if there were a God, he could, if he desired, reveal his will to man."

"You admit, then, that a revelation is possible. Is it not also desirable?"

"Desirable?"

"Yes. I mean that a man needs counsel to guide him and direct him through life, and he needs hopes to sustain him in death. Certainly an infallible guide would be a good thing."

"But the real question is whether there has been a revelation, not whether it is possible or desirable. The question is, Hath God said?"

"Yes. I am coming to that in a moment. We agree that a revelation is possible, and that it is desirable. Now what is the alternative of a revelation?"

"The alternative?"

"Yes."

"Why, no revelation."

"And that means—"

"That man has just his own reason and experience for a guide."

"And what is man's unaided reason, but a torch on a dark night, blown by the winds of passion or ignorance?"

"And you believe that there is something else than man's wisdom and experience?"

"Yes. I believe in a divine revelation."

"And if your God has given a revelation of his will, where are the records of it?"

"In the Bible. The Scriptures principally teach what man is to believe concerning God, and what duty God requires of man."

"Now we stand on our battlefield. You believe that the Bible contains what God said. But what makes you think that the Bible contains what God said and is of divine origin?"

"The Bible claims it."

"Where?"

"Everywhere. From its opening verses, 'And God said', clear down to the end of John's great book, we hear the echo of those words 'And God said'."

"But to claim that a thing is so, does not prove it to be so, does it?"

"No."

"The Book of Mormon claims to be a revelation given to Joseph Smith. But you do not believe that?"

"No."

"And the Koran claims to be a revelation given to Mohammed, but you do not believe that?"

"No."

"Why, then, do you believe the Bible contains a revelation?"

"Because everything about the Bible is in harmony with such a claim."

"What, for example?"

"The history of the Bible."

"Its' history?"

"Yes. Not merely the history that it relates but the history of the making and the growth of the Bible. Today it is the one universal book printed in the language of every people on the face of the earth. Yet look at its history. For centuries the greater part of the Bible, the Old Testament, was the book of a despised people. Nothing could have seemed more unlikely than that the sacred book of the Jews should become the book of the world. But when the smaller part of the Bible, the New Testament was added to the Old, then the Bible was carried throughout the world and became the book of the people. It was like a river which, suddenly swollen by the rains, overflows its banks and pours itself over the earth. It is difficult to explain this remarkable history of the Bible on any theory of a purely human origin."

"But why do you call it a book, the Bible, when it is really a collection of books, sixty-six of them, thirty or more authors, and written at different periods of time through long ages?"

"And that again speaks of a divine origin. So many books by so many different authors belonging to different ages, some of them highly-trained minds like Moses and Paul, others rustics like Amos the herdsman, or the fishermen of Galilee; and every kind of composition, too; history, predictions, biographies, soliloquies, odes, dramas, hymns, maxims, and laws. Yet through it all there runs an unity. It begins at the beginning, the creation of the world, and ends at the end, the new heaven and the new earth. The one grand theme is redemption from sin, and the one grand personality is the Redeemer, the Lord Jesus Christ. Can you think of any other sixty-six books so written and at so many different periods of history, which, if collected together between two covers, would have the slightest semblance of unity?"

"No."

"But that is just what you find here in the Bible. It's like one of the great cathedrals. One generation of workmen laid the foundations, another built the nave; another toiled on the chapels or the windows; another the choir; yet the cathedral is an unity. So it is with the Bible. We are conscious of the fact that different parts belong to different ages. Moses wrought in his age, David in his, Isaiah and Jeremiah in theirs, Matthew and Luke and Peter and John and Paul in their day and generation. Yet the Bible, like the cathedral, is one nave, transept, choir, chapels, soaring arches, glorious windows and aspiring pinnacles and towers."

"But surely, for a book which claims to have a divine origin, there must be something more to be said than just the fact of its unity, or the history of its making and growth. More important, is the question of what is in the book."

"That is a fair question, and I am willing to submit the Bible to that test. The heavens declare the glory of God. If there is a God, the heavens are certainly worthy of him; the sun in all its glory—such a sunrise as we saw this morning, for example. So I agree with you that if the Bible has a divine origin, its contents ought to show it."

"How do they show it?"

"By the very nature and character of its contents."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that what is in the Bible, whether it is true or not is just what you should have expected."

"Expected?"

"Yes; if there is a revelation from God to man, what would you think would be the subject matter of such a revelation?"

"Why, I suppose, the origin of man in the world, the origin of sin and death, laws to guide him in the way of duty, and hopes to console him for the future."

"And that is just what we find in the Bible. It claims to be a divine revelation, and when we look into it, we find that the subject matter is just what we should have expected in a divine revelation."

"Yes, I grant that, but back of that is this—Is what is said true? Do the contents support the claim of a divine origin?"

JESUS ON THE CROSS

Lesson Text: Mark 15:1-47; Golden Text: Romans 5:8

Jesus Before Pilate. Mark 15:1-5

After the midnight agony and the betrayal of Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane, he was arrested, bound and carried back to the holy (?) city for his mock trials. Six times he was to have his freedom and even his life placed in jeopardy, three times before ecclesiastical authorities, and three times before civil authorities, and we believe we are safe in saying he received more consideration from the civil authorities than he did from the ecclesiastical.

TUESDAY

Jesus Condemned. Mark 15:6-15

Jesus with his quiet dignity during his persecution and mock trial caused Pilate to marvel, and led him to believe there was nothing worthy of death in the prisoner. And thinking to do the accused a good turn he had it in mind to release him as his custom was to release some prisoner during the feast of the passover. But he misjudged the spirit and temper of the chief priests and he failed to understand their power over the ignorant and superstitious rabble who rejected his proposal to release Jesus and clamored for the release of the noted prisoner, Barabbas.

WEDNESDAY

Jesus Mocked. Mark 15:16-21

After Pilate had unwillingly condemned Jesus at the clamorous demand of the Jewish populace he was turned over to the Roman soldiers who were to carry out the orders of Pilate that he might keep peace with the Jews. These ugly soldiers, ignorant of the personality of the one whom they were to execute cruelly mocked him and endeavored to humiliate the Son of God by placing a crown of thorns upon his head, and for a brief time clothing him in the purple of royalty.

THURSDAY

Jesus Crucified. Mark 15:22-32

In this terrible tragedy enacted upon Golgotha hill it may be said God was "using the wrath of man to perfect his own praise." Soldiers are taught to be cruel and heartless, and to have no regard to the suffering of the victims of their attacks, so it is not to be wondered at, that the suffering of the Mighty One as he hung upon the cross, especially as they listened to the chief priests mocking and reviling the one who came into the world to set them free from a bondage they did not realize was theirs, made but little impression on their minds.

FRIDAY

Jesus Dies. Mark 15:33-41

Jesus had declared he was to "lay down his life," of his own accord and that no man could take it from him, that is, against his will. And I am satisfied he could have done what the priests challenged him to do when they said, "If he be the king of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe on him." But he could not do this and be the "Lamb of God, sacrificed for sin from the foundation of the world," so he died as he said he would die.

SATURDAY

Jesus in the Tomb. Mark 15:42-47

How little men realize that many of the things they plan to do are but the working out of God's eternal plan for the redemption of his world.

We have no idea what Joseph thought, when he offered his new tomb as a resting place for the mortal remains of his crucified Lord, he was offering what was to be the most wonderful tomb the world had ever seen, or ever will see. For a little while it was to hold the remains of the One of whom it had been said the grave could not hold him.

SUNDAY

The Suffering Savior. Isaiah 53:1-6

One can not help but wonder at the patience of Jesus and at his ready acquiescence to all that came to him in his few earthly years, in view of the fact that he knew during his entire ministry just what his end was to be. He knew, even better than Isaiah, just what suffering was before him, but, nothing haunted, he persevered to the very end, and triumphed over sin and the grave as the Suffering Savior."

Meet Us At Milwaukee

Milwaukee, Wisconsin, one of the most attractive and progressive cities of North America, will be host to the 34th International Christian Endeavor Convention, which will be held July 8 to 13 1933.

The choice of the convention city is the happier because Chicago, the city of the "Century of Progress" International Exposition, is close at hand. Convention delegates will find it comfortable and inexpensive to visit the exposition en route to or from the Milwaukee Convention.

It is more than half a century of progress in young people's activities in and for the Christian church that the Milwaukee Convention signalizes. The convention program will face the implications of today's chaos and of social and spiritual unrest. Holding before young people the unchanging ideals of Jesus Christ, this youth congress will summon the new generation to individual spiritual growth and to social progress in his spirit.

The Convention's series of educational conferences will deal not only with Christian attitudes toward social issues but with practical methods of doing Christian work. The convention seeks to inspire young people to attempt great things in their own churches and societies, and will help them with ideas and training, given under the guidance of capable educators and other leaders.

Devotional meetings, sightseeing and recreation, fellowship banquets, a parade, meetings of State groups, and a daily radio conference are among the features planned. The convention will be rich in inspiring and helpful addresses and in its music. Milwaukee has every facility for housing the convention meetings and entertaining the thousands of young people that will attend some or all of the sessions. It is a clean, attractive, and hospitable city.

Leaders in religion, education, and statecraft will speak at the principal mass meetings. The speakers who have already accepted include: Mrs. Francis E. Clark; Dr.

Daniel A. Poling, president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union; Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, vice-president; Col. Raymond Robins; Governor John G. Winant of New Hampshire; Dr. A. W. Beaven, president of the Federal Council of Churches; Dr. Norman E. Richardson, of Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Chicago; Dr. P. R. Hayward and Roy A. Burkhart, of the International Council of Religious Education; Dr. James Kelly of Scotland, general secretary of the World's Sunday School Association; Dr. Harry Thomas Stock, student secretary of the Congregational Education Society; Dean Albert J. Anthony of the Auburn School of Religious Education; Carlton M. Sherwood, general secretary of the International Society of Christian Endeavor; and others. A number of other noted speakers will be added to the program within the next few weeks.

The registration fee is only $2.50. Other costs are proportionately low; and the opportunity for after-convention tours of Christian Endeavor delegates, under exceptionally capable leadership, was never more favorable than in this year of travel bargains. Registrations and inquiries should be addressed to the General Secretary, International Society of Christian Endeavor, 41 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston, Massachusetts. Any number of persons may attend from a church, society, or union. The Milwaukee Convention affords an unequalled opportunity to share with other youth in training, inspiration, and fellowship.

gers and mail for the Asia to bring some weeks later!

On April 4th we were privileged to receive some missionary guests—Mr. and Mrs. Boyson and Miss Beardsall. They are enroute for furlough and it is indeed a pleasure to meet these old friends.

Our Brother Jobson, enroute to Bangui arrived yesterday, and returned today. He will go on to Bassai tomorrow.

He brought the sad news of the death of Mr. Simpkins of the S. U. M. station, Beladja, mentioned above. His wife was alone with him at the time of his death. Mr. Veasey who had taken his wife to the Coast and who had returned for a few days to Beladja before departing on his own furlough was there to help during the sad hours of interment. Mrs. Simpkins returned with him to Bassai where she will wait until Mr. and Mrs. Shaw return to Beladja.

As to news from the Bassai Station, Mr. and Mrs. Jobson are very busy with their school and many other duties.

Mrs. Kennedy, Miss Byron and Mrs. Foster have numerous Bible Classes. Miss Myers continues to translate and she and Miss Byron between them care for their hospital. An interesting feature of their work is the treatment of fourteen leper children who are making rapid progress under ALEPOL. These children have classes of their own, are all Christians and are happy in the Lord.

Mr. Foster is building a mission rest house and chapel at Bozoum, which work he hopes to complete this month.

From Bellevue we have the news of Miss Crawford's improved health and of her permission to teach, of which she hopes to avail herself as soon as all details are in readiness.

Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon are extremely busy with their care of station, church and translation, while Miss Bickel has her hands full with heavy hospital work. Miss Patterson is everybody's helper. Since her return to Bellevue, March 10th, her health has been better than during her two months' visit at Yaloke, which alone reconciles me to her loss—even temporarily.

Our native Christians are growing—some of them rapidly. All give evidence of real life and love for the Lord Jesus. The fifteen chapels and 61 preaching points near Yaloke are an evidence of their fervor and zeal. Our Sunday attendance averages 500 and MANY souls are accepting our Lord. How can we help but praise him?

Sincerely,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

One of the great English prose writers said that for many years he wrote for his wastebasket. He wrote many a page which no other eyes save his own were permitted to see. He was well past middle life before he awoke one morning to find himself famous. Whether we win fame or not, much of our work must be done in obscurity. It may be preparation for something grander later in life. The full fruition may never come here. But nothing will be lost; the reward is sure.

Physical ills are not the only ills to receive benefit from counterirritants. Unwelcome interruptions, distasteful tasks, and work that must be done force themselves upon the sick soul in its hours of grief and trouble and draw the attention away from self. The counterirritant is part of God's remedy.

MISSIONS

Progress on Our African Mission Field

Yaloke, par Boali, par Bangui,
Afrique Equatoriale Francaise.
April 8, 1933.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Where shall I commence to record the happenings of the last seven or eight weeks? With the goodness of God showered upon us daily? What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits? "I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord!"

Since last writing—53 days ago—there have been no long illnesses among the missionaries. Two of us have been in bed a day or so, but we have to praise God for his very great kindness in protecting us from the many illnesses and fevers which surround us—especially among our natives, as will be seen by the following brief hospital summary.

During the first three months of the year we gave at the Yaloke hospital and dispensary 7,283 treatments to 1,357 different patients, 19 of whom were hospitalized; 1703 of these treatments were given by mouth; 5580 were treatments for ulcers, burns, fractures, etc., 155 treatments were given for yaws and syphilis by injection.

Our hospital staff has been irregularly present—I myself have made two trips—one of 13 days to Bassai and one of three days to Bangui. Miss Tyson and the native Cameroun nurses have been busy during my absence. We have had some cures which seem to have manifested God's power in a wonderful way, especially recoveries from injuries by wild animals, when it seemed recovery was impossible.

Mr. Hathaway visited Bangui during the early part of March and returned with Joseph Nguede fully licensed to drive. Since then, therefore, I have had my own chauffeur on medical trips and on the business trip to Bangui.

At Bassai on March 19th a little girl, Maureen Grace Shaw was born to missionary parents there—members of the Sudan United Mission and stationed at Beladja, two hundred miles to the north of Bassai.

We were four weeks without mail. When it did come in on April 2nd we were fairly overwhelmed with the news of joy—or of sorrow—in homes of friends and loved ones. These long waits grow harder, and the reaction therefrom increasingly difficult to support.

We are doubtless doomed to another disappointing wait as the BRAZZA, unseaworthy, is reported to have returned from Dakan to France, leaving there her passen-

THE NEED OF THE WORLD

*The world is needing you and me
In places where we ought to be;
Somewhere today it's needing you
To stand for what you know is true,
And needing me somewhere today
To keep the faith, let come what may.*

*The world is needing me and you
To share the tasks it has to do;
It needs high-minded men to stand
Against the thoughtless of the land;
Men who will scorn to stoop to wrong
To win the favor of the throng.*

*The world needs humble men to toil,
Men who will till a patch of soil,
Men who behind their work can see
More than its gold and silver fee
And choose to serve where best they can
Their country and their fellow man.*

*The world needs honest men today
To lead its youth along the way,
Men who will write in all their deeds
The beauty of their spoken creeds
And spurn advantage here or gain
On which deceit must leave its stain.*

*The world needs men who will not brag,
Men who will honor Freedom's Flag,
Men, who, although the way is hard,
Against the lure of shame will guard.
The world needs gentle men and true
And calls aloud to me and you.*

*The world needs men of lofty aim,
Not merely men of skill and fame,
Not merely leaders wise and grave,
Or learned men or soldiers brave,
But men whose lives are fair to see,
Such men as you and I can be.*

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

SEMINARY NOTES

Dr. Martin Shively, bursar of the College, has recently given a very fine gift to our Seminary Library, in the form of Brethren Conference annuals, from 1884 to date, with the exception of the Annual for 1893 and 1895. This note is being inserted for two reasons. First, to publicly indicate our appreciation to Brother Shively for this fine gift; and second, to indicate our desire that someone of the Church may make this set complete by supplying the two lacking annuals. In fact, we should be exceedingly glad to have another complete set, that they may be accessible for our Seminary students.

KENNETH M. MONROE.

PLEASANT GROVE, IOWA

While we like to read the news of the field, we feel there are those who like to read of the work at Pleasant Grove. While this has been a rainy season and the roads have been muddy, which hinders attendance at the regular services and thus causes some loss of interest, yet these good folks are in the best fellowship and the prospects are the best I have ever seen. Pleasant Grove is well equipped for Sunday school teachers, song leaders and piano players. There is no reason why they should not go forward.

They are not the Pleasant Grove of years ago in numbers—many have crossed the river of death, many moved away, and some have left the church and others are rather cold. We have the same hard financial conditions as the rest of the brotherhood. These we feel, but look and hope for a better day.

I wish the church could feel the value of true service and be ready to put God to the test. Even from the days of your fathers ye have gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return? Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. (Even this whole world has robbed God) Even in this depression people spend more for the pleasures of the world than for the support of the cause of Christ. Read the third chapter of Malachi. When I preached on this and said I believed God has had a hand in the depression, others said they believed the same thing. Then let us take warning.

I believe we will have a better report to make from this place the next time. Pray for us at Pleasant Grove.

H. W. ANDERSON.

THE REVIVAL AT ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

This is another of the promising churches under the Board's care. The leaders of this church had the foresight and courage to launch upon this present program of moving their church location, and building new in a new field. It was an absolutely necessary move due to the old location being made untenable by the encroaching negro element. The new field is unchurched, of a good class of people, and a district where the former situation can never again arise. The site for the structure is, without doubt in our judgment, the most imposing in the entire brotherhood. They have gotten more in the way of a building for the money invested than anything we have ever seen, and we have seen quite a bit!

Two great problems faced this people: a building debt of $24,000 and a strange field where they were unknown. No sooner was the church erected than the depression hit them and made finances doubly hard. But these folks have not complained. They simply got down on their knees and prayed earnestly, and then they got down into their pockets and gave freely, lovingly, sacrificially. Others in the Brotherhood who knew their situation and have confidence in the future of such a people came in and helped financially, not so largely, but nevertheless it helped. Results: during the three years of depression these folks have reduced their indebtedness over $3,000 aside from many other heavy obligations. Local economic conditions are improving and they are expecting to do real things to their debt very soon. The financial institutions they deal with show the finest confidence in their integrity. A finer testimony to a people's Christianity could hardly be had. We know some churches whose creditors do not have such an attitude by any means.

The other problem—of the new field unacquainted with Brethren teaching—is also swiftly being overcome. The people of the community are finding that the Brethren Church has a real gospel and they are accepting it. We believe in this church, its people, its field, and its future.

This is the third revival we have had the privilege of holding for the pastor, Herman Koontz. The first was when he was still at college and holding a student pastorate at Glenford, Ohio. The second was while he was at Masontown. Now the third at Roanoke. Each one has been a pleasure. It has been a privilege to fellowship with him and his capable wife. It has been a joy to see how he has grown in experience, and power with God and man. Not one word of criticism reached my ears of this preacher. He is loved by his people and trusted by his community. I am glad he is numbered with the Brethren ministry. Our home while in Roanoke was with these folks and it was a happy time indeed, as it has always been.

The Brethren church in Roanoke is getting the reputation of being a Fundamental church and one that stands for the real gospel, and the whole gospel. Those who seek such are coming to it. They will come more swiftly in the future.

True southern hospitality was ours while here. Nothing can beat these folks on making one feel welcome and at home. We learned to love these folks and we shall not forget to pray for them in the days that are to come as we wait for his coming.

The whole Brethren cause in this section is taking on new vision and we believe there will be some real progress in a widespread way there in the next few years if the Lord tarries.

R. PAUL MILLER.

LEISURE TIME:—HOW TO USE IT?

With twelve millions or more out of work and talk of legislation to establish a thirty- or thirty-six hour week as a standard of employment for all, we are faced very squarely with the question, "What use are we going to make of our increased leisure time?" The future of the country hangs on the answer. "An idle brain is the devil's workshop." The mere passing or killing of time will mean the passing and killing of the nation.

Indeed we are seeing the effects of it already on the unemployed. The vain search for work is followed too easily by the collapse of all ambition and moral control until one either resigns helplessly to the drift of the current, or breaks wildly mad into a revolutionary or criminal outburst against the existing order. The prospect is further complicated by the probability of having more time on our hands than we have money in our pockets with which to purchase the privileges that give pleasure to leisure hours.

But there is an answer. It is to be found in the development of those senses of value and those measures of satisfaction that are to be found in the realm of the mind and the heart. These are utterly and forever beyond the reach of money and material. Only in the Holy Bible are these values set forth in their true worth and it is only by following the Bible that one may be able to translate the new leisure into "joy unspeakable and full of glory."

The dignity of the human spirit,—the pre-eminence of human personality,—that is what God values most in the Book of Books. "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" "God so loved * * * that whosoever * * * might not perish, but have everlasting life." Those activities therefore that tend to release the human spirit from the bondage and entanglements of the world and the flesh and give it a chance to realize its highest possibilities are activities that will make the use of leisure time quite worth while. What a goal,—"the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ!"

The bonds of fellowship are ties that now are just faintly enjoyed because we are too busy with our selfish pursuits to take time to cultivate those delights that flow only from friend to friend. This privilege has two directions, one upward and one outward. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God * * * and thy neighbor as thyself." The God of the Christian faith is available to those who will use some of their leisure time to "lean upon the everlasting arm." "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard * * * the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." We miss the full meaning of the promises of divine fellowship unless we make them very real for the life here and now as well as for the life that is to come. But the practice of the outward reach in fellowship is scarcely less gratifying. We realize this readily when kindred souls come together as in holy wedlock, but there is a superb exaltation awaiting those of opposite temperaments who find the way to mutual affection in spite of this opposition. Increased leisure beckons with a challenge to use its time to quiet the woes of the world and break down its hatreds and antagonisms and bring in the kingdom of love.

And there is a fellowship with the impersonal as well as the personal. Surely God intended that we should enjoy the world about us. He gave us dominion over it. The wonders of God's handiwork in nature await the leisurely journeys of those who will have time to explore them. Whether it be the "flower in the crannied wall" or the majestic Matterhorn, its mysteries of beauty reflect the glory of the Creator, and fill the soul of the observed with the consciousness of his divine presence.

It is time to begin to get ready. "As the twig is bent so the tree will grow." Even today if you will take your Bible in hand and read and follow you will be on your way in a garden of paradise where your increasing leisure time will take you even farther on a "path that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—The Bible in New York.

Every soul has a larger influence than it guesses, either for good or for evil.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."—Matt. 28:19, 20.

Once in the flurry of superheated debate at the Constitutional Convention, Benjamin Franklin moved an adjournment for two or three days to enable the contestants to cool off and get together. So the proceedings stopped and Franklin's purpose was accomplished. Sometimes in our individual experience it is a good thing to suspend operations until we can collect ourselves and proceed calmly with our business.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

FLORA-CHAPMAN—Sunday afternoon, February 26 at the First Brethren Church at Flora, Indiana occurred the wedding of Russel Flora, of Flora, and Miss Donabelle Chapman of Brimhurst. They were accompanied by the sister of the bride and a friend. The ceremony was a single ring ceremony. The groom is a member of the First Brethren church and is a son of Brother and Sister Rufus Flora. The bride is a popular young lady of the Flora and Brimhurst community. They have many friends to wish them well. Ceremony by the writer. FREEMAN ANKRCUM.

IN THE SHADOW

KELLEY—Nathan P. Kelley was born in Indiana, October 30, 1847, and passed away May 10, 1933, at the age of 85 years, 6 months and 10 days. Mr. Kelley was married to Rebecca Baker, widow of the late Jasper Cooper, Missouri.

Five children were born to this union, three of whom are deceased. His wife died about 5 years ago. He is survived by one son, O. S. Kelley of Fort Scott, Kansas, and one daughter, Mrs. George James of Caro, Kansas, also by 9 grandchildren and 21 great-grandchildren.

Mr. Kelley professed faith in Christ and united with the Baptist church early in life, and continued in that faith until death.

Mr. Kelley was well respected by all who knew him and will be missed in his community, where his fellowship and counsel was appreciated by all.

The funeral was conducted from the Baptist church of Caro, Kansas, May 11, 1933, by the writer, in the presence of a very large congregation of neighbors and friends.

The body was laid to rest in the family lot in the Pleasant View Cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

GUIN—Lee Guin was born and raised near Fort Scott, Kansas, and departed this life at El Dorado, Kansas, May 11, 1933 at the age of 55 years.

He had been living elsewhere for about 20 years, but was brought back for burial. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mary Ingeham Guin and the following children: Reed, Earl, and Williston, North Dakota, and Maurice and Lucile of the home.

The funeral was conducted by the writer, at the grave in Evergreen cemetery, where the body was laid to rest at 3:00 P. M., May 12, 1933. L. G. WOOD.

KIRK—Margaret J. Kirk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Kirk, was born at Seneca, Missouri, December 6th, 1844, and departed this life at the home of her son, Leonard Allen, in Fort Scott, Kansas. Her age was 88 years and 5 months. She was married to Tom J. Allen at Fort Scott, Kansas, on September 11, 1867, and she had lived in or near Fort Scott for 68 years, and was well and favorably known. She had been a member of the Baptist church for 42 years. A firm believer in the Lord and a woman that loved to read her Bible. She was loyal and true to her home and family and a Christian home builder. Mrs. Allen was a brave woman and with her husband endured many trials and hardships during the border warfare days of the Civil war.

Her husband, Tom Allen, was one of the most colorful heroes Bourbon County ever had. He served in that office, 1862 to 1866. He preceded her in death by 22 years, and the writer officiated at his funeral also. She is survived by four sons and three daughters and 19 grandchildren and 19 great-grandchildren.

The funeral was conducted from the Brethren church by the writer assisted by Rev. Leroy Viets, pastor of the Baptist church. L. G. WOOD.

RODGERS—It is my sad duty to inform the Evangelist family of the decease of Brother William Ashby Rodgers of the Mount Olive Brethren church. Brother Rodgers had long been a valued and faithful member of our congregation. Most of his ten children who survive him are members of our congregation at Mount Olive. His good wife preceded him to the better land some years ago. Well beloved as a Christian, a citizen and a father, he will be greatly missed. Funeral services were conducted at the church by his pastor assisted by Elder Chas. E. Long of the Mill Creek Church of the Brethren. Interment was made in the church cemetery at Mount Olive. JOHN F. LOCKE.

BERKLEY—Clayton M. Berkley, 78, a veteran hardware merchant in Waterloo, Iowa for more than fifty years, passed from this earthly scene April 15th, after several months illness. He was a public-spirited citizen, a regular church attendant at his own and a generous contributor to civic and religious enterprises. He was deeply interested in his church. He was full of hope and faith to the last moment. At every call of his pastor during his illness, one question that always came forth was: "How about the services at the church Sunday or mid-week?"

Beautiful but simple services (his request) were conducted in the church Easter Sunday afternoon before a packed house of relatives, friends and business associates who had gathered to pay their last tribute of respect. His devoted companion, formerly Miss Mary M. Frankston, survives. May the God of Comfort sustain her in these days.

Services by the pastor, assisted by Rev. C. H. Gnagy, a local elder. E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

COOK—Oscar Cook, 56, died at his home near Waterloo, Iowa, April 12th, after severe illness since the first of this year. He was born in Pennsylvania, coming later to Lanark, Illinois, where he lived until 21 years of age. Since then he has lived near Waterloo, Iowa. In 1903 he was married to Miss Mary Lichty. He was a member of the First Brethren church for many years. Two sons, Max and Frank, both young men, are left to assist and comfort the wife and mother. Funeral services were conducted at the church April 15th. Our God is able to comfort. E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

MINNICH—Sister Jeannie Minnich, widow of Michael Minnich, passed to be with her Lord on Friday, May 5th, at the home of her only daughter, Mrs. Leonard Swartz, where she had lived for many years. She was 74 years and nine months old, having been born in Bath County, Virginia, July 30, 1858. Sister Minnich was a faithful member of the Oakville Brethren church for 19 years. Although a cripple, she attended church services and loved the Brethren and obeyed Christ's teachings. Funeral by her pastor. S. LOWMAN.

PETERSON—Warren Glen Peterson was born at Lees Summit, Missouri, June 5th, 1892, and died at his home near Hittville, Kansas, April 17th, at the age of ten months and 12 days.

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Peterson and one brother, Lloyd Peterson, of two years of age; also by two grandmothers and one grandfather, and many other relatives.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer, at the Komantz Mortuary, April 18th, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. The body was laid to rest in the family lot in the Oak Grove cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

LEEDY—Mrs. Anna Justine Leedy passed away March 11th, 1933, at the home of her daughter in Toledo, Ohio, aged 84 years, 5 months and 16 days.

She was the daughter of Peter and Magdalene Cutnaw and was born in France, October 27, 1848.

Mrs. Leedy was one of a family of 6 children, and came with her parents to this country at the age of 6 years. They settled near Fredericksburg, Ohio.

In 1874 she was united in marriage to Daniel Crunkilton of Knox County, Ohio. To this union were born two daughters, Mrs. Gilbert Carnes of Toledo, and Mrs. Wm. Rhoads of Indianapolis, Indiana, all of whom, together with one granddaughter, Mrs. Chet. Timney of Los Angeles, and one sister, Mrs. Melvin Miller of Butler, Ohio, survive her.

Mr. Crunkilton died in 1876 and in 1888 Mrs. Crunkilton was united in marriage to David A. Leedy of near North Liberty, Ohio, who preceded her in death thirty years.

Mrs. Leedy has been in failing health for two years, but suffered a stroke of apoplexy February 8th, from which she did not recover.

Mrs. Leedy united with the Brethren church more than 40 years ago and remained faithful to the end. Her greatest comfort was her Bible and her cheerful, sunny disposition reflected her love for her Master.

To live on earth, yet walk with God,
To toil with men, yet talk with Heaven,
Is human bliss beyond compare
And highest good to mortals given.

Funeral services and burial were at her old home in North Liberty, Ohio, March 14, 1933, conducted by Rev. J. W. Ruelhe of Toledo.

Business Manager's Corner

Just Around the Corner

During the past six months a great deal has been said in a slighting manner about the business recovery that is "just around the corner." And more recently some are saying, "it has now turned the corner." We hope this is true, and that all our churches and Sunday schools, as well as all our individual customers and subscribers were close to the corner when prosperity made the turn. But it will take a long time to recover from the effect of our depression, whether real or imaginary, and there are several corners yet to be turned before our business is again located on "easy street."

Just this morning we received a letter from an Ink Manufacturer in New York, from whom we have been buying ink for twenty-five years, in which they say, "If there is any possible way you can strain a point to help us out with a check for your order amounting to $9.97, we shall appreciate the favor. We would not bother you at this time only that our bank account is shot to pieces and we need considerable money to pay our bills."

We might reply and say, "our bank account is not only 'shot to pieces', but it has 'been blown up with dynamite' but we will try to "strain a point" and send the requested check. We also would appreciate it as much as this ink company does, if a number of our own customers could "strain a point" and send us a check for the various amounts past due.

How Others Do It

One of the large denominational publishers of Sunday school lesson helps and all kinds of Sunday school material wrote us on a former occasion that they make it a rule "not to supply any Sunday school with a new order until the order for the previous quarter had been paid for." If we did that there would be a number of schools that would be without supplies upon the beginning of a new quarter, and besides that we would be counted very inconsiderate of the feelings of our brethren and sisters in the church. Nevertheless any one can see that it must work a hardship on any publisher that is called upon to extend credit for supplies for a longer period of time than three months.

The Brethren Evangelist

Renewals to The Brethren Evangelist are still coming in in practically every mail, but yet there are a great many that should be received; and still there are many new subscriptions that should be received, but those who are not now receiving the paper see none of the appeals we make through its columns, and can not respond unless some one who does receive the paper asks them to become a subscriber. Who will do this? There should be such a representative in every congregation. If the pastor is too busy to do this himself, he should see that some one else is designated to the task.

Conference Minutes

We do not believe more than one-half of the pastors to whom were sent copies of the Minutes of General Conference, by order of the Conference, have remitted for them at this time. This should be done promptly to save the Publishing House, or rather the Conference, the expense of mailing personal notices to all these pastors. Will you do it?

R. R. TEETER, Business Manager.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FAMILY RECORD DATA BURNED

Fire on February 12th last destroyed all the completed art of the family book of the descendants of Christian Stutzman and Barbara Hochstetler, on which I have spent the past six years, comprising nearly 12,000 families. Many of the completed reports from families, and letters had been taken to my home, and from these I am undertaking to re-write the book, which will take about two years. I am in my 77th year, and whether I shall be spared to complete the work, only God in his wisdom knows.

I should like to ask the readers of this paper, who may not have answered my letters nor sent the reports of their families, if they will not kindly do so at an early date, and save me the time of writing them again. HARVEY HOSTETLER,

BRETHREN YOUNG PEOPLE'S CAMP
Shishewana Lake, Indiana. July 16-23, 1933

Description

This Camp and Training School for Brethren young people is being conducted by the National Sunday School Association in co-operation with the Indiana District Conference. While most of the young people and their accompanying adult leaders will probably come from the Indiana churches, the camp is open to Brethren young people from every part of the brotherhood.

Location

The camp site is pretty Shishewana Lake, which is sixteen miles east of Goshen and twenty-two miles east of Elkhart. South Bend is thirty-six miles to the west, while Warsaw and Peru are forty-two and eighty-five respectively to the south. Brighton is fifteen miles and Bryan is fifty-five miles to the east and Huntington is seventy-five miles to the southeast.

Dates

The conference is to open on Sunday, July 16th. There will be a night program for young people. On the next day, Monday, July 17th, registration will take place. However, it will be advisable for some students to come on Sunday and worship at Shishewana in order that all things may be in readiness for an early camp opening. The camp ends on Sunday, July 23rd.

Who May Attend

The camp conference is planned for young people of high school age and above, and their adult leaders. It is hoped that there may be something near an equal representation of both girls and boys. Churches should keep this in mind in selecting their representatives. No church is limited to any particular number of delegates. It will help greatly to have each group accompanied by some sympathetic adult leader.

What They Should Bring

Some campers will lodge in cottages or tents. Others will be housed in the Girls' Lodge and Hotel. Each camper should bring linen and blankets and camp pillow. Camp clothing may be worn. Each student should bring his or her bathing suit, athletic equipment, Bible, notebooks, stationery, etc.

Daily Schedule

The morning program will consist of morning watch, class periods for instruction, chapel worship, and also some recreation. Meal time will be a period of joyous, wholesome fellowship. The first part of the afternoon will be spent in rest and reading. Directed recreation consisting of hikes, games and contests will follow. Then to the lake for boating and swimming! Evening vespers will turn the heart to worship. Other activities will follow.

Leadership Course

One type of course will be offered, from which each camper will be required to choose according to directions which will be announced by the dean. The courses will meet for one period each daily.

The Plight of the Church Papers

Church papers are in a bad plight. We know of not a single exception. And the situation with some is very critical. A goodly number have already been compelled to discontinue publication or to merge with other periodicals, while many others have found it necessary to sacrifice service by cutting down on the size of the paper or the frequency of publication. These trying times are having effect on general religious periodicals as well as on church publications. It is only the very widely circulated papers, able to make real money on advertising, which are not compelled to cheapen their publications in order to exist. But the fight for life is much harder with the church paper than with the general religious publication because its field is much more restricted. The religious public does not realize how serious the situation is that confronts the church press. This is true primarily for two reasons:

First, the church paper is looked upon as a purely business venture that should succeed financially or die, whereas it is in reality a moral and spiritual investment and cannot be expected to pay dividends in dollars and cents any more than does the Christian college or the missionary enterprise, and whereas also the limitations of the field make it impossible for it to succeed financially.

Consequently the church paper should be supported by gifts or subsidies in some form as other benevolent and spiritual enterprises are.

Second, the rank and file of the church members do not realize how important the church paper is to the welfare of the church. It is to be feared that even many of our church leaders do not understand how thoroughly dependent the denominational body and the individual congregations are upon the church press, and particularly the news organ, official or otherwise. And in this time of financial stress there are those who consider that about the first act of economy a church or individual may resort to is the cutting off of their church paper. There is no greater fallacy than that, no more short-sightedness. The truth is, there is scarcely another factor in the church's life, aside from the pastor, that the membership can more properly be asked to sacrifice in order to maintain its religious journal. The promotion of every other interest of the church depends upon it.

But our purpose on this occasion is not to enter upon an extended discussion of this matter ourselves, but to pass on the words of a fellow editor, who represents pretty largely the situation that obtains with nearly all the church papers, though some are not in such severe straits as this one. The Presbyterian is a conservative organ, a staunch defender of the faith, is ably edited, and deserves the support of Presbyterians. After lamenting the fact that most of us do not appreciate many good things, nor understand their importance and value until after they are gone or we are denied their benefits, and specifying the church service, as an example of the things we fail to appreciate as we ought, he then also cites the church paper as an example, saying:

"We think much of the Church paper. Dr. James H. Snowden said that when he first became interested in church papers, there were eleven weeklies in our denomination. Today there are three and one monthly. (And it was decided at the recent Presbyterian Assembly in Columbus, Ohio, to dispense with the monthly, which was the church's official paper.—Editor). Not one is self-supporting. Some, like the editor of this paper, is going on without remuneration, hoping for pay to meet necessities. Our correspondents are unpaid and have uttered no complaint. They know the work is important and of value to the church.

"Without definite statistics, we opine that no church paper has the subscribers that were enrolled ten years ago, while advertisers have turned to other channels. Plenty is published, some good, some not so good. Only a small proportion of our denominational membership take a church paper. Many causes have hindered the work. The great reason is the high cost of production. The Presbyterian has reduced expenses to the lowest level. We have no subsidy from the denomination which we aid according to our light. The papers differs in some respects, so one can find a paper to suit his desires. But pastors and others fail to promote circulation, which would be a great aid. Some benevolent souls have aided generously for years, but they are in many cases unable or unwilling to do so now. A few devoted people do all they can, but even so, we are in great straits. We do not believe any responsible person enjoys the situation. We make a plea for the church paper. It is a tremendous aid in any church, if widely circulated and read. The pastor will find no better help. The Presbyterian is passing through a trying time, as are the others. The excellent Watchman-Examiner has pleaded for subscribers. The cost of a weekly is not large, and a home is much benefited by the visit of a church paper. If one or more of our weekly publications must give up, the result will be serious for good people and good causes. Why not go to work in your church? One hundred subscribers in each church would change the whole outlook. We are not selfish in our plea. Surely some one can give a generous contribution and many can subscribe. We are hard pressed and ask your help, firm in the belief that if these papers, any of them, must cease, the result would be a widespread loss. In these days of financial pressure, the last thing to give up is that which makes for good. Choose the one you prefer, and see to it that a church paper comes regularly to your home. It is a matter that needs attention now, and is of vital importance to yourself and us."

"Them's our sentiments too," regarding the need of the cooperation of pastors and other church leaders. The cause of Christ is at stake; we would lay it upon your hearts. Help to promote the circulation of your own church paper. It is both the duty and the opportunity of every minister. We are not scolding; we are merely appealing for larger active interest in the humble matter of securing subscribers. The Evangelist enjoys as large a per capita circulation as any other church paper we know about, but our field is small and we, like the Dutch farmers, must work it all the more intensively because of that fact. Let's all work together for our paper, while our paper works for all.

Agencies of Religious Education

Our minds are being turned to thoughts of religious education of children and youth in special ways at this season of the year. Daily Vacation Bible Schools are being launched. Training camps for young people are being planned. And Children's Day itself is a reminder as well as a demonstration of the value of the training of childhood.

It is well that the church is coming to give itself so intensively to its teaching function, especially the teaching of its children and youth. The more faithfully it teaches, the more faithfully it obeys the commission of its Lord and Master and the more nobly will it discharge its responsibility to the young life with which it is surrounded. It owes to them a knowledge of the Gospel, of as thorough and as spiritual a character as it is possible to give.

Among the agencies used by the church to accomplish this instruction of the children, we believe the Sunday school is still chief. We are ready to acknowledge that it alone is not adequate, and that it leaves much to be desired in the way of intensive and systematic instruction. But it continues to be the exercise the most far-reaching and most constant influence upon the life of the child of any other church agency and provides the most spiritual atmosphere in which children can be reached and instructed in large numbers. This, we believe, notwithstanding the fact that some experts in education are laying heavy criticism upon the Sunday school, and some would scrap it as an outworn institution. At a meeting of the Religious Education Association held in Cincinnati early in May, Dr. Adelaide Case of Columbia University Teacher's College declared that she believed Sunday schools were retarding religious progress and proposed creation of community groups of wider scope, and the implication of the "wider scope" expression was that it should include a wider range of theological ideas and not be so definitely Christian. Her speech had been preceded by one by Rabbi Isaac Landman of New York, editor of the American Hebrew, who had bitterly attacked the Sunday schools as breeders of agnosticism and atheism, and the "greatest weakness" and "most costly liability" of the church. And his reason for thinking they promote "agnosticism" and "atheism" was that "even where adults attend the Sunday school, they are fed on mythical tales and goody-goody maxims." The Virgin Birth was one of those "mythical tales" referred to, as also was the resurrection of Christ. But we say, God bless an institution that is so thoroughly tied up with such teachings and whose curriculum can be kept so completely under the control of the church it serves. That is one of the secrets of its strength rather than being a weakness.

As suggested, however, the Sunday school program is not adequate to meet the religious educational needs of the children. As a supplement to its work the Daily Vacation Bible School has come into being and has served the church well. It has the advantage over the Sunday school of offering opportunity for more intensive and connected and systematic instruction. It is scarcely necessary to urge it upon our churches, as they are using it quite widely, and they are coming to hold it in control and to determine the instruction, making it more definitely religious and Biblical than were the programs at the outset. While the number of our churches making use of the Daily Vacation Bible School is large and has been annually increasing, there is still room for further advancement along that line. Even the smallest churches can conduct such a school, and they need it as badly as any. It ought to be employed wherever possible, crowded with as much real Bible instruction as possible, and made both thoroughly enjoyable and deeply spiritual.

Week-day religious instruction is also being found possible and profitable in many localities and is a very efficient means of Bible instruction. It is worth being participated in by Brethren people wherever satisfactory instruction programs can be arranged and kept properly supervised.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

There will be a paper next week, but none the week after. Get your important announcements in forthwith.

We are glad to feature the young people's training camp at Lake Shipshewana, Indiana, this week, and hope our readers, especially our young people, will take advantage of all information herein given and will avail themselves of the opportunities so far as possible.

Let all Ohio churches make the very best effort they can to meet their payments to the Ohio Mission Board before Conference. If all will do their best we believe the mission work of the district will not lag. Send money to R. A. Hazen, Treasurer, Ashland, Ohio.

The pastor of one of our prominent churches wrote the editor the other day: "I appreciated very much the last issue of the Brethren Evangelist. It seemed to me to make a decided gain in appearance and in enticing me to read it. I thank you." And we say "thank you" too, for the encouraging word.

From a Goshen, Indiana, church calendar, we learn that the Sunday school attendance for the month of March averaged 503; for April, 542; for May, 659, making an average for the three months of 568. The first Sunday in June registered 826 in attendance. That shows commendable growth and indicates that the people "have a mind to work."

The secretary of the Northern California district conference gives us a good report this week of their meeting held at Turlock, April 20-23. Brother N. W. Jennings is the pastor of this church. Brother Roger Darling was the special conference speaker, delivering a number of addresses on Prophecy. Also Brother A. L. Lynn was present from out of the district. The conference was well attended and the interest good.

The Lord continues to bless the work at Carleton, Nebraska, where Brother W. R. Deeter is pastor. He reports seven new members received by baptism at a recent service, and a banner attendance at the communion service. The Sisterhood is making advancements and the work with the boys under Brother Deeter's care is resulting in church membership. Brother Deeter enjoys his boys' work and he has been remarkably successful with them, having led a majority of them to Christ.

The young people of the Allentown, Pennsylvania, church, where Brother S. E. Christiansen is the pastor, have been publishing weekly by means of a rotosped a "C. E. Herald", which serves as church calendar and a conveyor of inspirational material. The issue for May 14th was "Anniversary Day Number", celebrating the 35th anniversary of the founding of the Allentown church. Dr. I. D. Bowman, who was the first elder of this congregation, was present to preach on the occasion of this celebration and during the week following delivered a series of Bible lectures. We congratulate the Allentown Brethren on this rejoicing and thanksgiving.

Brother H. W. Koontz, pastor of the church at Roanoke, Virginia, writes of the recent revival under the evangelistic leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller. There were seventy-seven decisions in all, reconsecrations and confessions, and thirty or more will be received into the membership of the church. The revival was preceded by a religious census of the community, which helped both to advertise the revival and to discover prospects. The campaign was a success not only from the standpoint of decisions, but in bringing the church before the community and in strengthening the friendship of the people for the church. With our church bearing such a fine testimony for Christ in that town, we may look forward to a bright future to be realized.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us a report of a portion of the commencement exercises, including the baccalaureate sermon by Brother C. H. Ashman, whose splendid sermon we have in hand for publication. Dr. Jacobs says the prospects are bright for a goodly attendance at the summer school. That reminds us of the importance of working among the churches for a large attendance of students at the opening of the fall session in September. Every pastor ought to be a committee of one in his congregation to search out at least one student to send to Ashland College. The California Quartette is working hard to that end, but if the goal of fifty new students from the churches is to be reached, the pastors must help put it across.

Brother R. D. Barnard, pastor of the church at Dayton, Ohio, reports good progress for the past year, having seen sixty-three added to his church in that time and 241 in the nearly four years of his pastorate. Dr. Monroe led in a Bible Institute last November. Then preceding Easter Dr. W. S. Bell was with them in a revival meeting which resulted in over eighty decisions for Christ being made, and of that number fifty-five were added to the church by baptism. The Sunday school is pressing forward splendidly, having a record of about 550 average attendance for the year. Other departments of the work are going good and the entire church is looking forward to the pleasure of entertaining the Ohio Conference, June 20 to 23. Brother Barnard gives instructions in the announcement department about reaching Dayton.

Brother Frank G. Coleman gives us a good report of his work at Hagerstown, Maryland. As a result of the pre-Easter revival twenty-five souls were added to the church, twenty-four by baptism and one by letter. They also gave an offering to Foreign Missions equal to the one they gave last year. If all have succeeded in doing that, it means no retrenchment in missions. A church that is observing every special day and lifting the offering called for at the time designated is displaying a type of loyalty that is commendable. And God blesses such a church in their local finances with all the greater generosity. We are glad to note an active Sunday School Cabinet meeting here, one that is unusual for size and program. It must surely be very much worth while. The adaptation of their Sunday morning church and Sunday school program to make for comfort during the summer is interesting and may be suggestive to others.

PUTTING JESUS INTO THE LIFE

By W. R. Deeter

Text—There was no room in the inn. Luke 2:7-b.

My anticipation for tonight has been to interpret the Word of God, that you might hear it aright, so may God give us wonderful liberty. The text will be used somewhat as an "accommodation text", and we may take it and "depart" from it occasionally. However, when Joseph and Mary went to Bethlehem to be taxed under the Roman government, they found the little city crowded with people, and all the rooming houses were filled. Thus it was briefly a matter of using the "next best" accommodation for the night's lodging. That night our Savior was born. He grew to be a man and went out to preach a Living Gospel. Much of his sayings have been recorded in Holy Scripture, and we have them with us today for our salvation and guidance.

The Sermon on the Mount was not put in the New Testament for religious decoration, but to help men live the Christian life, and to set up a Christian brotherhood approved of God.

We preachers have a wonderful time REMINDING our people of things that go to make up a Godly and a useful life. Now, if we must put Jesus into the Life of the World, just what steps should be taken, or advised. Let's put the measuring string about our hearts and heads this evening, and think together on the line of Industry.

I. Putting Jesus Into Industry

Many men—leaders in industry, so-called Christian men—need to be reminded of their duty along this line. There is a danger of losing the human touch and treating men as parts of a machine. The thousands of employees who call other thousands to labor and spend their hours in creative production, and these calling others to sell the productions, are inclined to appeal to the great industrialist as merely so many units in his money-making machine and which he is justified in securing as cheaply as possible that the profits may be the larger. There needs to be the recognition on the part of employers, and particularly of Christian employers, that man is more than a machine. He is more than a tool to make GAIN for his employer. The men who toil are not "like dumb driven cattle" to be herded into service, but are fellow-humans. This of course involves intelligent, honest purpose on the part of those employed. In a large factory where I was employed out-of-school hours for two years, the "boss" or "manager" made his rounds to see that every man was kept busy. This should not be necessary. It should be that a man will give his time honestly, and not waste it, to the organization which pays him.

But I am also contending for honesty among merchants. In every business there must be honesty and square dealing. The Christian should be known for his integrity. He should let his light shine in his good works to the glory of God the Father. The least that can be expected of him is absolute honesty and truthfulness. Every pound must contain 16 ounces; every foot must have 12 inches; every ton, 2,000 pounds; every gallon, four quarts. He must treat others as he would be treated in every way. The "Golden Rule" can be worked in every avenue of business and industry. And more than that, the Christian ought to put Christ into the very center of the business in which he is engaged.

II. Putting Jesus into the Social Life

Here is a dire need. In social life there must be purity, there must be honesty, there must be respect and consideration for others. If otherwise, Jesus cannot come in. HE MUST BE THERE! He must be in the MIDST. Too often he is left out. There are many avenues of life where he has not been put into the midst. Perhaps there is not so much greed and coveting now, as in recent years, but if we have the "Ahab spirit" of "wanting", "coveting", "scheming", "plotting" for what someone else has, there can be no room for Jesus in our life. Too many men are lacking in moral qualities,—Christian morality. There is "no room in the inn for Jesus."

Speaking of old Ahab, consider the vulgar, the vicious, the frivolous, the loose, the indifferent, the heedless of today, and some even among members of the church. Some would rather sing some low, vulgar song, than to sing a hymn. If you ask me what I think about some of the silly jazz that is sung, I will say that it is not fit for the Christian's lips or ears. Any song that is not or cannot be sung to the glory of God, and for the welfare of his Kingdom, is not worth singing. It is no comfort for men like Ahab to go to church. They are not at home in the House of the Lord. They have said of the Lord Jesus, there is "no room for him in the inn." Too busy and too crowded with everything else but Christ and the church. Too busy! TOO BUSY! And too crowded! Clubs, games, parties, socials, housework, farmwork, business—and even VISITING, to use any of the twenty-four hours a day, or 168 hours a week, for the Lord in some definite way.

O, we poor mortals! What needy creatures we are, when it comes to the spiritual blessings of life! No room, no ROOM, for Jesus!

III. Putting Jesus into the Church Life

In the last two decades many men have gone back, and we need new recruits to place in the front line trenches to help hold the Fort. Men who were once faithful and useful in Kingdom work are now in the background.

Men of wealth, men in professional lines, men of ability, men who were able to speak the "last word" of authority in their lines, have gone out to their places of loyalty and service to the church. They have become cold and indifferent to the churches. A certain minister went to call on one such member, and seated by the open fireplace, the kindly minister took the iron tongs and reached into the burning embers and took out a live coal and placed it on the hearth, separate from the rest. It soon began to lose its bright glow, gradually grew less brilliant, until it grew cold and dark. The parishioner said to the man of God, "You need not say a word, for I get your point, and it is true. What is there that I can do for the church, and I assure you I will be faithful from this time on." Would that more might see the point in these days.

Sometimes vacant pews make me sad. Folks are missing here and there, from all walks of life. Where are they? Do any of you know? If the church is to make itself felt as a power for God in the community, it takes you, and YOU! and YOU!! to be there in person. Only so can you be used of God.

Members of churches, your interests should be in the spiritual welfare of your community. Your chief concern should be the welfare of the Church of God. It should have first place in your lives. Your church needs your attention, your time and your talent. Your church needs you, and you need the church.

The simple Gospel of Jesus is not one that is divorced from heartaches and sorrow. Someone asks: "Should the church enter that field?" O, the sad hearts, bleeding

Infallible Evidences of Christ's Divinity

By Thomas Gibson

The works which Jesus did when upon earth, were the acid test of his divinity, and the authenticity and inspiration of his Word." If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works, that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him" (John 10:37, 38). Satan is doing his utmost to defeat the purpose of God, in denying facts of history. Testimony of eye-witnesses, which is in agreement with truth or facts, Satan is seeking to turn the truth into fables." The power which Christ manifested can only be accounted for by acknowledging his Divinity, or else by denying that he ever existed. Many are taking that position, doubting the veracity of faithful witnesses.

One of the many infallible proofs of Christ's divinity is found in the testimony of Peter, speaking of the voice which he heard from the excellent glory, when they (the disciples) were with Jesus in the Holy mount, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." To those who didn't hear God speak in an inaudible voice is this testimony, "We also have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn; and the day star arise in your hearts" (2 Peter 1:19).

Jesus said of himself, "I am the root, and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star." Rev. 22:16.

The literal fulfillment of prophecy, is one of the infallible proofs of the divinity of Jesus. The first intimation given in the scripture, of the divinity of Jesus, is found in Genesis 3:15. After the temptation and man's shameful fall, the Lord God predicted that in the fullness of time, he would send his only begotten Son, born of a woman, to deliver him from the curse of a broken law. God said to the woman, The seed of the woman (not the seed of the man) would bruise the serpent's head, and thou shalt bruise his heel," implying that Christ would destroy sin and Satan. Here was an intimation given that Christ, the Deliverer, would be the divine Son of God. The Lord, speaking to his people Israel through his prophet Isaiah, who lived almost one thousand years before the birth of Christ, was given a prophetic vision, concerning the coming Redeemer: "Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem" (Isa. 2:3).

Christ was promised as he came. "Therefore the Lord shall give you a sign, behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son and shall call his name Immanuel." Here we have the virgin birth promised. The prophet predicted correctly the Messiah's lineage, which would have been impossible, had he not been divinely inspired. "And in that day there shall be a root out of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious" (Isa. 11:10). The Apostle Paul takes up the glad refrain in Romans 15:12. The prophet Micah predicted the birthplace of Christ, and so confident were the people that Bethlehem would be the place, and that the time was near at hand, and so expectant were they that Christ would be born of a virgin, that history says, many of the virgins of Bethlehem remained virgins, each with the hope and expectation that she might be the favored one to become the earthly mother of our Lord. The prophet in his vision declared he would be the "Lion of the tribe of Judah."

How literally the prediction was fulfilled! as Christ descended from that tribe. The Holy Spirit doesn't make any mistakes, when he foretells any coming event. It is never "perhaps", or "probably", or "it may be so", but it is positively and invariably so. Look at some of the names, titles, and offices he was to have, and how graciously he possessed them!

"The Son of God", "The Spotless One", "The Righteous One", "The Innocent One", "The Just One", "Compassionate One", "Guiltless", "Harmless", "Merciful", "Humble One", "The Holy One", and many others,—all of these graces were exemplified in his beautiful life. One, if not the greatest infallible proof of Christ's divinity, is the fact "that never man spake like this man." Because he was both human and divine. Another convincing proof of his divinity was the fact, that "no fault was found in him." That was something that couldn't be said of any other who ever lived on this earth. Jesus gave life and sight to the physically dead and the physically blind, and he said to his disciples, "Greater works than these shall ye do, because I go unto my Father", and I will send down the chief executive of heaven, who will work "in you and through you". Jesus recognized the giving of spiritual life and spiritual sight, to be a greater work than the giving of physical life and physical sight.

We have many infallible proofs of the divinity of Jesus, in changing or controlling the laws that govern the universe.

When Christ's soul was sorrowful unto death, he prayed to his Father, saying, "Father, glorify thy name." Then there came a voice from heaven, saying, "I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again." The people that stood by heard the voice. Some of them said an angel spake to him. Jesus said, "This voice came not because of me, but for your sakes."

There are but a few of the many infallible proofs of the divinity of Jesus as recorded in his word, that we might believe that Jesus is the Son of God, and that believing we might have everlasting life.

DECISION DAY in the PROGRAM of the CHURCH

By C. D. Whitmer

What was Jesus' estimate of human life? He saw infinite possibilities in people. He valued them not for what they had already attained, but for what they might attain in the future.

Jesus spoke sternly to those who caused others to stumble. The most valuable thing a person has is his soul. Strip him of everything else, he is still rich if he possesses his soul. Jesus knew that people were worth saving. Therefore he came to seek and to save.

If a man values a lost sheep, how much more, says Jesus, does God value men, who are surely better than sheep? Look on man as God's child, and you will see his worth.

As the oak tree, indeed, a whole forest of oak trees, lies in an acorn, so do infinite possibilities lie in the child. Who could have foretold, when Jesus was born, aside from divine prophecy concerning him, what he would become? Neither do we know what talents are lying dormant in many a boy or girl in our Sunday school?

"In ourselves the sunshine dwells,
From ourselves the music swells,
By ourselves our life is fed
With sweet or bitter daily bread."

To decide for Christ means that we resolve to try to know his will and follow in his footsteps. Deciding for Christ is an act of will. Jesus says, "If any man wills to come after me." We can make up our minds as to whether or not we want to live the Christlike life.

To follow Christ means self-denial, saying, "NO" to selfishness of all sorts and living a life of thoughtful kindness for others. If we live for self we shall find at last dust and ashes. Live for Christ and life will be useful as well as good.

We need to decide for Christ. If we do not we shall drift and live an aimless life. Deciding for Christ means deciding to live as he would live if he were in our place.

Again, deciding for Christ involves repentance, and this big word means to change our minds. We have been living one kind of life, more or less selfish. Now we resolve to live differently. That is repentance or a change of mind.

Deciding for Christ may be done calmly, at home, in prayer, or in meetings. It involves a firm resolve to follow Jesus and make him king of our life.

It is easy for many to decide for Christ, as it is easy to enlist in an army. But it is much more difficult to live for Christ, and do as he would do. Count the cost.

A very large percent of the children of our churches today are being instructed concerning certain fundamental doctrines of the Bible, such as the Birth, Life, Service, Death and Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, and his power to save them from their sins, and when they get to the age of accountability and are growing into young manhood and womanhood, our task is growing more difficult, because they must reach that decision concerning their soul salvation. They must say Yes, or No to Christ.

This is the critical time in their life and it is at this point, that the truly evangelistic, or soul-saving church must put forth its efforts to help the youth to reach their decision. To a certain extent, the child and the youth have put their lives into our hands as teachers and preachers of God's Word, to mould into a useful life for God and the Church. They are trusting us to help them. We must not disappoint them.

It has been proven beyond all doubt, that a special day in the year set apart by our churches, known as Decision Day, is very advantageous to get children and young people to decide for Christ. I firmly believe that a present day evangelistic church will be wide awake on the subject of the youth deciding for Christ and become a member of the church. The church that does not put Decision Day in their church curriculum is not a growing church, neither is it looking for the future leaders of the church.

It is perfectly right that a church have accessions at most any service of the church. This shows an evangelistic spirit that is desirable. This can be accomplished to a much greater degree, however, among the adults, for the child and the youth do not realize the seriousness of conversion unless it is stressed by the teachers in charge of them. The child's nature is to follow a leader. Decision Day emphasizes the importance of child conversion. This thought is kept before the child, and by faithful teaching they will yield to Christ at that time, because others accept him.

This leads me to my second thought.—What should a present day church be doing to hold the youth in the church after he has decided for Christ?

The truly evangelistic church of today must be a preaching church, a church that preaches the Whole Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The youth today enjoys an old fashioned sermon as well as people used to enjoy them. But they do not always hear such sermons and they get discouraged with the work of the church.

Again, the present day church must be a teaching church.

The church's commission is to teach all nations, etc. The church must teach the Word of God that will appeal to the youth of today.

The church of today must be a shepherding church. As has already been said, it is comparatively easy to decide for Christ but it is difficult to live for Christ. If our church is a shepherding church, it will care for its flock of lambs. The church that cares for its young people is a promising church.

Then the church must be an evangelistic church. The church should fan the flame of spiritual life in its members. A locomotive is not more useless without fire and steam than is a Christian without the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

In a great city are two churches within a block of each other. The one has stood for evangelism and friendliness, the other for culture and refinement. The one church is crowded to the doors; on the other is a "For Sale" sign. Which church is your choice?

Many young people have been kept from deciding for Christ, because they thought the church did not take an interest in them, or that it was too cold toward them.

In conclusion, Decision Day should be one of the red letter days of our church, because on this day, many of our children and young people of our Sunday schools decide to take Jesus into their lives, and place themselves in the care of the church. What kind of a job are we doing?

I ask four questions for your meditation and solution.

- 1—What keeps people from deciding for Christ?
- 2—Why should decision not be delayed?
- 3—How does deciding for Christ benefit the child?
- 4—How and when should we decide for Christ?

hearts, the pain and the anguish,—lives hungering for comfort! O Men, shall we, as Christ's servants, stay away from a field which Jesus himself entered and said we should do likewise?

Should the Church stay out of politics? Yes! No!

Yes, if she is to be swept by the tide of crookedness, stealing, defaming and the selling of names, etc. NO!! if she is to fight the good fight of Faith for clean living, clean lives, clean records, and being four-square before God and men. Yes, we need to "evangelize" politics, and business. Corruption fears no church that ducks around the alleys and fears to be actively joined to the opposition. We need to face the enemy boldly and fearlessly.

Great it is to live in an age when we have so many needs. Beautiful is the service, and worth while is the labor of God's chosen ones who help plant seeds of righteousness in the world today. Souls CAN have Salvation, the lost CAN be saved, as in Jesus' day, if we meet the condition. Worldly elements of iniquity, slime, filth and all, must be swept from the hearts of men and women, before Jesus can come in.

In Conclusion

I think God wants some lawyers, doctors, teachers, professors and laymen consecrated. He wants them set in high places of service to carry out his mission. Should a man be a Christian and hide his profession? Should a lawyer be a Christian and hide the fact? Should a doctor be a Christian and conceal his Christianity? Should a teacher or a business man hide the light of God in their lives? It is time we put Jesus into our politics, our business, our professions, and brought the WHOLE of our lives under the Blood-stained Banner of King Immanuel.

Sin is the same today as of old. The Christ, who had the solution when he was here, has it NOW. The difference is not between the past and the present, or the Old and the New in our lives and our views. It is time we studied again old Isaiah, and see how he preached and taught for fifty years, and how God rewarded his efforts. His philosophy was practical, but it was hard on the unrighteous. It is time we re-studied Jesus Christ and how he met the conditions of his day. His teaching and preaching was PRACTICAL, for even history reveals that fact to us.

One time Simon Peter said, "I go fishing" and he took six men along. One day two men walked to Emmaus; as they left the outskirts of Jerusalem they looked back and saw the crosses. Later on they heard him say, "Go ye into all the world and teach my Gospel . . .". Look again! There are eleven disciples, and around the crosses are a multitude, and they heard him say, "It is finished". O Lord, help us to have the faith Jesus had. Our God is not DEAD. There is still a Cross on Golgotha, and an empty tomb in the garden, and men are going on in the Master's Name. Let him into your life. Don't keep him 'on the outside. A widow tells of the kindness of her neighbors, how they came in and shucked sixty acres of corn for her and cribbed it all in one day. How much better that was than simply "talking" of neighborliness and doing nothing. I think I see Jesus going down those rows of corn, helping in the work. I cannot think of him as being out along the roadside somewhere simply saying, "That's a nice piece of work!" He isn't merely an on-looker. No, he is right out there helping those men throw those ears of corn against the "bump board". That is putting Jesus into Life in a practical way.

What is our attitude toward him? Through him every preacher is called to preach the Gospel of peace. Through him every missionary goes to his field, though it takes him thousands of miles away from home and friends. Through him every song that moves the heart, is given. Through him we give and are given comfort and consolation when sorrow enters our home. Through him sinners are saved and the Church is built up. Through him we have right to the tree of Life. He is near us today; he is waiting, and longing to bless. When we leave him out we help to make it the saddest page in the world's history. O come to him now! Let him into your life.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

SELECTED PROHIBITION NEWS

Mississippi

The Mississippi Education Association, at its annual convention, passed this resolution:

We pledge ourselves to intensified instruction of school children on the evil effects of alcohol and narcotic drugs upon the human system. We oppose the distribution of obscene literature and pictures, and approve the action of the United States Government in denying the mails to matter of this kind.

Medical Liquors

Restrictions on the prescribing of liquors by the medical fraternity have been removed. Doctors may now write prescriptions for their patients for thirty and even sixty days. New York druggists reported no rush to buy liquor as restrictions were lifted. But there are rumors that racketeers will buy out a number of drug stores in order to get in on the legal sale of liquor.

Schools Ban Beer

The Union Signal reports that a number of leading universities have banned the sale of beer on their campuses. Among these are the University of West Virginia, Washington and Jefferson College, Stanford University, and Northwestern University.

States for Repeal

Six states have indicated by their vote that they favor repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. They are Michigan, Wisconsin, Rhode Island, Wyoming, New Jersey, and New York.

WE MUST WAGE PEACE

Every American can be happy that the President takes an aggressive attitude in waging peace. There is abundant ground for believing that what he did last week in his precedent-smashing appeal to the world brought one Herr Hitler to a pause in his saber-rattling career and made it possible to go on to develop some plan for world disarmament. It was brilliant. It was magnificent.

Two things must be remembered, however. First, the price of peace is eternal vigilance. It must be waged just as earnestly and incessantly as war was ever waged. These diplomats make fine promises, but when it comes down to terms they do not readily agree. Secondly, it may very well be that the power with which Mr. Roosevelt spoke for a nation unbound by any alliances would be dissipated by any tie-up in a foreign alliance, such as he seems to have in mind. He is a believer in the League of Nations. It is a question for solemn consideration whether we dare go into any federation whose pronouncements we would be morally obligated to carry out.

In short, are we here engaged in an effort to find an easy way to peace? Peace is not to be had by an easy device. It must always be waged vigorously, for the simple reason that the people of the world are not Christian and we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers in heavenly places. The only true way to peace is by Christian missions.—Christian Standard.

A great service is being done by those leaders and organizations making these camps possible. God bless and prosper camps Shipshewana and Juniata, and any others that the needs of our youth may call forth. Many may be inspired and challenged and equipped thereby for better service in the local churches or in whatever fields the Lord may call.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humbert

(Study Number Twenty-Two)

Chapter Ten

"And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven—and he had in his hand a little book open; and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot upon the earth. And cried with a loud voice as when a lion roareth;—and lifted up his hand to heaven, and swore by him that liveth for ever and ever—that there should be time no longer" (Rev. 10:1-7).

The Angel of the Lord

This is "another angel". Not one of the seven trumpet angels nor one of the four that were bound. His description reminds us of the description of Christ in the first chapter. In fact, it is no doubt Christ manifested as The Angel of the Lord (Ch. 8:3). The whole proceedings about the title deed brings us to Old Testament ground and since the Jews rejected Christ as their Messiah, he is manifested as he was in Old Testament times, that is, as The Angel of the Lord.

The Unsealed Book

He holds in his hand a book and the book is open. We have seen this book sealed and in the Father's right hand (Ch. 5:1). We heard the whole creation crying out in joy when the Lamb took the book, (Vs. 7). We have seen disaster visited earthward as the seals were broken. This is the title deed of our redemption. Christ redeemed the world at the cross, but did not take possession at the time. The title deed was sealed and placed in the Father's right hand, for safe keeping, until the day would come when Christ would take the book, break the seals and take possession of his purchased possession (Eph. 1:14).

In this chapter we see him coming down with the seals broken and the book open and placing his right foot upon the sea and his left foot upon the earth (Vs. 2). Placing his feet upon the earth and sea, signifies him taking possession of the earth. God told Israel that "Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours" (Deut. 11:24). When Columbus set his foot upon new soil, he took possession of it for his country. So here, Christ is taking possession of the earth.

Judah's Lion

This is no doubt a foreview of Armageddon, the time when the Lord "shall roar out of Zion" (Joel 3:16). We have several such views. There is a heavenly view in chapter fourteen. A view of the demon activity (Ch. 16:12-21) and a view of the battle itself in chapter nineteen. Christ will not take real possession of the earth until after chapter nineteen, but here in chapter ten, we see him proclaiming with a loud voice, like a roaring lion, that time (or delay) will be no longer (Vs. 6).

This is the Lion of the tribe of Judah (Ch. 5:5). He took the book through his blood bought merit as the Lamb of God. He comes to earth with the invincible power of a lion. Satan may go about as a roaring lion (1 Pet. 5:8) but he will tremble when Judah's lion roars.

Delay no Longer

We have no way to know what the seven thunders uttered for John was commanded to "write them not" (Ch. 10:4).

"The angel lifted up his hand to heaven and swore by him that liveth for ever and ever . . . that there should be time no longer" (Vs. 6). God is not slack in his dealing with evil but is longsuffering, not willing that any should perish (2 Pet. 3:9). But time will finally come when time for repentance will be no longer. That is, judgment will no longer delay.

Disappointment in Delay

There has been delay and revival,—delay and revival until many have sunk into apathy and cried, "Where is the promise of his coming?" (2 Pet. 3:4). John the Baptist grew weary as he waited for the Messiah to take the throne, the early church was looking and expecting the coming of their Lord and saints of all ages have held that hope. But always there has been delay and disappointment. There is danger here. Some will become discouraged and will say in their heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming" and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, (Matt. 24:48). A man need not use a club to smite another. The cruellest weapon available is sharper than any lash. "Come, let us smite him with the tongue" was the cry of Jeremiah's enemies (Jer. 18:18).

There has been delay after delay but I am glad that it has been so. Had the Lord come forty years ago, I would have missed that happy clime. Let us therefore thank God and await his appointed time and not be as those who cried, "The days are prolonged and every vision faileth" (Ezek. 12:22).

The Mystery of God

"In the days of the voice of the seventh angel when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished" (Vs. 7).

The seventh trumpet brings a series of events. "In the days," points to a prolonged fulfillment like we might say "In the days of Abraham Lincoln." It will probably occupy a period of three and a half years. Just what "the mystery of God" may refer to in this passage, I am unable to say. There are several mysteries revealed in Scripture. This cannot mean that ALL mystery is revealed for the messages of the seven thunders are still a mystery. It cannot mean the mystery of the church for that was completed at the rapture and the church mystery was not revealed to the Old Testament prophets (Eph. 3:1-6), while the mystery here referred to is the one "declared to his servants the prophets" (Rev. 10:7).

Since we are dealing with judgment, the "mystery of God" may refer to the mystery of evil being permitted to oppose God in the Second person of the Godhead in his work of restoration of Godliness (1 Tim. 3:16) which would include his whole redemptive program. This is probably what it refers to, for the title deed includes all of these things. Evil has long opposed our God, but God has declared to his servants the prophets that right will triumph and the time has come when he will make his promise good.

Symbol of Authority

John is commanded to take the book and eat it up. This book, being the title deed to our redemption, holds the whole authority for Christ as Savior. Sometime ago I saw the picture of a man in Washington. D. C. handing the gavel to another man. The gavel is the symbol of authority and in the hand of a man it gives him power to decide questions of great importance. So here, the open book, in the hand of our Lord, is his warrant and gives him authority to dethrone all enemies and take the power himself.

The Doubter's Dialogue

"Take, first of all, the predictions, the prophecies, of the Bible. As Pascal said, 'They are the greatest of the proofs of Jesus Christ.' To say that a thing will come to pass, and then bring it to pass thousands of years or hundreds of years, or even a few years afterwards, that or nothing is the power of God. The utterance and the fulfillment of prophecy are enough to show the Bible has a divine origin."

"But if God gave predictions and prophecies, they ought to be so clear that you could understand them. You came here because you wanted to sit where John had the vision of the Apocalypse, with its alleged predictions as to the future of the Church and the world. But do you pretend to understand some of those predictions and strange figures? Can you say just who the beast is with two horns and which spake like a dragon? Do you know who the scarlet woman, seated upon the dragon, is? or the woman clothed with the sun and the moon under her feet? or the locusts who had hair like a woman and whose teeth were the teeth of lions?"

"No."

"Then what use is such a prophecy?"

"Even the obscure things in the Bible may be a part of our discipline and probation. But even in some of those passages which you have cited, it is not hard to see great moral and spiritual truth."

"What, for instance?"

"You spoke of the beast, and also of how the dragon persecuted the child born to the woman clothed with the sun. It is not difficult to see that we have there the history of the conflict between good and evil, between truth and error, between the Church and the world."

"And everything else in the Bible—are you able to understand it? Ezekiel's flaming wheel? Christ preaching to the spirits in prison? and the great prophecies uttered just before his death—can you always tell whether he's talking about the destruction of Jerusalem or the end of the world?"

"No."

"Well, what then have you go to say about those passages, for if the Bible is a book of divine origin, it ought to be clear and lucid."

"I remember what I saw once on the wall of Canterbury Cathedral."

"What was that?"

"It was a tablet with part of the conversation between Matthew and Prudence in Pilgrim's Progress. Prudence says to Matthew: 'What do you think of the Bible?'"

"It is the holy Word of God."

"Is there nothing written therein but what you understand?"

"Yes, a great deal."

"What do you do when you meet with such places therein that you do not understand?"

"I think God is wiser than I. I pray also that he will please to let me know all therein that he knows will be for my good."

"But what of doctrines of the Bible which contradict one another?"

"Which?"

"Why, the doctrine of God's sovereignty and predestination, and yet the doctrine of man's free will and responsibility. I can show them to you in the same books, chapters, and even in the same verses of the Bible."

"The very fact that such doctrines are thus taught points to a divine origin."

"How?"

"Why if they were merely human documents you wouldn't find the two doctrines such as the divine sovereignty and the freedom of man's will taught side by side. Truths which have tasked the faith of believers in every age could hardly have suggested themselves to a merely human spectator as true."

"Well, now, we'll pass from things that you can't understand to things that you can understand."

"You mean—"

"The moral and ethical teachings of the Bible. Almost every sentiment in the New Testament can be discovered in some form in the Old Testament, and much that is in the Old Testament you can find in the ancient literatures or sacred books of other peoples and other ages. So that must mean, either that the Bible is not inspired, or that other literatures are inspired just as much as the Bible."

"No."

"Why not?"

"God has never left himself without a witness, and these ethical and moral teachings are fragments and echoes of the original revelation given to man. But in the Bible, the main thing is redemption from sin, and all these teachings are to be taken in connection with that redemption. Jesus may have said things which sound like what Plato or Zoroaster or Confucius said; but that in no way invalidates the claim of Christ as a Redeemer or as a Savior."

"But there are so many things the Bible does not tell. There are so many things I would like to know, and it seems to me that an inspired book ought to be able to tell me."

"But these very omissions point to a divine origin."

"Its omissions?"

"Yes. What the Bible does not tell you. The silence of the Bible is as eloquent as its speech. Take the silence of the Gospels about the child life of Jesus; not a word from the time he is twelve years of age until he is thirty; and not a word from the time he was brought back as an infant to Nazareth till he was twelve years of age. Then there is the silence of the Bible as to great world movements. Save where these touch the fortunes of God's people and the plan of revelation, the Bible looks down upon them as silently as the stars upon a battlefield. Then there is the strange silence of the books of Moses on the subject of the future life. It looks as if a man brought up as Moses was among the Egyptians, where such emphasis was given to the future life, must have been divinely inspired when he wrote a code of laws in which the rewards and punishments of the future state are not mentioned. We are curious, too, to know a great deal about heaven. But the New Testament, save for a few great principles of that life, is silent."

"How can I argue with a man who says that even what the Bible leaves out points to its divine origin! But now we'll come to something different. You say the contents declare the book divine. But I discover in the Bible inaccuracies, contradictions and false and immoral teaching."

"Where are the inaccuracies?"

"At the very start. The Bible says, God made the world in six days."

"How many did it take to make the world?"

"Take? I don't know. But not six days certainly."

"Sixty? or six hundred? six thousand? or six millions, billions? trillions?"

"I don't know."

"Yet you do know it was not made in six days. But how do you know? You were not there."

"No. Neither were you."

"And yet you say you know the world was not made in six days. What we do know is, that there has been a long period of change and growth and development in the physical world. Just how long that is, is a guess; and one man's guess is as good as another's. How long it took to bring into existence the original matter which since then has been shifted and changed and altered, neither you nor I nor the wisest scientist or theologian knows or can know. The Bible says it was done in six days. God could do it, for God is infinite, yet those days may be used in the sense of long periods and epochs of time. A millennial day is spoken of and many places in the Bible where a solar day, as we understand it, is not meant."

"Then you think there is much in the Bible, in the Book of Genesis, as well as much in science, that we do not understand?"

"Much indeed; and until we do let it be careful about saying that it dictates the other."

"But there are inaccurate statements and mistakes."

"Where?"

"In many places. But I mention this one. The Gospel of Matthew, in telling of how Judas betrayed Christ for thirty pieces of silver says this was in fulfillment of a prophecy in Jeremiah; whereas, the only prophecy like it at all is in Zechariah, and not Jeremiah."

"Jeremiah might have used such a statement also. There is no reason to think that everything Jeremiah said is in his one book. Some think that the name Zechariah, instead of Jeremiah, got in through the mistake of a careless scribe who was copying the records; and some, I suppose, would be willing to say that Matthew quotes the main thing correctly, but made a slip as to remembering the author, and yet that would not affect their idea of the inspiration of the Bible."

"But what about the wrong teachings in the Bible?"

"Which do you mean?"

"It praises bad men."

"Whom?"

"David. It calls him a man after God's heart, and yet he was cruel, sensual, a murderer, an adulterer of the worst sort. Yet both Old Testament and the New Testament speak of him as a man after God's own heart."

"That is said of David before his fall, and not afterward; and it is said of David in contrasting him with King Saul who set his will against the will of God. David with all his faults, too, was a man of wonderful magnanimity, generosity, full of thankfulness, and although he did sin deeply, he repented greatly. Then there is one thing about David you forget."

"What?"

"How terribly he was punished for his sin. The sword was never to depart from his house. Certainly, no one would ever get the idea from what the Bible tells us about David that God overlooks sin."

JESUS RISES FROM THE DEAD

(Lesson for June 18)

Lesson Text: Mark 16:1-20; Golden Text: Mark 16:6

The Empty Sepulcher. Mark 16:1-8

The commonly accepted view of the events connected with the death of Jesus, and the disposal of his body, is that on Friday before sunset, Joseph of Arimathea placed the body in his own new tomb; and then, upon what basis the belief is founded I do not know, it is presumed that Nicodemus, who had come to Jesus by night, sent a hundred weight of embalming spices to be used in the preparation of the body for permanent interment by the devoted women who were observing the Sabbath to pass so that they might perform this last act of respect to one who had loved them and who had been loved by them in return. But more important was destined to be theirs, when they approached the tomb they found it empty. The Lord of Glory was not to be confined to earth.

TUESDAY

Jesus Appears to Mary. Matthew 28:1-10
It was but just that Jesus, who had been "born of woman" as he assumed a human form to become the Savior of the world, should make his first appearance, after the price of the world's redemption had been paid, to a woman.

And so Mary was chosen to be this favored one and "he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, from whom he had cast out seven demons." Quickly she carried the news to the disciples, but they were slow to believe, as men have usually been when a startling truth is brought to their attention.

WEDNESDAY

Jesus Appears to Two. Luke 24:13-35

Later, on the same day, while two of Jesus' disciples were walking to a neighboring village, downcast and sad because of the apparent collapse of their dream of a new kingdom of Israel, an apparent stranger joined them as they walked and manifested an interest in their wellbeing making inquiry as to the cause of their sadness, and then expounding the scriptures to them in such a manner that it captured their hearts to "burn within" them, and still they failed to recognize their risen Lord.

THURSDAY

Jesus Appears to Ten. Luke 24:36-43

After breaking bread with Jesus in Emmaus, at which time their "eyes were opened" so that they recognized their previously unrecognized guest as their risen Lord, they hastened back to Jerusalem where they met the remaining apostles and there declared what they had seen and experienced. "And as they thus spoke, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you." Still they were reluctant to believe until he had asked them for something to eat and had eaten it before them.

FRIDAY

Jesus Commissions His Disciples. Mark 16:14-18

If left to their own devices the apostles and followers of Jesus would, without a doubt, all have felt very much like Peter when he said, "I go a fishing." Yes, they were all to "go fishing," but fishing for men rather than fishing for fish. So, while the instructions of Jesus were very brief, they were very specific, so they have been taken as the "marching orders" of Jesus by every loyal follower of his from that day to this. Not that every individual Christian is to become a preacher of the gospel in some foreign land, but that every individual Christian is to have some part in spreading the glad tidings of salvation through the crucified and risen Lord.

SATURDAY

Jesus Ascends to Heaven. Acts 1:6-11

While the disciples' hopes of a restored Israel had been blasted by the death of Jesus, yet, after having had opportunity to behold him on a certain number of occasions after his resurrection, their hopes were revived to the extent that upon their last meeting with him their question was "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" It is difficult for us to understand how they could be so dull of comprehension, but are we so sure we would have done any better? But after giving them the promise of the Holy Ghost to come upon them, "he was taken up; and a cloud received him."

SUNDAY

Deliverance from Death. Psalm 16:1-11

Men have never wanted to have their resting place in the earth to be final. They have always longed and hoped for something better than that. Long before the coming of Jesus into the world to bring "life and immortality to light" there were longings in the souls of men for that life beyond the grave.

The psalmist, David, had such a longing when he exclaimed "the sorrows of death compassed me." But he says "I have set the Lord always before me," and "neither wilt thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption."

Increase Church-Attendance

Church Hospitality Month. A summer or a fall month may be particularly planned to attract visitors. Whenever possible, the young people should definitely organize their work of promoting the services and also the Christian Endeavor meetings among those who are not active in any church relationship. Let a good-sized committee, or the chairman of all the society's committees, prepare a "master list" of such young persons, based on school and office and shop acquaintances, an informal survey of the neighborhood, consultation with the pastor and the Sunday school teachers, and inquiry through merchants, postmen, and others as to newcomers to the neighborhood. This list could be so divided that each member will be responsible for about three persons in the first two weeks of the month. Later, the names may be shared so that two or more members will seek to win the interest of each one of these unchurched young persons.

Front-Pew Section. Arrangement may be made with ushers to reserve a front section in the church, at either the morning or the evening service, for the young people of the Christian Endeavor society or of certain Sunday school classes. The group may march to its place in a body, and late comers, whether members or visitors, may be seated with this group. In some of the largest churches of North America, which welcome crowds to the evening service, the reserved-section plan is followed. One such church reserves the centre of the balcony for its young people's Christian Endeavor groups, that come at 7:25 o'clock from their various meeting rooms.

Young People's Choir or Orchestra. Many churches have given young people a definite part in the service by means of a chorus or orchestra, or both, who participate each week or once each month.—Selected.

"Always Been Done That Way"

There is a sanctity about age; but if an old thing stands in the way of a better new thing, then the sanctity of age becomes a superstition and an idolatry.

I have been in churches and communities where the one sentence, "We have never done it that way here," was enough to prevent the introduction of noble and most useful new methods of work, and where the same formula served to mummify the town and all its institutions.

The first editor and the founder of this paper, Rev. William H. H. Murray ("Adirondack" Murray, because he opened up the Adirondacks for summer pleasure), in his vivacious little book entitled "Deacons," drops these remarks: "I wish to set the strong lusty present face to face with the weak and wrinkled past; and let the stout lungs of the one breathe a new vitality into the wrinkled bosom of the other. I never let age, alone, sanctify anything, nor prejudice my mind against it. If a whole cata-comb of mummies stood in the path of a Pacific Railroad, I would say to the engineers, 'Away with these dry and dusty threads of withered mortality, albeit souls once tabernacled within the circle of these linen vestments!' Yet some there are who would call this sacrilege, and gaze in holy reverence at the senseless objects, and sniff with pious delight the scent of an ancient embalment."

It is absurd to scoff at age. All that we have, we have from the past. But it is ours not to lie down upon or prostrate ourselves before it; it is ours to build upon. "It has always been done that way" may be a valid argument, but only if "that way" is the best way yet discovered.—"Well's Say-So."

and earn all they can so when they get old they'll have something." He repeated these words, "so they'll have something," several times and with emphasis. I fear that our visit was the Lord's last invitation to that unfortunate man to transfer his interest in the god of riches to the riches of God, for only a few weeks afterward the business house in which he had invested nearly all his wealth became bankrupt and the shock of the loss caused his death in a few days. His god had died and he followed.

Contrast this with the attitude of William Carey who was later called of God to be the pioneer missionary to India. While he was yet in England a friend took him aside one day and rebuked him, saying, "By your going about preaching as you do, you are neglecting your business." (Carey was a shoe-maker.) "If you only attended to your business more, you would soon get on and prosper, but, as it is, you are simply neglecting your business!"

"Neglecting my business!" said Carey, looking steadily at his friend. "My business is to extend the kingdom of God. I only cobble shoes to pay expenses."

The Love of Pleasure.—Pleasure is the devil's counterfeit for the joy and peace that God offers to every man. This false love has robbed many a Christian of his interest in souls and of his testimony for the Lord. A man who will fritter away his time before a card table, a movie screen, or a radio, while he is neglecting his Bible, is letting the enemy of souls steal a march on him. If there is any permanent and satisfactory good to be derived from pleasure then those who have drunk pleasure's cup to the full should show the greatest benefits.

But consider Nero, who had so far exhausted all the arts of pleasure, that he offered prizes to any who would devise new methods of enjoyment. See him as he sits on his splendid throne, the emperor of Rome, the conqueror of the world. The porches of his palace are a mile long. The ceilings of his banquet halls are arranged to shower fragrant perfumes upon the revellers. Entertainers are gathered to his courts from every corner of the world. His crown is worth half a million dollars. His very mules are shod with silver. A thousand chariots accompany him when he travels. He never wears the same garment twice—resplendent and costly though it be. Pleasures to glut are his. But he is peevish, gloomy, at heart miserably unhappy. He is unsatisfied, because he is unsaved. He dies a suicide.

Then consider Paul, who lies in one of Nero's lonely dungeons, "the prisoner of the Lord." A chain binds him to a Roman soldier, the scars on his back still speak of "five times forty stripes, save one," the lines on his face tell of perils unparalleled, the executioner is preparing his axe,—the end is in view. But he is rejoicing evermore. His is a peace that passeth all a Nero's understanding. He is happy, he is satisfied, because he is saved. He is now ready to be offered and he goes to be with Christ, which is far better.

Here then are the issues—eternal life and eternal death.

But the devil has blinded the eyes of many and obscured the issues, so that multitudes are in the grip of such lusts—the flesh-lust, the money-lust, and the pleasure-lust.

And this plague of indifference seems to

—•—•— PASSION FOR SOULS —•—•—

By Ernest G. Gehman

Not so long ago but that the memory of it is still bleeding fresh, a baby was lost. Men all over the earth were justly stirred. Upwards of a million dollars were spent in the effort to find it. And how our hearts were wrung when its tragic end was at last discovered. Yet the facts remain that the baby is safe and that its idolized but non-Christian father is far more truly lost than the baby ever was. But why are men not stirred over this? Fortunes are sacrificed to find a saved baby, but not a dollar to save a lost father. Why this strange inconsistency?

Three men were accidentally carried aloft by the great airship Akron, as they clung to a ground-rope that should have been cast off. The thousands that witnessed the plight of these men were horrified as they watched them holding on in awful desperation while they were being carried higher and higher. The strength of one man failed and he went hurtling down to instant death. Men prayed and cursed by turns. Women shrieked and fainted. Another fell. And when at last the third was safely drawn up to the dirigible, there was unrestrained and universal rejoicing over his rescue. But only rarely indeed does a man's imminent danger of a fall to spiritual death occasion violent grief, or another's rescue to salvation in Christ bring tears and exclamations of rejoicing to an onlooking multitude.

Still more recently twelve or fifteen men were at work in a steeply inclined portion of a great pipe-line, nine feet in diameter, that had been laid to carry water across mountains to a California city. One man near the top slipped and started to slide. He struck the others, causing them to lose their footing, and in a moment, like a human avalanche, they were sliding with increasing speed over the rough joints and sharp bolt-heads of the conduit. As if to add to the horror, one man, grasping wildly, tore down the lights that had been temporarily strung up, and the screaming, fighting mass of men rushed down the long incline in utter darkness. A number died almost at once and most of the others were not expected to live, because of having been fearfully lacerated by the sharp projections in the tube. The awfulness of the accident shocks us, but there are multitudes around us sliding, in spiritual darkness and with growing speed, down to certain destruction, yet we are all but indifferent to their condition. Why all this spiritual lethargy, this insensibility to the dire need of the dying?

In trying to find an answer to this question I spoke to a number of Christian men whose varied occupations of merchant, butcher, baker, barber, manufacturer, and garage man bring them in contact with many people every day. Their explanations of the all-but-universal coldness to real religion were surprisingly unanimous, and they laid the blame chiefly at the door of normal Christians who because of carnality, covetousness, and love of pleasure are first surrendering their spiritual life and then are failing to commend the Gospel of Christ to the unsaved about them.

Carnality—that condition in the professing Christian in which the appetites and demands of the flesh are largely in control—is soul-killing to him and a stumbling-block to the sinner. Paul would not have eaten meat if it had caused spiritual offense, but many today indulge in tobacco and other inconsistencies with not a care as to the miserable advertisement they make of the Christ they profess to follow.

Covetousness—that lust for money and material things which makes their acquisition the absorbing passion in life—is significantly called idolatry, for its victims have transferred their affections from the God of heaven to a very earthly god, which, though they have served him faithfully, sweated, schemed, even lied and stolen for him, will have to stay on earth when they depart to give account for the deeds done while in the body.

Once while soliciting funds, a brother and I called on an old man, whom we soon found to be opposed to our work on the grounds that "young people ought not to waste years in school but should get to work, as I did, be affecting Christian workers too, so that they go about their soul-winning in a very haphazard fashion. God help us!

I am told that a group of Washington preachers met with a celebrated actor, and one asked him, "How is it that people weep under your words of fiction, when they are indifferent to mine, which are true?"

He replied, "I preach fiction as if it were fact, and you fact as if it were fiction."

There is a story of a traveler who on a dark stormy night was approaching a place where the raging torrent had washed away the bridge. A man met him and said, "Are you aware that the bridge is gone?"

"No," was the answer. "Why do you think so?"

"Oh, I heard such a report this afternoon, and though I am not certain about it, you had perhaps better not proceed."

Deceived by the careless tone of the informer, the traveler pushed onward in the way of death. Soon another man met him and cried out in great alarm, "Sir, sir, the bridge is gone!"

"Yes, so I heard," said the traveler, "but I hardly believe it."

"Oh, it is true, it is true! I know the bridge is gone, for I barely escaped with my life. Danger is before you and you must not go on."

Convinced by this man's earnest voice and look and gestures, the traveler turned back and was saved. The information was the same in both cases, but the way it was told by one gave it the air of a fable, and by the other the air of truth.

Woodrow Wilson has left the record of an interesting contact with D. L. Moody. "I was in a barber's shop, sitting in a chair, when I became aware that a personality has entered the room. A man had come quietly in upon the same errand, and sat in the chair next to me. Every word that he uttered showed a personal and vital interest in the man who was serving him; and before I got through with what was being done to me, I was aware that I had attended an evangelistic service, because Mr. Moody was in the next chair. I purposely lingered in the room after he left, and noted the singular effect his visit had upon the barbers in that shop. They talked in undertones. They did not know his name, but they knew that something had elevated their thought. And I felt that I left that place as I should have left a place of worship."

Moody was a man who made the winning of souls the chief aim in his life and God honored that aim to the salvation of thousands.

That the winning of souls may become the crowning passion in our lives we need to get a vision of the last command of our Lord; and we need to get a vision of eternity. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Therefore, "he that winneth" not dollars, fame, power—but "souls, is wise." "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." Therefore it is our sacred duty to go "and teach all nations, baptizing them . . . and teaching them to observe all things . . ." "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men," so that they may escape the wrath of God that "cometh on the children of disobedience" and may enter into the God-prepared glories that the natural "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man," but which "God hath revealed unto us by his Spirit."

A preacher whose ministry had been greatly blessed of God lay on his deathbed. Friends watched his life slowly ebbing away until the spirit left the body—but God wanted one more testimony through his servant and the soul returned for but a moment to its former habitation, the preacher suddenly opened his eyes, sat up, and with an indescribable earnestness he said, "Oh, I have just had a vision of eternity. If I could live on earth again, Oh! how I would preach, how I would preach!"

Do we feel a lack of burden for the lost? Let us pray God that he may mightily roll it upon our souls.—Eastern Mennonite School Journal.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

ALL OHIO—DAYTON WELCOMES YOU

We Welcome You because a great conference is in prospect. Our conference this year celebrates our 50th year. We need you to help. The attempt of the Program Committee has been to plan a program fitting for this great event. You will receive benefit in coming.

We Welcome You because we have so often been welcomed. Other places and other conferences have been so cordial, and we ask a like privilege of showing our good will to great numbers of Ohio people. Entertainment—Lodging and breakfast will be a part of our courtesy to you, and the noon and evening meals will be served at the church for 25 cents each. We shall do our best to make you enjoy your stay in Dayton.

How to Come. Those coming by train will probably use the Pennsylvania by way of Columbus or the Big Four by way of Galion. The Erie into Dayton is now operating on a very limited schedule. There are fine bus connections with all parts of the state. The Cincinnati and Lake Erie, and the Dayton and Western Interurban lines operate through Dayton.

Those driving should consult a late road map. Avoid Route 4 from Springfield to Dayton. All other roads are good and open so far as we know. Route 42 to Route 40; then Route 40 either to Route 69 or Route 201, then these into Dayton will be better for those in the north-east or east. Route 69 or Route 25 into Dayton will be better for those from the north or north-west.

The church is located at 1900 West Third Street. Third Street is easy to find. It is the main street east and west. If you are in or near Dayton and if we can help you call HE-mlock 3564.

Yours for a Great Conference,
R. D. BARNARD, Entertaining Pastor.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The annual baccalaureate services were held last Sunday in the Park Street church and were well attended. The academic procession was impressive, totalling, with the Faculty, just a few short of one hundred.

Rev. Charles H. Ashman, pastor of the First Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, was the speaker, using the topic, "The Quest of Life". The sermon was excellent and well received. It was a pleasure to have with us Dr. Bell, president of the Board of Trustees, who expects to remain for the commencement exercises, Thursday of the present week.

It was peculiarly fitting that Rev. Ashman should preach the sermon as he has two children in the graduating class this year, as well as another in the Sophomore class.

Also, other friends were present, among them Mrs. Marie Lichty Shaffer, co-founder with her brother, A. H. Lichty, of the John Lichty endowed scholarship.

I can not speak too highly of the individual recitals, piano, voice, and public speaking, which are parts of the Commencement season events.

Since last writing, the College defeated Wooster in baseball, Oberlin and Fenn, a Cleveland college, and was defeated by Muskingum and also by Wooster in a return game.

It may not be generally known that there is a quartette from the College now visiting our churches, consisting of Messrs. Paul Bauman, Pine, Carter, and Colburn. The purpose of this quartette is twofold; to render whatever spiritual service may be possible in singing gospel songs and also to interest suitable young people in coming here to do their college work. It is earnestly hoped that these young men may render a real service both to the local congregations and also in a more definite way to the College. They plan to be out most of the summer.

At this writing the prospects for the summer sessions are bright. Putting forth every legitimate effort we can, it is earnestly hoped that the College may be able to serve as large a constituency this coming year as in any year past.

Educational day was fittingly observed this past Sunday at the local church. Dr. Bixler of the department of History and the writer shared the time in speaking to the local congregation. Word has come from at least one congregation to the effect that they have doubled the contribution of last year.

My next communication will give a general resume of the year, including the remaining commencement events.

Before closing I must also record the fact that Dr. Caldwell of the department of Sociology has had several articles accepted again by certain outstanding journals in his field. I doubt whether any other Ohio college of equal size has had a record to equal ours in this respect.

ROANOKE REVIVAL

The Roanoke, Virginia, church takes great pleasure in reporting a very successful revival held by Rev. R. Paul Miller from May 2 to 21. For many months the church prayed and planned; cottage prayer meetings were held, lists of the unsaved within the Sunday school were taken by members and prayed for daily. A religious census of the community was made and each canvasser used the opportunity of telling about the coming revival. Before the revival began God made our people to feel that prayers would be answered and that the church would be lifted upon higher ground by a glorious meeting.

Some of the results of the meeting are as follows. Seventy-seven in all made decisions for Christ, including new converts and reconsecrations. Of this number thirty or more will be received into the fellowship of this church. The goal of a church that is truly spiritual, cutting clear from the entanglements of the world, was held up by the evangelist and the response of the members to make and keep such a church standard was gratifying. With so many churches lowering their standards to the level of the world our people have been made to realize that this is our great opportunity of presenting to this city a church that is a challenge to the best spiritual light a man can have. The revival was also of great value in bringing the faith and teachings of our denomination before the people of Roanoke. Much of the time fifty percent of an audience were visitors and their interest was shown by the fact that many bought Dr. L. S. Bauman's book, "The Faith Once for all Delivered unto the Saints." At this point I would like to mention that Dr. Bauman's book has been of inestimable value in convincing and bringing into our church some of our very best workers. We are losing much by not putting into circulation more literature of this kind to let the world know that there is at least one denomination that stands upon the Word of God.

Too much cannot be said about the evangelist, Brother Miller. This is the third time he has held meetings for churches of which I have been pastor and I have always found his association most helpful and enjoyable. In working with him I have found that the secret of his power in personal work and in the pulpit is an unusual prayer life. Also he is an Evangelist who sticks to his work. He was here to save souls and to build up the church and there was no time for him to go fishing, golfing, or take pleasure trips, etc. As a preacher he proved to be a power for Christ in the pulpit. His straightforward presentation of the Word, under the power of the Holy Spirit convicted sinners, shamed indifferent church members, and brought many to partake as never before of the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Since this revival both pastor and people have a greater vision of the need of a lost world. This community and city challenge us as never before, and until the Lord comes we but ask for the power of the Holy Spirit to lead us as a church in fulfilling our supreme obligation to God by bringing lost men face to face with their only Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ.

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

Just a few words of goods news from this moral heritage. Baptized seven more people last Thursday evening (May 25). All make valuable additions to our working forces here in the community.

Our Spring Communion was the largest attended of any since we have been on the field. We think it one of the best, too.

In our Red and Blue Contest, the Blues lost to the Reds, so the losers put on a program in the church parlors one evening recently with an attendance of over 100. All enjoyed the affair.

Our County Ministerium is putting on a county-wide special feature in June. They will hold special services three nights a week, different churches taking their turn for one meeting.

The S. M. M. girls held a Banquet Monday evening, May 29th, with Miss Helen Garber as speaker, who presented the national work. Some 21 girls were present. Six new members will be added to the roll.

We still work with the boys of the community each week, and some have become members of the churches, for which we are glad. In our twelve years of experience with boys' work, the greater percent of them have become church members under our ministry.

I am now doing my usual amount of work each week, and am feeling fine. Recovery seems sure and permanent. Praise the Lord.

A Word of Explanation

Dear Churches: Brother Miller sent me a letter from some members in Ohio wanting to know how this Home is managed. So I'll do my best to tell you. This writer wanted to know why we bought eggs, potatoes, etc., and thought we should have enough cows to help buy our groceries. Good—that is what I have always wondered too, why there are not more things here so we could be more self-supporting. We wanted more cows last fall, but there just wasn't money to buy them. We have three, and will have a fresh heifer this fall. Last summer we had about three dozen hens stolen, and only had about twenty-five left, so we bought some eggs last fall, but no potatoes. We have plenty to use and plant too and our early ones are up. We canned over 800 quarts of fruit and vegetables, mostly vegetables, because fruit was high. And this winter we canned some meat and made mince meat. I make all our laundry soap, make the women's clothes, etc.

Our cows average us about $1.50 per week and we sell a few eggs but use more, as so many of the women do not eat meat. We raise the hogs we butcher and have some to sell but that money goes into the treasury instead of the Home. I buy groceries, clothing, what medicine the women need (unless they need a doctor), light bulbs, fix their glasses and teeth, shoes, and buy brooms, floor mops, etc. and Mr. Rinehart does the rest,—the coal, lights, telephones, doctor, burial expenses, our salary and annuities, interests, etc.

I have no income except when I have boarders, but the little we have from our cows and chickens and your donations. For March I spent $1.00 apiece for groceries. We all try to be as careful and economical as we can. We have two acres of garden and we have 400 baby chicks almost four weeks' old, doing fine. So unless we have another theft, we will not have to buy eggs this fall. I set out a row of raspberries and some asparagus last year and would like to have strawberries, gooseberries, currants and apple, peach and pear trees. These would be welcomed. The sooner we have these things, the less we will cost each year.

We have seven empty rooms and want boarders—$20 a month, room, board and washing. Come and stay with us this summer and enjoy the help, and help me buy some shades and a new oil stove that we need so much.

Yours Respectfully,
MRS. CYRUS MEYER.

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

Where North and South Meet

At the time of our last report, April 2, 1933, we had started our Pre-Easter meeting, and promised to report the results later. The meeting was a real victory for the Lord. 24 were baptized into membership with the Church, 1 came by letter, two are not intending to be baptized until later. Total: 25 members added to the Church. The total expense of the meeting was $41.00. The meeting ran for two weeks and the ages of those receiving baptism ranged from six to over sixty. The church was strengthened spiritually as well as numerically. Following the meeting at the postponed April business meeting the church voted to conduct a similar meeting next spring.

Easter was a "rainy day", but a great day after all. We are sure that if it had not rained we would have been unable to accommodate all who would have been in attendance. They came in spite of the rain until the church was crowded. In the eve-

DAYTON, OHIO

Dayton's correspondent will give a detailed report shortly. It seems good, however, that the pastor should give some account of his church and himself. I have not thus written for almost a year, so I shall now attempt it.

We have read with the greatest of interest the fine reports of the different congregations, large and small. We rejoice in them. Dayton has made no startling gains during the year, but as we view the year as compared to former years we can see definite progress. 63 have united in the fellowship of this congregation during the year, bringing the total to 241 in not quite 4 years. We seem to maintain an average of about 60 per year. This is not large, we know, but it is a gain that we can easily assimilate.

The first season of refreshing of our year past came last November when Dr. Kenneth Monroe came and led us in a Bible Institute. Unfortunately, we chose election week as the time for the Institute and the attendance was not so large as we had desired. There was fine cooperation from the other Miami Valley churches and the meeting was a success. Dr. Monroe gave the week to studies in the Book of Hebrews.

The second season of refreshing came at the Easter season. Dr. W. S. Bell was with us for the time. Our plan included one week of visitation when we had two supper meetings during the week. 1000 homes

BRETHREN YOUNG PEOPLE'S CAMP, SHIPSHEWANA LAKE, INDIANA

Miss Berkheiser, will have complete charge of the recreational activities this season.

Expenses

This year each camper will pay $7.75 for the whole camp expense. Such items as room and board are included in this amount. A registration fee of seventy-five cents will be collected per individual from students boarding and lodging outside of the Hotel or Girls' Lodge. This will be collected by the business manager who will assign campers to their lodging place. To eliminate the cost involved in purchasing books, it has been planned to have the instructors present outline studies to their pupils. This will save considerable expense to the churches that have already cooperated in this work. Additional expense will be what the individual makes it. Churches will make a good investment in assisting young people to meet the necessary expense of camp life.

Preliminary Observations

Requests from all parts of the brotherhood indicate that this school is growing in popular favor among the brethren. It is our earnest desire that it will become a training center for Brethren young people and adults at large. Pastors and Sunday school superintendents will have problems lightened in their own parishes if they will send capable and talented young people to this school for instruction. Ashland College students who were permitted to attend the conference in former years are desirous of spending their vacation at Shippshewana again this year. To them it was a real treat of instruction, worship and recreation. Let us help the youth of our church to build a greater Brethren church.

Extra Suggestions

To those coming from a distance, let it be suggested, and especially in the case of girls, that an opportunity will be given for light housekeeping. This can only be done in a limited number of cases. Write the Business Manager relative to the matter.

ning the Communion tables were filled to overflowing. It was truly a wonderful day. The offering for Foreign Missions was equal to the 1932 offering. We consider this fine when we recall that Hagerstown only had one bank open at that time. Only one has opened since. The depression was hardly felt until the last year. We are still carrying on by the Grace of God, paying our bills as we go and trying to meet every special offering for the interest of our brotherhood. We responded to Brother J. Allen Miller's call with a good offering, and now we face the Educational Day offering with a determination to make our quota.

-Last fall when we held the Brethren Young People's Rally with 130 young people around the tables, Brother Benschoff brought some 35 young people over to Hagerstown. We were under obligation to do our best to have Hagerstown well represented at Waynesboro the 19th of May when the rally was held in his church. Thirty-three delegates from the Hagerstown church were there, and a fine time was had by everyone. We were especially glad to have Brother Ed from Maurertown, Virginia and some eight or ten of his young people with us. He is the same dear old fellow, a broken neck cannot stop him.

We noticed the Editor's comment on the Sunday School Cabinet meetings and wish to say that we have a cabinet of 61 members meeting in regular meetings for the promotion of the school. After the main program we divide up into departmental groups and spend 30 minutes in planning for the work of the various departments. Then we come together for reports of these various conferences after which we adjourn. Our Sunday school has a Constitution and it is enforced. The General Superintendent, Mr. J. L. Carnochan, is careful to carry out the constitution and therefore we have a highly efficient school. The attendance of the school has reached its best and is still climbing.

The W. M. S., S. M. M. and the Junior S. M. M. are doing good work. Meetings are well attended and interesting. The C. E. Societies are flourishing. The S. C. E. has grown from a very humble beginning to over forty in attendance. They are filling two Home Mission Banks at the present time. Expect to have them full and running over by Thanksgiving. The Junior C. E. disband each summer during the hot weather, and come together against September the first.

June fourth we start our early service as follows: Preaching service at 9:00 A. M., Sunday school at 10:00 until 10:45. The evening service at 7:30. These hours are observed by many of the Hagerstown churches. We tried it last year for two Sundays and had the best August attendance we have had. The sermon or class period is not shortened, and the services are dismissed before the hot part of the morning. We are not broadcasting any of our services at this time, but expect to be on the air again this fall and winter.

were visited. This was followed by two weeks of preaching services. These were well attended. Dr. Bell because of his past associations with this congregation and through his Gospel messages was able to influence many lives. Over 80 made definite decisions affecting their Christian life, besides the many who have revealed new faithfulness since the meetings. About 55 from this group have now been baptized and received into the church. The second Sunday, Decision day, over 50 made decisions at one service. This was a most inspiring sight.

We cannot recommend too highly the "Institute Idea" and we cannot recommend too highly Dr. Monroe as a leader for such Institutes. Neither can we recommend too highly the plan of evangelistic meeting where there is the week of visitation followed by the weeks of preaching services. We cannot recommend too highly the type of service that Dr. Bell renders in these meetings. Thanks Dr. Monroe. Thanks Dr. Bell.

Our Sunday school under the capable leadership of Brother Roy A. Patterson is accomplishing marvelously, considering the great economic handicap that so many Dayton families are living under. The year's average attendance will probably be about 550 which will be a nice gain over former years. In the fall there are plans to launch a forward program that will cover a period of years. We'll tell you about it when it is going.

All departments and auxiliaries of the church are in healthy growing condition. There is always a little slackening of effort during the summer season, but never a heavy slump, and we do not expect one this year. The pastor will spend about 5 weeks this summer in the Winona Lake School of Theology, but will probably return and supply his own pulpit part of the time. Beginning with the early fall the Dayton church should show very decided gains in every phase of the work.

We are now looking forward to entertaining the State Conference June 20-23rd. We hope we may have the privilege of entertaining Ohio's Largest Conference. It should be—it is our Semi-Centennial Conference, and returns to the scene of that first Conference. Dr. Chas. A. Bame, a much loved former pastor here, is the Moderator. Dayton invites those from other states who might see fit to attend, she invites, too, all Ohio Brethren.

May God richly bless the Brethren Church as a denomination as she waits the Coming of the Lord, and works for the evangelization of the world.

THE BIBLE CONFERENCE OF THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT

Another year has rolled around and again through the columns of the Evangelist, I shall endeavor to give a brief account of the annual Bible Conference of the Northern California Brethren Churches, which was held in Turlock, April 20th to 23rd. Although the time given for the Conference was a shorter period than in previous years, every day was packed full of good things and the interest and attendance was unusually gratifying. In view of the fact that the members of the visiting churches would have to travel some distance each day to participate in the meetings, and realizing that every one was finding it necessary to curtail expenses wherever possible, the directors deemed it wise to concentrate on four good days, with every one making an effort to attend, than to have a week with the possibility of a scattered attendance. The plan worked out in a most satisfactory manner. All who attended seemed to have determined in their hearts to make the most of the time, and to do their part toward making the conference outstanding both in spiritual and in social relation. Most of us have learned from experience that the benefits we derive from any worth-while project are reflex; as you give, so shall you receive; and it was this spirit, we are satisfied, which was largely responsible for the real success of the Conference.

"The Coming King" was the motto selected for the program, a thought which seemed very much in keeping with the trend of events at this time. Keeping this motto in the foreground, the messages brought to us by all of the speakers, carried out a line of thought relative to this promised event. The Rev. Roger Darling of San Jose was the principal speaker during the Conference. He had been asked to bring messages along the line of prophecy. Following this suggestion he spoke on the following themes, in the order given: Wednesday evening, "History and the Unveiling of Prophecy." Thursday and Friday evenings, "Are We Nearing the End?" Saturday evening, "The Wonders of the Millennium", and Sunday evening, "The End of All Things." These messages were all masterpieces, but general opinion was that "The Wonders of the Millennium" was the most unusual. Rev. Darling is a very busy man, not alone in his business activities, but in the many calls he has along spiritual lines, which claim his time, so we felt fortunate indeed to have him accept our invitation to spend so much time in our midst. Having spent several years here as pastor in Turlock, his friends and admirers availed themselves of the privilege of enjoying his messages. Many did not miss a service.

The first morning of the Conference was spent in prayer, interspersed with talks on "The Value of Prayer Life in the Light of God's Word." These discussions, which were led by J. W. Platt, A. L. Lynn, Roger Darling and N. W. Jennings, were inspiring and did much toward starting the Conference off in the spirit that would glorify our Christ. The afternoon session was in charge of the Women's Missionary Society, which presented an interesting program on "The Uniqueness of Christ." A social hour followed this session, when the ladies served refreshments to all present. Each evening there was a short devotional and song service preceding the hour given to Rev. Darling.

Friday morning a most interesting business meeting was held, a fine representation from the three churches being present. With the exception of some changes in the directors, practically all officers were retained. Rev. N. W. Jennings was chosen as moderator for the coming year to succeed Brother Kenneth Ronk, who has served faithfully in that capacity for three years.

Friday afternoon messages were brought by A. L. Lynn of La Verne and C. E. Johnson, one of our own elders. Rev. Lynn's presence, which is always an inspiration and proves a great blessing to all, lacked nothing in its effects. He has endeared himself to the Northern California District by his unselfish service to us, and we always look forward with pleasure to his coming among us.

Sunday, being the closing day of the Conference, there was not a dull moment, and very little leisure time. It brought to a successful climax four splendid days we had enjoyed in the Word and in Christian fellowship. The church was practically filled at every session, as those who came from a distance brought their baskets and spent the day. The informality of this arrangement worked out most successfully, not only in the elimination of expense and work, but in developing a feeling of social contact without restraint.

I would not like to close this article without mentioning the faithfulness of J. W. Platt in his attendance, and the unselfish service he rendered in making it possible for so many of his people to attend. Our dear Brother Milo Wolfe, the leader of the Lathrop flock was not able to attend as much as he would have liked, due to the fact that Sister Wolfe has not been well. We are all praying that God will lay his hand upon her and restore her to her health, that she may be able again to enjoy the fellowship and carry on the work she loves.

Our own pastor, N. W. Jennings, worked faithfully to do his part toward making every one feel at home, as well as giving generously of his time and ability.

The general opinion was that the Conference stood out in the light of spirituality. God, through his servants, blessed us with a renewed hope in "The Coming King." With a faith strengthened by the messages from his word, no doubt all went to their respective fields, resolved to work while it is yet day, for the night cometh, when no man can work.

MRS. C. V. LINDAHL,

Conference Secretary.

Why I'm Going to Vote Dry

By Mr. O. J. McClure, Chicago, Illinois

Because—

the Eighteenth Amendment put 175,000 saloons out of business, and repeal would bring them back, with all their horrible results.

Because—

I was never deceived by the false propaganda of the liquor interests that they did not want the saloon to come back.

Because—

we had seven and one-half million automobiles in 1920, but now we have twenty-six and one-half million, and they are running twice as fast! Based on the automobile death rate in England, with legalized liquor, our twenty-six and a half million automobiles would kill 72,607 people EVERY YEAR if we repealed the Eighteenth Amendment. These are accidental automobile deaths only. Automobile accidents that did not result in death would run into the millions.

Because—

before Prohibition the Salvation Army used to haul in drunks by the truck-load every night—hundreds of them. They say they could not now find even one truck-load of such cases in any city of the United States!—proving that Prohibition does prohibit.

Because—

welfare workers report that liquor is no longer an important factor in child delinquency, crime, poverty, sickness, insanity, and immorality—proving again that Prohibition does prohibit.

Because—

our schools and colleges have over four million more attendants than they had before Prohibition, the increase being out of all proportion to the increase in population. Officers of the teachers' associations say Prohibition is the greatest blessing that has ever come to American youth. And 303 college presidents say conditions in colleges are far better than before Prohibition.

Our young people outclassed the world in the recent olympic games. The claim of the liquor interests that our young people are drinking more than before Prohibition is malicious and slanderous falsehood, put out for the sole purpose of tricking and scaring parents into voting for repeal.

Because—

Prohibition has resulted in closing 179 of the 200 important drink cure establishments. This indicates the extent to which drinking has been reduced, and proves again that Prohibition does prohibit.

Because—

according to the United States Census Bureau, the death rate has been greatly reduced. It took a sudden drop within one year after Prohibition went into effect. The highest death rate in any year since Prohibition is lower than the lowest death rate in any year before Prohibition.

Because—

the motive behind liquor propaganda is so easy to see through. How has anybody been deceived by it? Liquor's only hope for repeal is to make the public believe Prohibition is a failure. All of liquor's propaganda centers around the claim that Prohibition does not prohibit. If the liquor interests admitted the truth about the success of Prohibition, that would be the end of the liquor problem.

Because—

repeal would be a severe blow to the farmer. Since Prohibition the increase in milk consumption alone requires more grain than the liquor interests bought from the farmer in their biggest year—two and three-quarter billion pounds more each year. The National Grange is authority for this statement. Imagine, if you can, millions of families again buying booze instead of food, and you will see how the farmer would be further impoverished by repeal. The claim of wet politicians that repeal would help the farmer is wholly false.

Because—

I am not deceived by the efforts of the liquor interests to force a vote on the question during the world depression, while men are in despair because of business conditions.

Because—

the claim of the liquor interests that repeal would help business is wholly false. It would have exactly the opposite effect because each year it would take two and one-half billion dollars out of constructive, useful lines, such as food, clothing, automobiles, life insurance, advertising, banking, education, furniture, stoves, radios, moving pictures, washing machines, telephones, etc., and put it into a commodity that causes idleness, crime and destruction.

Because—

liquor is the most greedy, the more merciless, and the most brutal competitor business ever had. Do you want to start up such a competitor now, or have you already got too much competition?

Because—

a few greedy millionaires are putting their money behind the repeal move in an effort to shift a part of their income tax burden onto the shoulders of working people and others who are expected to buy the liquor if it is legalized. How can any working man fall into this trap?

Because—

it would be economic ignorance to start up the liquor industry again. A million dollar liquor plant employs 81 people. A million dollar shoe factory, for example, employs 500 people. How could any laboring man be tricked into starting up a business that gives labor to only one-sixth as many hands, when millions of people are already out of work?

As this is written, a move is being started in England to restrict the sale of liquor in order to divert money into constructive industries, to give employment to more people. The pretense of the liquor interests in the United States that starting up their business will increase employment is utterly false.

Because—

the liquor interests now admit, through their spokesmen, that repeal would not stop the illegal sale of liquor. Every informed person knows that the speakeasy and bootlegger were here in large numbers before Prohibition, but that they have been played up by the liquor interests as products of Prohibition, in an effort to get the Eighteenth Amendment repealed.

Because—

each dollar in liquor revenue for the government would be offset many times over by crime, accidents, idleness, sickness, death, poverty, and destruction of property. The probable amount of this tax has been grossly misrepresented by the liquor interests. Their oft-repeated promise that repeal would result in an annual revenue of a billion or even two billion dollars has shrunk to just a few cents on the dollar. Thus another piece of wet propaganda has been proved false, and those behind such propaganda have been proved unworthy of public confidence.

Because—

the cost of enforcing Federal Prohibition has been grossly misrepresented. After including cost of enforcement bureau, patrol boats, commercial alcohol withdrawal, courts, jails, penitentiaries—everything that could reasonably be charged to Prohibition enforcement—the total annual cost is found to be 13 million dollars—less than eleven cents per year for each person in the United States. The United States Treasury Department and the National Commission on Law Observance and Enforcement are authority for these figures.

Of course it is part of the liquor propaganda to make you believe the cost is much higher, which explains why the figures have been misrepresented. It is anticipated that the cost of enforcement would be much higher under the proposed state control system, with 175,000 saloons, nearly all of which would be headquarters for crime, as in the old days.

Because—

another piece of liquor propaganda exploded recently is that Prohibition has caused a great crime wave. The President's research committee reports that there is no such crime wave, which fact was already known to everybody who is in touch with the crime situation. There is a crime wave in England, where they have legalized liquor, but not in the United States. It is also known to law enforcement bodies that organized crime was not caused by Prohibition, as the liquor interests claim, but that it began ten years before Prohibition.

Because—

the personal liberty theory of the liquor interests is fundamentally unsound. Personal liberty is for everybody—not merely for

Laymen's Commission Cuts Missionary Nerve

The Laymen's Commission continues to call forth much comment and discussion. Some one has said that if its purpose was "to stir up controversy, it would seem that it had been eminently successful." And well may there be controversy over the issues raised in the report, for if the Christian church were to accept wholeheartedly this report with all its implications, there would soon be little vigor left in the Foreign Missionary movement, nor in the church itself. Its nerve would be cut; it would be passionless and powerless; it would be left without the conviction, the urge, the drive that creates missions.

The fundamental on which the missionary motive is based is the conviction that Christ made atonement on the cross for the sins of the whole world and that without him there is no salvation for any man, anywhere. Men who believe that sincerely and have themselves felt the thrill of the saving grace of God in their own hearts and lives are willing to put forth strong effort, and to make great sacrifices that their fellowmen may know of their Savior too. That is the conviction that sends men and women into the uttermost corners of the world, there to face privation, loneliness, persecution, suffering and death that Christ may be lifted up before the eyes of all men. But if Christianity is to them only one of the great religions of the world and Christ is only one of the great religious teachers; if the religion we profess and have set ourselves to promote is but a system of social and personal development; if it is little more than an educational process and missions an educational enterprise, as the Report suggests and implies, there is no strong urge or compelling force connected with it. Missionary service is then left to those who are by nature venturesome and restless and are willing to go abroad in quest of strange and thrilling experiences. And Christianity is but a frail structure without a compelling motive or an abiding foundation.

If Christ is to be brought down to the level of Mohammed, or Buddha, or Confucius and is to be stripped of his unique character and godhead, as the Laymen's Commission seems to do, and if his imperialistic and uncompromising claims are to be denied him, then is the church without a divine commission, proselyting may be improper and unethical, the caste system may be allowed to remain undisturbed, missions may be considered a purely business or cultural undertaking and intellectual training and efficiency the foremost missionary standards. But if Christ is God and the only Savior of the world, then is the disciple bound to be intolerant of other religious teachers and pagan gods, and the missionary's first duty is the winning of men to the Saviorhood and Lordship of Christ. If the church's commission means anything, that is the way it must view its missionary task. That is the way Paul viewed it. He was to become a witness to the Gentiles of the things which he had seen and heard, "to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified" (Acts 26:18). But the Commission is not concerned about sin and repudiates all doctrinal statements, and suggests a very different view from that of Paul. They have attempted to reconstruct the primary function of Christianity. Witness this statement of the Commission that we are to "look forward, not to the destruction of these religions, but to their continued co-existence with Christianity, each stimulating the other in growth toward the ultimate goal, unity in the completest religious truth." That statement stamps it at once as being a departure from historic and evangelical Christianity and makes it a dangerous instrument to be shunned and combated.

There are many other features of the Commission's Report that bear in the same direction, but these are the most vital. Some of its criticisms of Foreign Mission methods were just, but they were in most instances such as had already been known by missionary executives, and were in the process of correction. The unification and centralization of missionary headquarters and control is a new feature, but with the present denominational set-up, it is impractical.

The Religious Telescope mildly expresses our view of this widely heralded but vicious Report, as follows: "Said a thoughtful hearer to a pastor, after listening to a lengthy discourse that had more of the theoretical than the practical, 'There was much that was new and much that was true in your discourse today.' But whatever satisfaction the minister may have found in the comment was quickly dispelled when the parishioner continued, 'But what was new wasn't true, and what was true wasn't new'." Then comments our contemporary: "That statement might well be applied to the 'findings' of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry that just now are having a large place in the religious press and in missionary discussion. This inquiry was conducted by a commission made up of fifteen representatives selected by colleges of various Protestant communions. It spent nine months visiting mission fields in the Far East, and has issued a formidable report which embodies its observations and reflections. It puts in rather definite form what missionary leaders have always known and criticisms and suggestions that have been familiar to those in the missionary enterprise pretty much from the beginning."

Growth of Christianity in the World

One of the most marvelous examples of growth in the world is the church of Jesus Christ. No other institution or form of life can equal it, in present size or continuance of growth. It is absolutely unique, the wonder of the ages, the planting of God. If there were no other indications of its divine origin, its unparalleled growth and unquenchable life would bear sufficient and indisputable evidence of that fact. No obstacles could stop it, no fighting could overcome it; no power could crush it. No treachery could blight it; no superficiality could effectively weaken it; no impurity could permanently poison its life. It possessed a life, and does yet, that could not be destroyed and a momentum that could not be stopped. Its very persistency through the centuries in the face of all foes has proven more effectively than anything else the truthfulness of our Lord and the divinity of his wisdom when he said, "I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." It is a divinely empowered church, it is becoming increasingly a victorious church and is destined to become a gloriously triumphant church. And it is wonderful to be a member of it and to share in its promises and triumph.

But not all who are members of the visible church are in very truth members of the church which is the body and bride of Christ. The inner growth of the church cannot always be judged by the outward success. The strength of a congregation and its increase in spiritual power cannot always be judged by the number of its accessions. There are places and times when segments of the church grow up overnight like Jonah's gourd vine and when the sun of disappointment bears down upon them, they wither away. Some do not fall away completely, but remain dwarfed and stunted, having a profession of godliness, but denying the power thereof, and bearing none of the fruits of righteousness. Some are half-hearted, satisfied with mere nominal membership. And some get into the visible church without any real change of heart, retaining all their superficiality and worldliness, which prove a hindrance to the church and a grief to Christ. Yet with all these, we must not fail to remember that the church is Christ's and that he is watching over it and will keep it to the end. There will be the tares, but there will also be the wheat; there will be the foolish virgins, but there will also be the wise; there will be the goats, but there will also be the sheep. And the Lord knoweth them that are his and he will keep them who without reserve put their hands in his.

It is encouraging occasionally to get a glimpse of the onward march of the church of Christ, to see how it has grown and multiplied through the centuries. We are indebted to Dr. G. L. Kiefer in the Lutheran National Council Bulletin for the following estimate of the Christian population of the world from the first century to the twentieth. It may help to strengthen our courage in these times of doubt and confusion.

Whatever be the conditions about us, whatever disloyalties and disaffections show up here or there, just remember that God moves forward and that his church is pressing on to victory with him.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.

If you have not sent your Educational Day offering to the Bureau of Ashland College, do it promptly. To neglect it, is often fatal to the offering.

Dr. K. M. Monroe is in attendance at the Southeastern District conference this week, where he is scheduled to give a number of Bible lectures and addresses. The conference is convening at the Bethlehem church near Harrisonburg, Virginia.

Prof. M. A. Stuckey left Ashland on Saturday afternoon by way of Louisville, Ohio, his home town, en route to Pennsylvania, where he will serve as superintendent of the Juniata Young People's Training Camp at Enricken on the Juniata River. The Camp is in session June 14 to 24. A number of our Pennsylvania pastors are acting as teachers and directors of activities.

Brother Henry Rinehart, treasurer of the Brethren Home, gives us another report of financial receipts, showing a commendable response on the part of churches and individuals to the emergency appeal recently set forth. Our faith in the loyalty of the brotherhood is increased by this coming forward in the midst of these trying times to give relief to an institution that stood in jeopardy.

When a real need is really understood, the people can usually be counted on to meet it.

A second notice comes to young people from the pen of the Brethren C. E. President, Brother E. M. Riddle, concerning the International Christian Endeavor Convention to be held at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, July 8-13. It is to be hoped that a number of Societies may be represented at that great gathering of young people. A note from Brother Riddle says concerning his Waterloo pastorate, "Very successful day here yesterday, fine records made. Dr. and Mrs. McClain met a fine audience last night. The message was very good and they and message were well received."

Dr. Charles A. Bame, moderator of the Ohio District Conference, writes about the splendid program and the significance of the coming meeting at Dayton, and urges a large attendance. The committee has done its work well, and if the churches will match this effort by the sending of delegates, the Ohio district will certainly have a successful conference. Let's all go, at least one delegate besides the minister from every church, and most churches should have several delegates each present.

The church at Turlock, California, writes the correspondent, is in a fine spiritual condition, as is shown by a splendid attendance at all the regular services, the church and Sunday school registering good gains over last year. Eight new members have been added to the church since the first of the year, six by baptism, and two by letter, also a number of members who have been out of touch with the church have returned to faithfulness. The communion, which is observed quarterly by this church, was unusually well attended. Brother N. W. Jennings and his good wife have served this church for six years and the people continue to rejoice in their leadership.

Brother S. M. Whetstone tells us in a personal communication of a recent unique service conducted in the Goshen, Indiana, church, and which service drew a packed house on a hot Sunday evening. It was an "Old Fashioned Religion" program and featured the singing of old fashioned hymns from memory by the congregation as well as much special music of an old fashioned type. Previous to the sermon, the pastor read his scripture lesson from a Bible 125 years old, which proved impressive to the large audience. The most unique and impressive thing about the Scriptures is that its old, old story forever remains new and fascinating. God bless every effort to make that old story to grip hearts and minds with new interest.

Perhaps the oldest reader of our Evangelist family is our good Sister E. J. Horne, who makes her home with her daughter in Cleveland, Ohio, at 2608 Archwood Avenue, but who for many years was the main stay of the Columbus church. She is ninety-three years old, but her interest is still keen in the affairs of the church. She writes: "My prayer is that the Holy Spirit may prevail." And concerning herself, she says: "My afflictions are much, but God's grace is sufficient." Not a few of our pastors will remember Sister Horne and will rejoice with us in her steadfast interest and in the growing richness of her spiritual experience.

Brother Sylvester Lowman, pastor of the church at Oakville, Indiana, says the work is going forward in spite of financial handicaps, one evidence of which is the redecoration of their church interior, and another, the prosecution of a successful revival. The pastor was his own evangelist through most of the campaign, though he had other ministers assist him for some of the services, most important of which was the help rendered by Dr. Bell during the closing nights of the campaign. There were fourteen confessions of Christ and thirteen were added to the church. The Christian Endeavor and Sunday school organizations are doing good work, the Sunday school having recently reached the attendance

PRAYER REQUEST FOR THIS WEEK—

Brother Frank Gehman, pastor at Oscola, Indiana, asks for prayer for a revival in his church beginning June 14 under the leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller, and he also invites neighboring Brethren to visit them in their meeting.

The Quest of Life

By Rev. Charles H. Ashman

Baccalaureate Sermon preached before the 1933 Graduating Class of Ashland College

The chaotic conditions of today present a challenge to all. All about us is change and decay. Foundations are cracking and crumbling beneath our feet. The superstructures which we have erected are being moved,—they are collapsing and crashing about our heads. Time-honored landmarks are being challenged, moved, and removed. Everywhere, everything appears to be in a state of turmoil. In the political world, in the social world, in the industrial world, in the educational world, yes,—even in the religious world, there is confusion and disorder. In Daniel's Vision of the end-times, he beheld how iron and clay would be put together, but would not stick. The iron of imperialism and the clay of democracy are falling apart today. Many anxious souls are asking the question, "Is anything firm? Is anything steady, unmovable, permanent?" We answer, "Yes! Thank God, there are things which cannot be shaken". There are eternal realities and verities which remain! There are foundations which are "sure and steadfast." There are superstructures which withstand any storm, for they are built upon the rock. There are landmarks that are unmovable. There are blazed trails that are easily followed. There are some things not subject to change or decay.

All about us a great storm is raging today. The sky is full of rolling clouds of dense blackness. The thunder is pealing forth, reverberating with sullen roar. The lightning is cleaving the sky with forked tongues of fire, lighting the sky with its lurid flames. The wind is assuming hurricane proportions, shaping itself into a tornado funnel. The sea of life is being lashed to leaping billows and deep valleys. Who will survive the storm? See the frail barks tossed about on the angry waves. Some have already leaped to destruction,—the suicides mounting up like a mountain. Some are helpless with prostration of fear. Some have folded their arms in total abandon to fate. What will you do as you embark on this storm-tossed sea of life? Are there anchors? Will your anchor hold in the storm of life? Thank God, there are anchors that grip the rock? The eternal realities and verities of life are such anchors. "We have an anchor that keeps the soul, steadfast and sure while the billows roll. Fastened to the rock which cannot move, grounded firm and deep in eternal things." These anchors will enable us to outride the storm.

All about us is confusion today. There is heard a babel of voices. Remedies, schemes, plans, experiments are being sounded forth. They form a modern medley of discordant noises. Is there no authority? Must it be nothing but opinions versus opinions? Yes! There is authority! The eternal verities and realities of life speak with supreme authority as ever.

There are finalities of life. There is the supreme court which renders its final decision beyond which there is no appeal. To disobey its decisions forms high treason. Fosdick is a renegade Preacher in an independent church. Recently he said, "Obviously, the first lesson to be drawn from the mysteriousness of life is distrust of dogmatism." What is dogmatism? A College Student in an examination wrote, "It is a type of rheumatism which afflicts dogs, dog—matism". Fosdick thinks so also. He continues, "Whenever you see anyone stand over against the mystery of life whipping out finalities, distrust that man." Well, distrust me then! For in the quest of life, we have discovered certain things amid the mystery of life concerning which we can be dogmatic! We have discovered finalities of life which we proclaim dogmatically. There are dogmas which we assert with positive and authoritative assertion. We need exclamation points today, not interrogation points. We need to doubt our doubts and believe our beliefs!

In the Quest of Life, discover these realities. First of all, the verity, the reality, the finality of God. "In the beginning God". There is where human history and divine revelation start. The chain of unbelief is fastened to an imaginary staple suspended in the air. The slightest pull brings it down. Two men were discussing what held this earth in place. One stoutly maintained that it rested upon a rock. The other asked what that rock rested on. The answer was that it rested on another rock. After several rocks had been placed, in disgust, the man answered, "You fool, it is rock all the way down." Yes, but go deep enough until you get to the bed rock, GOD! God is immutable! Deny the fact of his being, he is still God! Scoff, mock, ridicule him and he is still God. Ignore him, treat him with indifference. He abideth the same. One time this blatant infidel, Lewis, publicly defied God. He declared, "If there is a God, let him prove it by striking me down before you." God did not accept the puny challenge for he needeth not to resort to such clap-trap methods to prove or demonstrate his Being. "I am the Lord, I change

REV. ASHMAN SAYS—

"There are finalities of life. There is the supreme court which renders its decision beyond which there is no appeal. To disobey its decision is high treason.

"First of all, the verity, the reality, the finality of God. 'In the beginning God.' There is where human history and divine revelation start.

"Then, . . . discover the verity, reality and finality of the Spiritual. The spiritual is as real as the physical or the psychological."

not." He is "the Father of light in whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." "Remember now, thy Creator in the days of thy youth". Someone has divided life into these periods,—"Striving twenties,—thriving thirties,—fiery forties,—faithful fifties,—sober sixties,—solemn seventies,—aching eighties,—the sod,—God". No! We protest against such a division! Not God after the sod! Put God at the beginning, in the days of thy Youth!

Mark Twain with a mournful cadence in his voice and a far-off look in his eye, one time said, "When you come to seventy, think us, you are passing down the river of life like the majestic Hudson. When you arrive at Pier Seventy, with a reconciled spirit lay your course toward the setting sun with a contented heart". No, Mark! It is too late to lay your course then! You may never reach Pier Seventy. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth." "The fool hath said in his heart, 'There is no God.'" None but a fool would ever make such a statement. All forms of unbelief are mental imbecility. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." When was Edison wise? Not while he was searching out the secrets of electricity, but when a short time before he died he began to search out the FACT OF GOD!" "For the invisible things of God from the creation of the universe are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse. "Yes, everywhere, there are unchallengeable evidences of God, "Tongues in trees, books in running brooks, sermons in stones, and GOD EVERYWHERE." In your Quest of Life, first of all discover God!

"Truth forever on the scaffold,
Wrong forever on the throne,
Yet that scaffold sways the future
And behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadows

"He is closer to you than breathing and nearer than hands and feet".

Then, in your Quest of Life, discover the verity, reality, and finality of the Spiritual. Man is a tri-partite being,—body, soul, and spirit. He is physical, psychical, and spiritual. The spiritual is as real as the physical and psychical.

"Life is real, life is earnest and the grave is not its goal; Dust thou art to dust returnest was not spoken of the soul."

The things that are seen are temporal, the things that are unseen are spiritual and eternal. The supreme purpose of life is spiritual. "Life consisteth not in the abundance of things." The secret of life is not to be found in things. Horace Greely said, "Fame is vapour; popularity an accident; riches take wings; those who cheer today will curse tomorrow; only one thing endures,—character." Yes! If he means spiritual, not natural character. Goethe has written, "Man exists for character,—not for what he can accomplish, but for what can be accomplished in him". Emerson wrote, "Character is not simply intellect; a great soul will be strong to live as well as to think; goodness outshines genius as the sun causes the electric light to cast a shadow." Yes! Spiritual character is the supreme purpose of life. In your Quest of Life put the Quest of the Young Ruler, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" He had great possessions. He possessed much of that non-moral substance known as wealth. He had an abundance of things. He had many fine natural qualities. He had lived a good moral life, conforming to the standards of moral rectitude. In his inter-relationships, his record was clean. The Master measured him by the six commandments that gauge such. But, burning at the very center of his being was a quest. The spiritual was empty and unsatisfied. J. Campbell Morgan puts it thus, "He longed for the life of the ages." Life, broad, high, deep, full-orbed life, life with a full content, and therefore life that abides." The physical did not satisfy that quest. He had a home of luxury and ease. The psychical did not satisfy this quest. There was found in abundance in that home, the artistic and the musical and the intellectual. Art, music, literature everywhere. His Spirit longed for the Father of Spirits,—God! He knew he was made for more than brawn and brain. Eternity was surging in his soul. In his quest of life, he came to the source of such life, Jesus Christ! He had declared, "I am come that ye might have life in its superabundance." "I am the life." "He that hath the Son hath life". There is no real life, spiritual life, apart from him. He alone can put the spiritual intent and content in life.

"Life is a volume from Youth to old age;
Each year is a chapter, each day is a page;
May none be more charming, more tenderly true,
Than that pure and noble sketched daily by you."

No! This is impossible without Jesus Christ. "Ye must be born again", first of all. Then, "Christ must live in you". Only then will you have spiritual intent and content in life. Darwin is an example of the opposite of the spiritual. In his youth, he felt called to the Christian ministry. He had a great love for music. But, for a season, he turned aside to study science. Somehow, the study of the material crushed out the spiritual in his life. Later, he tried to get back to the spiritual and found all desire for it was dead. With bitterness, he turned to extreme materialism. His philosophy became the very foundation of German militarism which precipitated the world war. It is the very foundation of the materialism that underlies the present depression. Darwin lacked the Reality and Verity and Finality of the Spiritual.

Before us opens two ways today. In your Quest of Life, you may go forth SELF DIRECTED. Self can be the Center of your Life. You may be self-controlled. You may go forth trusting in yourself alone, believing that within yourself is to be found your sufficiency. You may feel that you are like the Blue Bells of Scotland. They live beneath the ice and snow. But, they have power within themselves to generate their own heat. They melt the ice and snow and force themselves upward until their heads bask in the sunshine of spring. But, if you go forth thinking you have such generating power within yourself, you will go down in defeat. In your Quest of Life, go forth CHRIST DIRECTED. "He knoweth what is in man." He has said, "Come follow me." Christ alone can satisfy the Quest of Life. One time Mendelssohn visited the Church at Frieberg, Germany to hear the great pipe-organ, the greatest of that day. After the service had dismissed, he tarried until all but the caretaker of the organ was gone. He asked him for the privilege of playing on the organ. He was refused, but after a time prevailed upon the caretaker to allow the privilege. Seating himself at the organ, he touched the keys lightly, playing with them, fondling them as if seeking that "Lost Chord". Then he played. That organ laughed, sobbed, wept, leaped for joy! All the emotions of the soul were portrayed in its music as touched by the Master Musician. When he had finished, the caretaker asked,

THE VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

By Rev. E. M. Riddle

DO YOU KNOW the different types of Vacation Schools? Rev. Riddle prefers the No-handcraft kind, and says it takes six months to set up a really worth while school.

I am requested to write particularly of the program, which I have found most helpful. My experience in this field of church activity has covered at least twelve years. During this period, I have taught and served as superintendent in different types of schools.

This is the Boville type organized in New York City in 1901 and the Vaughn type of Vacation school organized specifically for the teaching of the Bible, even a year earlier. Then there is a type of school growing by leaps and bounds, known as the school without handwork, which for all I have been able to learn may have had its origin from the Vaughn system.

The latter type referred to is the one which I favor by a large margin. It is known as the Latham Vacation School which has no handcraft, except maps and drawings made in the classes. Dr. A. L. Latham of Chester, Pennsylvania has made a long study of this type of school and offers to churches and church schools everywhere his findings after twenty years of success with this kind of Vacation Bible school.

It was my privilege in my former pastorate to be one of a large faculty at Warsaw, Indiana in the Warsaw-Winona Summer Bible school. It has been successfully carried on for a number of years on the plan throughout used by Dr. Latham. The motto is—"The All-Bible School that Uses No Handcraft". I know also what some experienced teachers can do with classes in hand work, yet I have found out that it takes a large amount of time, when the time can be used to so rich advantage in other ways, teaching the Bible, Missions, Church History, Sacred Music and Hymns, etc. I have also learned that children and young people will attend Vacation school even though there is no time given to handcraft.

Dr. Latham's course is systematic and definite. The leader in the course is, "The Way of Life", used throughout as a reference book and for special texts, as well as a text-book in the 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th grades. It sets forth predictions concerning the Coming Savior in the Old Testament and shows him revealed in the New. It focuses the entire Scripture upon Christ. The course of study is three-fold: (1) Memory work, which gathers about the "Way of Life". (2) Historical. (3) Geography of Bible Lands. Suitable books can be secured for the promoting of this plan effectively. We feel free to say that our own secretary, Prof. M. A. Stuckey, will be willing to order, recommend and assist our people in this adventure, if interested in a Vacation School. The time is so short for this year, if you have not already planned one, but it is none too soon to begin for next year.

Whatever your course of study, the informal organization of a Vacation School will allow boys and girls to divide into groups according to their interests. Many interests can be cared for in one program. Denominations cooperating with the International Council department of Vacation schools are emphasizing World Friendship, as they did last year. Books on China or the American Indian can be ordered from the Missionary Education Movement, 740 Rush St., Chicago, Illinois.

Lastly, I should say that fully six months should be given to the setting up of a really worth while school. The best Christian teachers, with experience in day schools, or Sunday school, or—better still—with experience in both, are none too good. There is something attractive about the large community school for boys and girls during the summer, but personally, I would prefer that our medium and larger schools, maintain their own Vacation School in the church. There is something tangible gained by having it in your church.

Little by little, year after year, keep adding to your equipment so that you have maps, blackboards, tables, chairs, drinking-cups, and a few other necessary things, especially to be used among younger groups. It is a fruitful labor, a rich field of service for any church school to undertake. Waterloo, Iowa.

The Quest of Life

"Who are You? I have never heard such music from that organ?" "I am Mendelssohn". "What Mendelssohn? Thank God, I permitted you to play on the organ." Jesus, only can bring out the harmonies of the soul. He alone can play on the heart strings and bring forth its symphonies.

Graduates, it takes more than a "diet of broad grins" to conquer the forces arrayed against you today. Life is not one "grand, sweet song." My heart bleeds for you and for all the Youth of America this Commencement Season. You are going forth into a frowning, disorganized, disappointed world. You are enrolling in the College of blows, hard-knocks! Tremendous challenges and opportunities are before you. Are you equal to these? Not unless you are Christ Controlled. You must have an outside control and an inside power. That outside control must come from Christ and that inside power from the Holy Spirit. Your choice will determine whether you will be a HIGH SOUL or a LOW SOUL.

"For the high soul climbs the high way
And the low soul gropes the low,
And in between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift to and fro.

"But to everyone there openeth
A high way and a low,
And every man decideth
The way HIS SOUL SHALL GO."

FACING TROUBLES

I have told you of the man who always put on his spectacles when about to eat cherries, in order that the fruit might look larger and more tempting. In like manner I always make the most of my enjoyments, and, though I do not cast my eyes away from troubles, I pack them into as small a compass as I can for myself, and never let them annoy others.—Robert Southey.

THEY GO NOT OUT

Religion is worth as much today as it was yesterday, and that cannot change, though we do; and if we do we have left God; and whither he can go that goes from God, his own sorrows will soon enough instruct him. This fire must never go out, but it must be like the fire of heaven; it must shine like the stars, though sometimes covered with a cloud, or obscured by a greater light; yet they dwell for ever in their orbs, and walk in their circles, and observe their circumstances, but go not out by day nor night, and set not when kings die, nor are extinguished when nations change their government.—Jeremy Taylor.

INTRODUCING THE NEW TESTAMENT

"I have given unto them the words which Thou gavest me" (John 17:8).

With these scintillating words acting as a golden key, the portals of each book of the New Testament may be opened. Upon their veracity rests the entire structure of Christian facts, doctrines, meanings, and values. They are either true or false. If true, then the sum-and-substance—wisdom of the centuries has been contracted to a span; if false, then nearly twenty centuries of rational and enlightened men have at last turned out to be deluded simpletons.

Of the solemn and sublime truth of the Saviour's words countless thousands have been convinced by the highly diverse, yet unified evidence of the oracles of heaven. That evidence constitutes what Dr. Luke calls "things which are most surely believed among us." Concerning their "certainty" there can be no question: this famous historian-physician investigated the testimony of the earliest "eyewitnesses and ministers of the word." He found it trustworthy and reliable. And incidentally, where is the man who can point us to a saner and more accurate historian than the under-physician who loved the Great Physician and the Maker of history?

The New Testament is not just another book. It is something infinitely better than

"Tully's voice, and Virgil's lay,
or even
"Caesar's hand or Plato's brain."

It is, to be precise, the life, light, and love of the Upper Sanctuary revealed in the face of the Man of Sorrows. It is the written account of the Voice of God speaking to and tabernacled among a race of uneasy and dying men. It is proof colossal that "God hath spoken."

On one occasion the famous Lord Tennyson wrote:

"Our little systems have their day,
They have their day and cease to be:
They are but broken lights of Thee.
And Thou, O God, art more than they."

Had not the English poet known Christ and his Apostles these lines would never have been written. He may have been thinking of the broken-cistern-philosophies of his day, or the perpetually out-moded and outworn secular mouthings of the market place, or certain clamorings of the public speaking platform. May we be graciously delivered from both and seek the quiet, peaceful refuge of the Scripture.

RELATION TO THE OLD TESTAMENT

The New and Old Testaments are part and parcel of the same revelation. They never should be separated fundamentally and organically unless it be for reasons of minute and particularistic study. The Old Testament is the tree while the New Testament is the fruit. The New is in the Old Concealed and the Old is in the New Revealed. So it is with fruit in the blossom and fruit in the basket. If we neglect the tree we have no fruit, and if we fail to gather the fruit we miss the joy of eating. Likewise is it with men who forget to declare the whole counsel of God to man. Let it never be said of us: "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures."

THE FOUR GOSPELS

When the Divine economy of the Old Testament was completed, God dwelt amid the shadows of four hundred long and silent years "keeping watch above his own." And then he came suddenly to the simple, quiet, religious souls with wondrous power and in great glory. To Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John—these four—he entrusted wisdom and grace in the Spirit. They wrote the story of the good news in a four-fold way, each one telling what interested him most. Matthew saw him as King, Mark as a Servant, Luke as a Man, and John as God. Around these themes, the blessed story will entwine itself until the day in which he shall come again to this little theatre of his universe to re-enact the part of God before the eyes of men in a new and wonderful way.

THE EPISTLES

The writings of Paul, Peter, and John have gained a place in the canon of the New Testament because these apostles were chosen by Christ to witness among the nations concerning the things of the Way. We must remember, however, that Dr. Luke presents these three heroes of the cross to us before they ever undertook to pen their manuscripts. In the Acts of the Apostles he has told us how they witnessed in Judea, Samaria, and in the uttermost parts; what were their varying fortunes; what they accomplished, et cetera. But when the great triumvirate wrote themselves, they told us of what Jesus had done in them, for them, and by them. In fact it is a rehearsal of the old, old story of redemption in new scenes through the divinely guided agents.

THE REVELATION

The Apocalypse of John needs special mention perhaps because of its special unveiling of Jesus Christ as he walks among the churches. It is an unfortunate thing that this book, so full of truth tucked away in beautiful symbols, should have been presented to our modern Christendom as a book only for the spiritually elite. It is for everybody who would see Jesus in the present, past, and future activity of his Kingdom. Obviously the Apostle John saw his Lord far more clearly, understood him far better, loved him more deeply, than did Peter or Paul. His reward was the vision of the last book of the Bible. Read it and be wise; but do not add to or subtract from its revelation. That is dangerous procedure.

PROGRESSIVE DIVINE TEACHING

It was Dr. John Howard Kelly, the famous surgeon and scientist of Baltimore, who first called to the writer's attention in a serious way the significance of the order of the New Testament books. He referred me to that splendid book, still in print, of the Bampton Lectures of the last century which bear the title of "The Progress of Doctrine in the New Testament" by Dr. Thomas Dehany Bernard. A more excellent brochure on this subject it would be hard to find. It shows how the Word was received and developed in the early church. Its very progressiveness and logical continuity are pointed out as arguments for its inspiration and authority. It should be read anew in our day of haphazard and anemic thinking.

A CONCLUDING WORD

Who can measure the measureless influence of the writings of the New Testament? Who can plumb their depths? Where can we find the author or authors that shall create greater products? The writer has looked far and wide and must confess that his looking has been in vain.

There is no power great or good or strong enough to eclipse the radiant shining of the Sun of Righteousness risen with healing in his wings. He is the Sun that shines by day and the Star of all mornings. "Let there be light" even if it is rejected. Let life and love abound.

"Great is the truth and it shall prevail."

The Doubter's Dialogue

By Clarence E. McCariny

"But what about the indecent passages?"

"Indecent?"

"Yes. The passages that you would not read aloud in any company."

"There are things which one might not think it appropriate to read aloud and yet which, being read, would do no harm, but rather good. Of the passages to which you refer, it may be said that the Bible deals with human nature just as it is; and human nature is a very terrible thing. The Bible doesn't hide that fact."

"Then you think these passages are to be justified, as you justify the passages in the realistic sex novels of the day?"

"No. I do not justify those passages in the fiction of the day. No one can read them without having his imagination tainted, but no one ever read the passages which describe sin, and especially the sins of the flesh, in the Bible, and was tempted to experiment with that kind of sin."

"But still would you read them aloud?"

"As I remember they were all read aloud at family worship as we went through the Bible. Whenever I heard them all that it suggested to me was that sin was a terrible thing."

"How does a man feel when he is inspired?"

"I don't know. Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. The fact is related, but not the manner and the mystery."

"Mystery again!"

"Yes. Great is the mystery of godlines. Here John heard the voice and saw Christ standing amid the Seven Golden Candlesticks, and here he heard—But see!—While we have been discussing this subject, the storm has been gathering. How quickly that placid sea, when first we came here, like a sea of glass, has changed to a sea of rage and confusion. Look at those black clouds driving past us in the heavens; and everywhere you can see the white teeth of the waves; and here these waves hurling themselves against the rocky cliff below us and reaching almost to our lofty seat, as if they would tear the island down, and now the flash of the lightning, the crash of thunder, the scream of the wind and the sweep of the rain. How glorious, and yet how terrible. But look!—there at the mouth of this grotto—"

"Yes—it is one of the gods come down to his temple again—Neptune or Zeus or—"

"No. There never were such gods. There is but one God only, the living and the true God—thou who hast come on the wings of the tempest, thou with that great eagle upon thy shoulder, Who art thou?"

"The Prisoner of Patmos!"

"Patmos. Thou, to whom a door was opened in heaven; who saw the sea of glass, and the Lamb upon his throne?"

"The same."

"Holy seer! Thy books I love. Yet there is much there that I do not understand, nor expect to understand, until I stand where thou standest. But John, thou with the eagle's gaze, one word from thee, here on Patmos's isle, which shall tell the purpose and end of thy writings and all the writings of Holy Scripture."

"These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name."

"Ah, yes; life! life! life!—"

"Now the storm is over. Again the sea is calm; and look! Spirit of Doubt spanning the heavens is the rainbow. So God's Word spans the stormy sky of man's history and speaks to us of the divine peace and joy and life. Spirit of Doubt, hitherto thou hast read only to find fault. But now, wilt thou read to find peace and life and Christ? Here is this book, the Bible, which I brought with me to read in this grotto. This island could not buy it from me. Yet will I gladly give it thee. Better hands than mine have smoothed its pages; the tongue that once I used to hear reading these verses now praise the Lamb that was slain; and the eyes that once scanned these pages now behold him of Whom they testify. Here, Spirit of Doubt, wilt thou take it, and read it in humility and reverence? We have discussed the history of the Bible, and spoken of its contents, its difficulties, its omissions; but most important of all, Spirit of Doubt, is its influence. It has saved men from sin, and has brought them to Christ. No? Art thou gone? Hast thou fallen over this cliff? Thou wouldst not take the Book. Didst thou fear this Book which had lighted others the way to heaven?"

"O Holy Spirit, Fountain of Inspiration, Thou who didst move holy men of old to write the divine oracles, and who in all ages hast kept burning through the world's darkness the lamp of revelation; Thou who art the inspirer of the Scriptures, create faith in them so that they who read shall find Eternal Life. O Word of God; O wisdom from on high, O lamp divine, when dark the night and hard and lonely the way, when rains of sorrow fall, shine Thou, Eternal Lamp, and guide my pilgrim feet until at last to heaven I come, and there, in that better country where they need no candle neither light of the sun for the Lord God giveth them light, behold the Living Word himself."—The Evangelical Student.

those who want to drink liquor, but for those who would suffer for it indirectly.

Because—

National Prohibition was enacted because state control had failed. To repeal would mean to go back to a system already proved a failure. And it would prove a worse failure now, with 26,500,000 automobiles and thousands of airplanes to carry liquor across state lines. The liquor interests want state rights because state laws are easier to violate than Federal laws.

This is the answer to the willingness of the liquor interests to have state option. If they got state option they would then try to get county option, then township option, because the smaller the unit of decision, the less effective the law. Surely there is no occasion for anybody to be deceived by the mischievous trick of the liquor interests to get state rights.

Because—

we have in this country a growing menace in the form of organized opposition to government. The return of liquor would help to fan this spark into a flame of disorder and riot. Every thinking American should consider this problem seriously before casting his vote on the repeal proposition.

Because—

millions of the unemployed now being cared for by public charity are going to rebel at leaving their present life of ease and going back to work, as business resumes. Making liquor available to them would certainly cause unrest, dissension, and perhaps uprisings.

Because —

those who have studied the fundamental principles of Prohibition are aware that it is necessary to the cultural and economic progress of the nation. They recognize that Prohibition has been a powerful factor in the progress made in the United States since 1920—a progress that has amazed the world. They recognize, therefore, that Prohibition is not a failure, as the liquor interests, in an effort to reinstate their business, with hundreds of millions of profits every year, are trying to make the public believe, but that it is a great success.

Lesson Text: Joshua 1 to 6. 23 and 24;

Golden Text: Joshua 1:9

MONDAY

Joshua Succeeds Moses. Joshua 1:1-9

It is no difficult task to succeed some leaders, while it is almost an impossibility to succeed others and give satisfaction. Few people can realize this more fully than a minister of the gospel who has given a long life of service to the church and who has been called upon to take up the mantle laid aside by numerous predecessors whom he has been called to follow.

Moses was a wonderful predecessor, but his very strength and power might cause his successor to enter upon the task of leadership with a certain degree of trepidation, except for the encouragement of God who said "Be strong and very courageous, to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee."

TUESDAY

Joshua Enters Canaan. Joshua 4:8-14

It is difficult to imagine the joy that must have thrilled the vast hosts of the children of Israel as they realized that their longings for the past forty years were about to be fulfilled when they passed over Jordan into the promised land; but at the same time they may have felt just a little humiliated when they thought of the fact that this might have been done forty years before had it not been for disobedience. However you will note how careful Joshua and all his followers were to observe all the law that had been given them by Moses. They wanted no more failures because of disobedience. Later we may learn whether or not they were able to live up to their first big resolves.

WEDNESDAY

Joshua's Vision. Joshua 5:10-15

The children of Israel were now fully entered into the promised land, and their supernatural food supply of manna had been cut off from the heavenly store house. They must now live off the product of the land that had been portrayed to them as a land "flowing with milk and honey."

That it would be necessary for them to herd the cattle and to care for the bees, if they would have this promise fulfilled was immaterial, the promise was true, but they must do their part. Because this occasion was so momentous, and that it might be properly burned into the memory and consciousness of Joshua as leader that great vision of the "Prince of Jehovah" was given to him, and he was very forcibly reminded that this was now holy ground, as all ground is holy where one meets with God's designated representatives. And men, like Joshua, in humility should, as it were, remove their shoes from off their feet.

THURSDAY

Joshua's Obedience. Joshua 6:1-11

We can not recall at this moment any more forceful illustration of the effect or success of obedience to God's law than this incident of the capture of the mighty walled city of Jericho, and the method of its capture. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit" was it accomplished.

We remember reading a sermon by Dr. Talmadge, maybe forty years ago, in which he endeavored to explain the "tumbling down" of the walls of Jericho from natural causes, such as the vibration caused by the blowing of the rams' horns, all in unison and tuned to a certain pitch, that would cause the walls to vibrate like the strings on a piano that respond to a corresponding pitch on the string of a violin. What folly, to try to explain the power of God in such a flimsy way. Give him the glory.

FRIDAY

Joshua Instructing the People. Joshua 8:30-35

Sometimes there seems to be a tendency even among Christian people to question the necessity for observing all the teachings of God or of Jesus. They would have an abbreviated gospel, and of course they would want to have the privilege of designating just what portion of the Word might be omitted. Not so with Joshua. He realized the necessity of having the children of Israel know ALL the law and the importance of keeping it. So in the incident of this lesson we have him laboriously copying the law in the presence of all the people, and then later patiently reading "all the words of the law, the blessing and the curse according to all that is written in the book of the law." Not one word did he miss, and thus were the people properly instructed. And such instruction is needed today.

SATURDAY

Joshua's Farewell Address. Joshua 23:1-13

The farewell address of Joshua is indeed a touching one. He knows he is growing old and that he soon must "go the way of all the earth", and in kindly consideration of the welfare of the people over whom he has presided for so many years he gives them this parting message. And as God said to him in the beginning of his leadership, "Be strong and of good courage," he now uses these same words to cheer his people from whom he is soon to be separated. He declares that God has fulfilled every promise and that he will continue to do so, providing they keep his commandments and obey all his teaching, otherwise destruction shall be their portion.

SUNDAY

Obeying God's Law. Psalm 119:1-8

It was a good many years after Joshua had delivered his farewell address to the children of Israel that the Psalmist wrote the words of this wonderful Psalm; but God had not changed and the laws of God had not been repealed nor modified. The Psalmist knew this and so he took this way of expressing his confidence in the maker of these laws and thus expressed his approval of acting the part of a law abiding citizen. And while other centuries have passed since the writing of this Psalm, yet the same God rules in the heavens and it is just as essential that we obey his laws today as it was in the days of Joshua or of the Psalmist.

Thirty-Fourth International C. E. Convention

We wish to announce again in these columns the Thirty-fourth International C. E. Convention. It will convene at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, July 8-13. A tentative program appears in the June number of the "Christian Endeavor World." This convention celebrates the Fifty-second anniversary of this Youth Movement. There will be conferences of many kinds, powerful Quiet Hour sessions, devotional messages, Radio talks, inspiring music directed by Homer Rodeheaver.

The added attraction is the close proximity to the World's Fair at Chicago. See it all with one trip. Reduced rates from Milwaukee to Chicago for Endeavorers.

The personnel of speakers is made up of the finest in the country among religious thinkers and leaders. There are more than fifty men and women of national prominence on this program of five days, too many to name herein. However there is one coming whom we honor by naming, Dr. James Kelly of Glasgow, Scotland.

Hotel accommodations will be ample and reasonable. You can secure just what you wish. It will be good for delegates to make inquiry and plan to stop at the hotel which your state delegates are using, thereby receiving rates for such people. Further inquiries will be answered, if you write.

A FALLACY HUNT

Here is a good notion for a temperance meeting. Make a collection of anti-prohibition fallacies, and devote a meeting to answering them. You can collect the fallacies easily enough, from the newspaper editorials, from reports of speeches, from printed letters of the wets, from personal conversations. There will be the "personal liberty" fallacy, the "unsuited to the Constitution" fallacy, the "States' rights" fallacy, the "forced on the country" fallacy, the "put through while the boys were at the war" fallacy, the "invasion of the home" fallacy, the "unlawful confiscation" fallacy, the "never can be enforced" fallacy, the "ruining the young" fallacy, the "increase of crime" fallacy, the "loss of revenue" fallacy, the "destruction of business" fallacy, and numerous others, limited only by the devil's ingenuity. Give each of these to a different Endeavorer, and have him answer it in the meeting. Have some one well posted in prohibition facts present ready to confirm the arguments at the close of the meeting. Make it a public meeting, all the church being invited. And stick in some rousing prohibition songs.—"Well's Say-So."

Paul's Attitude Toward Missions---and Ours

By Robert H. Glover

I do not want to think of you at this time in a collective way, but rather as a number of individuals. I should like to ask you personally what you conceive your relation to be to this burning question of carrying out Christ's last command to take his gospel to the whole world. What does the Great Commission mean to you? Has it any personal implication for you? What is your attitude toward the work of world evangelization?

I want to call to your attention the attitude of the great missionary, the Apostle Paul, as expressed in three verses of the first chapter of his letter to the Romans:

"I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are in Rome also. For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

I like to call these verses Paul's missionary creed. Let us strip them down to the bone, as it were, and note those three terse little statements, each beginning with the statement, "I am." "I am debtor . . . I am ready . . . I am not ashamed." At once concise and comprehensive, what better expression of a Christian's missionary creed could we have! They reveal to us that the Master's Great Commission and the world's spiritual need made a threefold appeal to Paul: "I am debtor"—an appeal to his conscience: "I am ready"—an appeal to his heart; "I am not ashamed"—an appeal to his spiritual experience. And I believe God wants the same threefold appeal to come home to our hearts.

"I Am Debtor"

This is an appeal to our Christian conscience—not merely to our sentiment, or our emotions. Paul here lays the true foundation for missionary interest and effort upon a basis of obligation, of responsibility.

There are some who seem to think of missions as a mere hobby on the part of a few pious folk who, for some strange reason, choose to bury themselves somewhere yonder in heathen lands, when they might have made a decent living at home. There is an appalling indifference and unconcern among the great majority of professing Christians toward the missionary task. Then there are others who thank God, view it more seriously, but whose conception of missions is at best as a charity, a benevolence. They conceive the circle of their duty or obligation to be a much smaller area—their home town, or home state, or at most their home country, and anything they may be disposed to do or to give for those outside that circle they consider a charity, something outside of their responsibility. That was not Paul's conception. He did not say, "I am a hero," or, "I am a benefactor." He did not say, "I want you Romans to appreciate that I am conferring a great favor upon you because I choose to take the gospel to you." No, he simply claimed to be an honest man and thus ready to pay his debts. He said, "I owe you the gospel."

I submit to you that there is a world of practical difference between viewing missionary effort as a charity and as a debt. As a charity, it is a secondary thing; as a debt it is primary. As a charity, it is optional; as a debt, it is obligatory. Let us take a homely illustration.

I see a man come down this aisle. I turn and look at him. He is clothed in rags and tatters, and holds out a dirty cap. I at once recognize him as a beggar, and putting my hand into my pocket, I pull a coin, slip it into his cap, and motion him to be gone. I say, in effect, "You are a stranger to me. I owe you nothing. Take what I am minded to give you, and please go away." That is cheap. That is easy. That is charity.

But now I see another man coming down the aisle, holding an envelope in his hand. He hands it to me, and on opening it I find inside a bill reading, "R. H. Glover, debtor"—to the amount, let us say, of one hundred dollars. Do I get rid of that man in the same way as the other? Hardly! It is a different proposition. I am his debtor. I owe him a hundred dollars. It is not a matter of giving him anything that I may feel like giving, but of discharging to the full an indebtedness; not a matter of indifference, but one of serious concern; not a matter of my spare cash, but of my last dollar, if necessary.

My friend, "how much owest thou thy Lord?" Are missions in your "debt" column or your "charity" column? It will make a world of practical difference to your going, your praying, and your giving, just how you view this enterprise. Have you been acting toward missions as though you owed the heathen something? If Paul was a debtor, are we less? If he was constrained to say, "Necessity is laid upon me, yet, woe is me if I preach not the gospel," can we be less concerned? Let it be borne in upon our consciences that we owe every man and woman of our generation a chance to hear of Jesus, the only Savior.

We owe them the gospel, first of all, because it is the only and the sure remedy for their ills. What China needs is Jesus Christ. What Africa needs is Jesus Christ. Nothing else will suffice. Civilization will not do, education will not do, reformation will not do; they need a living, life-giving Savior. Thank God, the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, no less there than here.

Then we owe it to them also because of what it has done for us. What is the difference between us and a degraded Hottentot or a Fiji Islander? Is there any inherent superiority of Occidentals over Orientals? Are we Westerners made of better stuff than the men and women of the East? No, indeed. Missionaries can give you scores of instances where converts there put us to shame, even with one tithe of our privilege, by the lengths to which they go in Christian experience, devotion, and sacrifice. No, the difference between us and them is one of privilege, of opportunity. We have been basking in the sunshine of the knowledge and love of God all our lives, while they have been out in the cold, dark midnight of heathenism and superstition. But have you thought what it might have meant if that man of Macedonia whom Paul saw in a vision had been a man of Persia or India, and the tide of evangelization had turned eastward over Asia rather than westward over Europe? It would have meant that we would today be bowing down before idols and sunken in the degradation of heathenism, while they would be enjoying our gospel blessings. Let each of us ask himself the question, "Am I doing as much for them as I would hope and expect that they would do for me if the tables were turned, and I this morning were where they are, and they were where I am?"

Here the appeal is to our Christian heart. The appeal to conscience is necessary, yet it is insufficient. The heart must be reached.

What a splendid example Paul presents of Christian discipleship! No sooner is his conscience convicted of indebtedness than his heart responds, "I am ready, as much as in me is." He boasted himself the bond-slave of Jesus Christ. Life and death were one and the same with him, only that Jesus Christ might be magnified. Once given a vision of Jesus Christ and a lost world, Paul never thereafter allowed self-interest to challenge for a single instant the absolute lordship of Christ, that he might achieve his purposes through his life. Are we "ready, as much as in us is?" "How much is that?" you ask. I cannot say. I do not know how much is in you. But more than that, even you do not know until you give God a chance. God does not give us our gifts full grown, but in embryo. Only as we use them do they develop, and do we discover how much God can do through us.

Do you think that young man knew how much was in him who, on a Sunday morning in June, sixty-seven years ago, paced the sands of Brighton Beach, England, in an agony of soul concern for inland China, unlighted with the gospel? The church bells were ringing, calling the people to worship, but he could not go in. He was suffering agony for China. He had been there and knew the needs. No one was meeting them. Finally, he flung himself down on the sands and poured out his heart to God. Then God spoke, and said "I am going forth to evangelize inland China, and if you will go with me, I'll make you my channel." And that man, a humble, ordinary, obscure man, said "yes" to God. Little did he dream of the sequel to that surrender—the China Inland Mission as it has since developed, with its 1,285 missionaries, its 300 stations distributed throughout sixteen great provinces, and all the resultant salvation of souls and spiritual fruitage. No, Hudson Taylor could not foresee all this, but he said "yes" to God and God wrought through him. And if you and I, in the same way, will say, "I am ready, as much as in me is," I know there are some things that will happen.

Some of us will go. You say, "It never occurred to me that I should go." That may be so. But the divine command is, "Go." We are not our own; we have been bought

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

ON TO THE DAYTON CONFERENCE

This is the final call to our Ohio State Conference at Dayton. We believe that we have done all a Committee can do. We believe that the Dayton pastor and church has offered all that is humanly possible. We believe that the program will be an inspiration and a blessing. No other state or district has all the advantages our District possesses, namely the state in which the organization was formed. Also, Dayton is the city of the formation of the Brethren Church. Besides, we have the faculty of Ashland College, many of the National officers of our organization and more churches than many of the Districts. All of these augur for a big and good conference.

The nature of the program was determined more or less by many of these considerations. We believe that because of the nature of the program, our pastors and parents should make a determined last-minute effort to have the young people of our churches to be present. No church can make proper progress without the enthusiasm and vigor of its young people. The rehearsing of "Brethren History made in Dayton" by Dr. Shively should be heard by every member of the church, everywhere. That comes the first night. In the afternoon, we expect some great keynoters in the persons of Brothers Barnard and Vice Moderator Stewart. All preachers and laymen should be anxious to hear Dr. Jacobs, Wednesday morning on "If I were a Preacher". The "Lordship of Jesus Christ" by Dr. Beachler will be a great message by a great personality and an outstanding speaker.

Wednesday afternoon, there will be a different sort of Publications Program and some things will be heard never heard before in a Brethren Conference, on that subject. In the evening of this second day, will be Educational Day Program. It will be a real session and ought to be the very best of the entire Conference for young people. Watch out for a great big evening of Miami Valley Churches.

Thursday morning with Dr. Miller and the preachers will be interesting and Dr. Beal will tell some things that many have never heard at a Brethren Conference. The Young People have their say afternoon of Thursday and I shall look forward to that; while in the evening, Dr. Carpenter will have the most difficult, delicate and sensitized subject of the whole Conference. The close of the Conference will come with Dr. Monroe's fightingly symbolic speech on "The Foible and Forte of Brethrenism". If that is not worth while as a program, the Committee has failed. What fine music we shall have also! It will be worth the trip to Dayton to see what a church ought to do in music.

With Robert Kline at the big Estey organ, his helpers and his helpmeet—his wife—with the Choirs and with Don Bame leading the songs and others assisting as he shall draft them, with special numbers from all over the State, what a Conference we ought to have! What a conference! But churches must send the delegates. It is now up to the PASTORS and Boards to get busy. ON TO DAYTON.

CHARLES A. BAME, Moderator.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The fifty-fifth annual commencement was held this past Thursday before the Redwood Stadium. The day was hot which doubtless cut down the attendance but still the exercises were given to an appreciative audience.

The addresses were of high quality. There were 72 in the graduating class. There were members from many states and in several departments. All were gowned and these together with the various colors of the Faculty, made the academic procession one of great beauty. It has been suggested that next year we hold it at night, as the field is lighted. This might add novelty to the occasion.

The scholarships for the coming year are as follows: John C. Myers scholars are John Boyer of Pennsylvania, and Roger Roberts, of Ashland. The Pi Alpha Gamma scholar is Miss Florence Cobaugh of Pennsylvania. The John Lichty scholar is Miss Monica Priest of Ashland.

It was a distinct pleasure to have the Lichty scholarship awarded by one of the co-founders, Mrs. Marie Lichty Shaver, who came for the events of commencement week.

The class address was given by Hon. Vernon Reigel, former superintendent of public instruction of Ohio. The address was favorably received. This was followed by a reception of the seniors and their friends by the writer and his wife.

Other events were held as usual. Many friends from a distance were here for the events.

The new catalogue lists 818 individual students for the year. This is a large number but it is due in part to the large summer school of last year and increased Saturday classes. The regular year showed a decline of about 12%. We aim to correct that this coming year.

Summer school is to open this coming Monday (June 12). Much importance is attached to this part of our work. Prospects at this writing are good.

Already we have received several educational day offerings. For the most part they show an increase over last year, in some cases being doubled.

To be added to the above events which took place on recognition day, was the awarding of pins to 32 Y. W. girls for having an average attendance for the year of 75% or more. Just how would your church line up on that basis?

For the moment, the various faculty members are scattered, but all will be here for the summer work, some however will be gone part of the time to various conferences and training camps.

Thus has closed a year that was as satisfactory as could be expected under the circumstances. I am well pleased with conditions here with some slight exceptions. The office of President at such a school as Ashland is not an easy one, for it makes inroads upon one's physical vigor, upon one's faith, patience, and good judgment. The institution and its administrative officers need the support and prayers of all their friends. EDWIN E. JACOBS.

SOME DOINGS AT OAKVILLE, INDIANA

Greetings again to Evangelist Readers: We have tried to keep-going, but it is not always easy for we find the enemy of our souls ready to discourage, disrupt and disappoint, if possible. Our church here has kept much alive in the cause of Christ, not only by preaching and teaching, but by works, in spite of the depression and the closing of two banks. Our own local bank and our nearest neighbor, where several of our folks have money, closed their doors. But we made bold to take advantage of the very low prices and in January we decorated all our church and Sunday school rooms. The men of the church came in and worked and we hired a couple of painters. Then the women of the church came in and helped to clean up and put things in order. Praise God for the loyal men and women in the church of the living God and for their willingness to sacrifice for the cause of Christ.

After much planning and prayer in the month of April we had our spring revival, running every night for four weeks. A few of us had made up our minds to have a revival if it took us six weeks to do it. We asked several pastors of the community to come in a night now and then, and the pastor filled in the rest of the time. We felt we did not have a lot of money to hire a high powered evangelist. We ran along this way until the last four days when Brother W. S. Bell came to us and stayed over Sunday, and you folks who know Brother Bell in the evangelistic field know how he can preach the Word with power. Praise the Lord for good old fashioned Gospel preachers who are not afraid to work.

As an immediate result there were fourteen confessions, thirteen of them being received into the church. Six of them were young people and the rest were adults. This was the largest ingathering in a single meeting for a number of years here. The field is well worked. We closed with a communion on Monday night, May 1st, having the largest attendance since coming back here, and yet it was a stormy night.

Our Sunday school under the leadership of Charlie S. Kern is advancing and our attendance went up to the 180 mark a few Sundays ago when we worked for 200. The average attendance will exceed last year's, so we feel we are making some headway.

We also want to speak again of our Young People's Christian Endeavor Society with an attendance of 30 to 35. They go the first Sunday of each month and hold a church service at the Delaware county infirmary.

We ask an interest in your prayers and pray God's blessing on all the churches, for these are trying times.

Yours in the blessed hope.

S. LOWMAN, Pastor.

ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

The Christian Endeavor Society of the First Brethren church of Allentown, Pennsylvania sponsored one week of Prophetic Lectures, the Prophetic speaker being Rev. I. D. Bowman, D.D. The young people were interested from the very first of the services and continued with a growing interest to the very last. In fact many of them and other hearers said, "This service surely seemed very short," some said, "We could listen to him up to midnight and not be tired." I do not say that, All of them said that. For there were others who could not get away from their old fashioned methods, that is, when eight-thirty P. M. comes around, they get restless and are unable to sit still. At socials, entertainments and parties they can stay on and on, but at church service they automatically get nervous when the hour is up.

Our Christian Endeavorers are under the capable leadership of Mr. James Huffert as president and his executive board, the chairmen of the different departments of the Society. These all work together faithfully for the advancement of the church of Christ on earth. They spare neither labor nor sacrifice to promote the highest and best interests of the church and the society.

The prophetic lectures delivered by Brother Bowman were very uplifting and full of information. These were messages which did not alone stir the soul of the hearer, but also searched and threw light from God through his precious Word into the hidden places, and the folks stated that they were much helped thereby.

As for myself I wish to say, that, Brother Bowman is better in many ways in his prophetic lectures today than he was years ago. He is far better and more certain after the wide research to which he has given himself these last years. There is nothing which will awaken a church more quickly than will prophecy referring to the Second Coming of Christ. May I say, Brother Bowman had the best record as a Prophetic student and preacher years ago; however, there are several of us who think he is clearer and far better today.

Several of the young people here have asked me, if it would not be possible to rent a larger place for the Prophetic lectures and instead of having one week of services, have them for one month.

I am very grateful to the Executive Committee of the Christian Endeavor Society for making this meeting possible. Let me tell the readers of the Evangelist another thing which was a great work done by these young people. They gave to the church here 100 of the Tabernacle Hymns No. 3, the cost being $57.00. Wasn't that a fine gift? I think that the Christian Endeavor Society of our church had less than $10.00 in its treasury. Did that stop them? No, they went right after things. One had a little savings and drew to help get the books. Another had but ten dollars to his name and used it. Another kind friend let us have ten dollars. Did a debt of about $40.00 scare these young folks? No, they said, "Rev. we will make that up in a few weeks. We are pleased to help the church." This was the way we observed our Thirty-fifth Anniversary.

Young people who are so faithful and energetic as these deserve to be honored and known, and I am going to introduce them to you. They are James Huffert, Elmer Fehnel, Jr., George Short, Robert Short, George Seagreaves (he is the booster who looks for work and finds it), George Hagenbuch (who keeps our boys on their toes on the athletic field, and also helps to keep the church nicely decorated). Since three of these boys are named George, we make much of the saying, "Let George do it." And while they are not all named George, they are all of the kind that can be counted on to do things, and do them in a most helpful way.

A few months back when the salary of the pastor was in arrears, the Christian Endeavor Society was again in the forefront.

I believe that it is the duty of the children of the church to help the church when they are able. Many a church has no help in this respect, even though it (the church), started and helped all the branches within its organization. I confess we have no such difficulty in Allentown, Pennsylvania with any of our auxiliaries. I can say, Praise the Lord for this loyalty and helpfulness.

We had another treat May the 14th. Rev. Milton Bowman from Sergeantsville, New Jersey, was a guest speaker in the afternoon, speaking on the subject, "The Youth at the Cross-Road." His message was enjoyed much at the time and several came to me afterward saying, "We enjoyed hearing that young man." We all hope to have both father and son with us some time later.

There are still a few unsaved in Allentown. We are praying for some, in fact, all of them, and hope to reach some of them. Would you help us with your sincere PRAYER FOR SOULS?

I hope by the Grace of God, to have made the field of labor here easier, so that when another man may come into this work, that the former reputation may entirely be forgotten.

I want to thank you for the several good editorials published in the Evangelist. I found much help, and am thankful to you for these splendid editorials.

May God bless and help you to be a help to many others in the weeks, months and years to come. I may not be able to place a rose on your grave so please receive it now.

Please publish this last also with my newsletter.

Your brother,

S. E. CHRISTIANSEN.

TURLOCK BROTHERS CHURCH NEWS Turlock, California

With the exception of a sermon sent in by N. W. Jennings not long ago, nothing has appeared from the Turlock church for some time. However, that does not mean that we have ceased to function, but rather that so many activities have claimed our time that we have not had time to write as often as we would like to. We always read with interest the reports from other churches in the brotherhood and in so doing we note that they have their ups and downs just as we do. Many problems, difficult to meet, present themselves, but when we have an abiding faith and trust in God, through Christ, and ask his guidance and help, he never fails us. How thankful we are that in these times when everything seems so uncertain, and we wonder how obligations will be cared for, he has been mindful of us and has provided a way. We are happy to report that our church, as a whole, is in a wonderfully fine spiritual condition. The prayer meetings, which are considered the barometer of the church, are well attended. The regular church services have shown a marked increase in attendance the last year. The Bible school, while not increasing in numbers by leaps and bounds, is showing steady growth with five departments functioning. The Christian Endeavor, which is just now organizing its young people into a group apart from the seniors, has also a fine Junior department. This last venture has taken much prayer and careful planning and how thankful we are to see a definite start made.

Our pastor, N. W. Jennings, and his wife work faithfully among us, always ready to serve whenever called upon, fulfilling most unselfishly the work of a shepherd. This is the sixth year they have served us. Much has been accomplished through their leadership, and we are indeed thankful that God has made it possible for us to retain them. It is a joy to report that a number of members, who for years have not worshipped with us, have come back in the last six months, and are faithful in attendance.

Since the first of the year we have enrolled eight names on our records, two by letter and six by baptism. Four of the latter were young people, a circumstance which is always an inspiration to a pastor.

Easter was observed with appropriate exercises, rendered by the Bible school. The Northern California Bible Conference was held the week following Easter. We are noting with satisfaction the continued effect of that spiritual feast. The quarterly communion and love feast was observed May 28th. It has been some time since we have seen so many communicants at the tables. In addition to a large representation from the local church, J. W. Platt and a number of his people were here to enjoy the service and to assist in the serving.

We are earnestly praying that God will continue to look with approval on our work and bless our people to such an extent that we may continue to carry on. The scarcity of work and the low price of farm products has been a great drawback here, as in many other places, but we do praise and thank God that the work has not really suffered. May our faith never waver and may we continue to work, striving always to do those things that would please him and glorify his name.

MRS. C. V. LUNDAHL,
Church Correspondent.

with a price. In the face of the Great Commission and the world's crying need, are we holding back with less than an excuse such as will prove satisfactory when we come to give an account before him?

All of us will PRAY. We cannot all go, but, thank God, we can all pray. And prayer is, after all, the mightiest factor in missions, because the great thing in missions is not methods or money or even men. The great thing in missions is God, and his almighty working, and that working is called forth by prayer as by nothing else. "If ye ask . . . I will do." Prayer is the most potent factor in missions. It is prayer that levels barriers, bursts open closed doors, thrusts forth workers, releases money to support them, sustains their strength, gives power to their message, and leads souls to Christ. We cannot all be preachers, but every one of us can by prayer project ourself from this room, or from our closet, into the uttermost corner of the world and bring to pass things that would not otherwise take place, for "prayer changes things."

Yet prayer, I am afraid, is the last thing that some of us do, and the thing that gets the least of our time. Should we not be convicted, when God has given us this blessed privilege, has placed this mighty power at our disposal, if we do not pray? How much have we really prayed for missions? How much time and labor have we given to missionary intercession? We shall have, like the apostles of old, to "give ourselves unto prayer," to make prayer a previous engagement, a fixed appointment, and to safeguard it from intrusion and interruption. It is only when prayer costs that it counts. And we shall also have to be ever on the alert to gather facts and information about missionary need and work which we may use as fagots to put on the flame of our missionary praying to feed and sustain it.

We shall also GIVE. God has so arranged it that money is necessary for the carrying out of the Great Commission, since going depends upon giving.

The consecration of that group of young volunteers who have offered themselves to go as missionaries cannot materialize until some of God's stewards recognize their stewardship and contribute the money that is necessary. Every missionary who goes, every field entered, every station planted, and every convert won can be spoken of in terms of dollars and cents. I know that the love of money is the root of all kinds of evil, but I know also that the consecration of money is the opportunity for all kinds of good. Have we conceived the privilege that is ours, if we cannot go ourselves, of going representatively by giving of money which is the fruit of our labor?

I rode into a Southern city on the fastest train on the Southern Railway, and went forward on the platform, when I had alighted, to shake the grimy hand of the engineer who drove that locomotive, and I looked into the manly face of a godly man who was driving that locomotive for the evangelization of the world just as really as any missionary abroad is working for that object. He was himself supporting a missionary in China and following the course of that missionary's work with the keenest interest and with earnest prayer. As his wages increased, he was not adding to his expenditure for comforts and luxuries and selfish pleasures, but rejoicing in his privilege of investing ever more largely in missionary effort. He was thus turning his money into souls saved for eternity. And the joy and satisfaction that were his in so doing deeply impressed me, I thought, as I talked with him about the progress of the work in China, in which he was so keen and intelligent a partner how many other men and women at home could be doing the same thing, to the advancement of Christ's cause and the enrichment spiritually of their own lives.

But we shall never learn to give "as much as in us is" until we learn to love. "God so loved that he gave . . ." "Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it." What gift does any young man count too costly for the one who is the object of his affection? He gives not stintingly and begrudgingly, but generously, prodigally—because he gives from love. It is true of American people that they generally get what they go in for, whether it is good food, fine clothes, sports, automobiles, or anything else. Where there's a will there's a way. And when the Christians of America really want the world evangelized, the lack of money will not stand in the way. Oh, that God's children might see the relation of their money to the kingdom of God, and be constrained by love to give "as much as in them is!"

"I Am Not Ashamed"

The appeal is to our Christian experience. What did the apostle mean by saying that he was not ashamed of the gospel? Was it merely that he did not blush for shame at being called a Christian, or a missionary? No, indeed. He was leagues farther on than that. I think this expression of his was rather a negative way of saying, "I have an overwhelming confidence in the gospel, for I know it to be the power of God unto salvation." He was facing Rome, the great metropolis of imperial power and entrenched wickedness. It was the hardest problem he had yet confronted. Would he shrink, or hesitate at the thought? Not he! "Ashamed?" he cries. "Afraid? Far from it, I am ready to face Rome single-handed, if need be, with this trusty sword of the gospel, God's power unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Whence this overflowing confidence of Paul's in the gospel? It came out of his own experience. That gospel had found Saul of Tarsus a proud, cruel, Christ hating, church-persecuting Jew and had laid hold upon him and turned him into a humble, Spirit-filled, missionary spirited servant of Christ. It was because of what the gospel had done for him, and in him, that he was not ashamed, that he had such unshakable confidence in its power to work in others. Does not that bring us to the very heart of this great missionary problem? The prevailing indifference and inaction of so many Christians to missions is to be traced to their poor, shallow, unsatisfying spiritual experience. If Jesus Christ means very little to me, does not enter vitally into my practical daily life, is only a vague and distant being, then I am not going to be enthusiastic to offer him to others. But if Jesus Christ is all the world to me, a living, bright reality, filling my heart with joy and peace, bearing my burdens, answering my prayers, my very "all in all," then I am going to be bubbling over with enthusiasm to make him known to others.

There are many arguments for missions, but perhaps the most cogent of all is the argument to be found within our own heart. It would run something like this: If I can get along without Jesus, then I may conclude that others can likewise get along without him. But if none but Jesus can speak peace to my guilty conscience here in America, can cleanse my heart from sin, can give me the witness that I am born again, can enable me to live a victorious and happy life here on earth, and can lighten my dying hour with the sure hope of life beyond the grave, then who else than Jesus Christ can do it for the man in China, in Africa, or in any other heathen land? My Christian brother or sister, in the measure in which you realize Jesus Christ to be necessary to your own soul's salvation and highest welfare, may God help you to realize your responsibility to do as much as in you is to carry the salvation which only he can give to those who are lost and perishing for the lack of the gospel!

Let me just add, in closing, that this missionary creed of Paul is no vague and general creed, but a personal one: "I am debtor . . . I am ready . . . I am not ashamed." "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." It is for us as individuals to have ears to hear, and hearts and wills to respond. Have our consciences been convicted to say, "I am debtor?" Have our hearts been constrained to say, "I am ready"? Then may God deepen our Christian experience until, out of spirits, filled to overflowing with his grace and love, we can say, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, and therefore I must do all within my power to give to every soul in the world a chance to hear this gospel and be saved!"—The King's Business.

"WE WILL DIE FIRST"

These words have been an inspiration to us. Back in the days of "hard times," when Baptists of the South were really poor, when the teachers in our schools and seminaries taught without salary, when they not only put their time and money into the causes they loved, but their very lives—when the Seminary was in a desperate plight, what did they do? Did they abandon it? No, thank God. They said, "We will let the Seminary die, but we will die first." We need their spirit. We must have the sacrificial life or we lose not only what we have, but what we are.—Florida Baptist Witness.

HARNESSING YOUTHFUL ENTHUSIASM

The greatest and the basic crusade of all is one into which the youth of the world may throw all their strength of body, mind and spirit—it is the crusade to enlist men and women in full surrender to God as he has made himself and his way of Life known through Jesus Christ. The failure of most crusades is that they leave God and his laws out of account. They depend on human organization, resources and leadership, rather than on God's power and direction. The Christian missionary crusade is one that is worthy of all the devotion, the zeal, the sacrifice that men and women can give to the cause. It is nothing less than full partnership with God in making men Godlike in character and in bringing the whole world into harmony with his program of life and love. It is a crusade that includes every other high ideal and worthy cause—temperance, moral purity, economic justice, law observance, better race relations, international peace and world friendship. The only true and lasting foundation for a better personal life and for better human relationships is right relations with God, the Creator and Ruler of the universe. He has revealed himself and his Way of Life through Jesus Christ and the New Testament. Here is a Leader worthy of all honor and unswerving loyalty. Here is a cause worthy of our fullest devotion—of energy of mind and body, of all our possessions and of life itself. The most cheering fact is that if we enlist in this Cause we are in partnership with God himself; such enlistment brings new strength and joy and usefulness to many, and victory is assured.—Missionary Review of the World.

SCHINDEL—Fannie Schindel died April 1, 1933. For many years Miss Schindel had been a most faithful member of the Hagerstown church. Few were the services of her Church when she was not present. She was a liberal supporter of every phase of Church work, and a leader in the Ladies' Aid. The loss of this faithful member is keenly felt by the whole Church. Interment was made at Rose Hill Cemetery, Hagerstown. Services by the pastor. FRANK G. COLEMAN

GORDON—Edgar N. Gordon, aged 24 years, died May 29, 1933. Member of the Hagerstown Church. A faithful attendant at the Men's Bible Class. Present on Sunday, died suddenly on Monday. Interment at Rest Haven Cemetery, Hagerstown. Services by the pastor. FRANK G. COLEMAN

BYERS—Mrs. Sevilla Byers, wife of Rev. Alvin Byers of Canton, Ohio, and daughter of Jas. and Mrs. Ada Cray, was born in Onachere Township, near East Canton, Ohio, June 9, 1873, passed out of this life May 12, 1933, making the span of her earthly life 59 years, 11 months and 3 days. She was a member of the First Brethren Church of Canton, Ohio, for the past thirty-five years. Mrs. Byers was a sufferer for the past fourteen years but despite this handicap she was much interested in the work of the church and was a real help to her husband in his work as pastor. She remained firm in her faith in the Lord Jesus Christ to the end. She leaves to mourn her home-going her husband, mother and sister, and many friends. Funeral services were conducted by the undersigned, assisted by Rev. D. F. Eikenberry, a long-time friend of Rev. and Mrs. Byers, from the First Brethren church in Canton, Ohio. J. C. BEAL.

AN APPRECIATION OF SISTER BYERS

It is but fitting that a few words be spoken for the North Georgetown Brethren. Fifty years ago, 1882, when Elder I. D. Bowman came over to North Georgetown from Louisville to hold a series of meetings, a young girl accompanied him to assist in the song service. This was none other than the one we have long known as Sister Byers. At other similar meetings in following years she came and helped in the same manner; so that through her genial Christian attitude, she won a place in almost every Brethren home; which not only lasted, but grew and broadened as these years have swiftly passed by.

In the last three years her presence at nearly every church service, served as a spur for greater loyalty to the church on the part of those of us, who were enjoying the blessing of better health than Sister Byers.

During these years she lived together with Brother Byers entered into the mutual joys and sorrows of all our homes. No other person held so unique a position in the history of the North Georgetown Brethren church as Sister Byers, outside our own membership.

Yes, we have and will miss Sister Byers—from the oldest to the youngest of our number at our church gatherings. May the blessed peace that Jesus brought for lost humanity be hers. DEACON OF THE CHURCH.

of 180, and the average attendance for the year having exceeded that of last year.

Our readers will be glad to see Prof. Stuckey back in the Bible Study Department again, resuming his "Miniature Studies in the Divine Library". His brief studies of the Old Testament books were widely appreciated and we anticipate an equally wide interest in his New Testament studies, the introduction to which he gives in this issue. We are also publishing a revision of his Bible chart, for which many calls have been made. We are also privileged to announce that Dr. L. S. Bauman will shortly begin again his series of Bible Studies which had aroused such keen interest among our readers during the early issues of this year and which he was compelled to discontinue because of a multitude of duties, many of which were related to the Foreign Missionary work.

President E. E. Jacobs concludes in this issue the report of the commencement activities for the present college year. Ashland graduated a fine class this last week and has a record comparable to that of other colleges of its size and larger for turning out well-equipped and inspired young people to take their places in life's battle. Young people who come to Ashland need not fear that the training they receive here will be inferior to that received at other schools. It is a first rate school and Brethren pastors and parents can well afford to urge their ambitious young people to come to Ashland for their higher education. If Brethren people who have heretofore been careless about patronizing their own church school will adopt a loyalty spirit and send their children to Ashland, the twelve per cent loss suffered in enrollment last year can be more than made good this next year.

Brother S. E. Christiansen, pastor of the church at Allentown, Pennsylvania, writes of the splendid group of young people he has and of the fine things they are doing for the church. It is a joy to the heart of a pastor to have dependable, active young people, and it is a satisfaction to young people to have a pastor to take an intelligent interest in them and to give recognition to their efforts. Among other things they promoted a series of instructive lectures on Prophecy, delivered by Dr. I. D. Bowman. Much interest was developed in the community in Brother Bowman's teaching and the pastor pays tribute to the evangelist's growing spiritual power and insight. We would be ungrateful indeed if we did not express our sincere thanks to Brother Christiansen for his kind words about the editor. We are glad to know our humble efforts are helpful.

BRETHREN EVANGELIST

God Give Us Men

By John Gilbert Holland

God give us men. The time demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and willing hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking!
For while the rabble with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds
Mingle in selfish strife; lo! Freedom weeps!
Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps!

WHERE the West Begins

This is being written at Rapid City, South Dakota, as we rest for a few minutes beside the beautiful stream which flows down from the Black Hills to the city. Many people did not know this region existed until the late President Coolidge made it his summer home in 1927. If you want to reach western scenery quickly you should drive this way. There are mountains here over 7000 feet high, the largest low grade ore gold mine in the world—all within a few minutes drive from one of the most perfect little western cities you will ever see.

As a matter of fact, the west begins when you cross the Missouri River at Chamberlain, South Dakota, about 250 miles east of Rapid City. I do not know of any other route where the break is more distinct. When you drop down to the river from the east side, the farming land changes abruptly to the grassy, rolling country of the cattle ranges. The recent rains have clothed them with green.

There is plenty of room out here. You may travel miles without seeing a house of any sort. After seeing the crowded way that people live in such cities as Chicago, you wonder why more do not move out where there is space to breathe. But some have gotten so used to crowds that they do not feel at home unless they can look out their windows into the neighbor's back yard. Even in the tourist camps they like to crowd together. The western tourist generally tries to get out on the fringe of the camp. He is very sociable, but wants room. The Eastern city tourist is sometimes unsociable, but likes to be in the crowd. That is the paradox of the apartment house dweller, a phenomenon peculiar to modern civilization.

A CENTURY of Progress

On the way through Chicago we paid a rather brief visit to the great fair that opened on May 27th. We saw enough to know that it is worth seeing. Some one has figured how far you would have to walk to see all the exhibits. Something like 84 miles, I believe. I did not attempt it, although I felt as if I had walked that far at the end of the day.

The fair really surpasses description. If one could spend 84 days, taking about one mile each day, it might be seen in a superficial way. As an educational scheme it is superb. Too bad the exhibits could not be preserved for people, especially children, who will not have the money to attend this year. However, some of the things will be out of date next year. Such is progress.

Man can produce wonderful machinery. It is not so easy to make progress spiritually and ethically. The scientists and inventors cannot do anything for the world spiritually. Radios, electric refrigeration and automobiles do not make men more holy. Only Christ can help us thus. Until the world learns this all its progress is a striving after wind.

WHAT Are People Interested In?

One of the pleasant features of the Chicago Fair is that you have room to move about. The planners did not try to crowd the exhibits into cramped quarters. Furthermore there are plenty of places where you can sit down and rest while looking at something interesting. Some one evidently remembered that at such places the time comes eventually when you are more interested in a comfortable seat than in all the marvels on exhibition.

You can easily avoid the worst crowds if you stay away from the street where they have what are called (by some people) "amusements." Why is it that many will travel across the country at heavy expense to see the Fair, and then spend their time looking at the tall man and the fat lady and the two-headed calf? The most congested spot I saw was around the gentleman who tries to guess your weight, and you get weighed for nothing if he misses. People are often interested in the curious and the spectacular rather than that which is valuable. If you do not believe that, witness the multitudes who are more interested in the doing of the current movie idol than in the priceless boon of eternal life.

A FEW Days in Iowa

On Sunday morning, June 4th, I preached at the Hudson church. The number of people at Sunday School and Church service was encouraging. There is a future for any church located in a community where there are people who go to church. In the evening I had the pleasure of renewing fellowship with Brother Riddle and preaching in the Waterloo Church. These people are deeply interested in the study of the Word and the pastor is beloved for his fine leadership.

We spent a brief time with Mrs. McClain's parents at La Porte City, always a pleasant experience. My own parents have departed to be with Christ, and her parents are father and mother to us both. While there we visited once more with Uncle Royal Perkins. He has seen 93 years in this world and remembers the past with remarkable clearness. It is an education to listen to a man born in 1840. Those who imagine that this present depression is the only one should hear Uncle Royal's account of some past depressions. He has seen a great deal of life, and now (best of all) he is waiting in Christian faith for the entrance into a better world where there are no depressions and where the abundant life shall never end. We live in an age which has little time for the counsel of the elders. Wisdom is supposed to dwell with the young men. It would be better, I think, if the words of the venerable were heard more often. They may not be up to date in some things of this world, but they have a better sense of values. They could tell you that the things that are seen are temporal, and that is worth knowing.

THE Big Horn Mountains

I am finishing this week's contribution at the pass on top of the Big Horn Range in Wyoming. The altitude is almost two miles. To the right of the road is a little meadow literally carpeted with myriads of flowers. On the left among the big trees are snow banks. A thunder storm is breaking on one of the massive overhanging peaks above us. . . . what we thought was rain turned out to be hail. In less than five minutes the automobile was covered with hail about three inches deep, not large enough to injure anything.

"Hast thou entered the treasuries of snow, or hast thou seen the treasuries of the hail which I have reserved against the time of trouble?" (Job 38:22).

We descended the west side carrying hail on the running board until we reach the desert where it vanishes in the heat of the blazing sunlight. The beauty and interest of the west are in its sharp contrasts.

HOLY MOTHER SUTTEE

A correspondent in India, writing to World Dominion about the Findings of the Laymen's Commission of Appraisal, states emphatically that Hinduism has not changed.

"In these days, when so many people, especially in the United States of America, fall easy prey to the prevailing idea that 'India is all right, Gandhi will lift her up,' I want to tell you about a suttee which took place here recently in the presence of hundreds of spectators. The woman was heavily drugged and seated on the funeral pyre. She took her dead husband's head in her lap (whereat, say the Hindus, the corpse smiled), and was burned to death, while the Hindu priests drove back the men and pushed the woman forward to see this 'holy woman,' exhorting them to 'go and do likewise,' and follow the example of a holy Hindu wife.

"The district commissioner was at that time a Hindu, and reports are rife that he was appealed to by the police by wire, but that he replied, 'Let it alone!' Later, his wife (the highest lady in the district) was one of the thousands who came to this shrine to offer worship.

"The ashes of the poor woman were hardly cold before her three little girls were brought to the place, and their little tear-stained faces were rubbed with the ashes of 'Holy Mother Suttee.' Their future may be better left unmentioned."

The New Freedom We Must Secure

This is the season when we are accustomed to celebrate the birthday of our national freedom. It is good for us to turn our thoughts back occasionally and re-evaluate the national heritage that has come down to us. No finer exercise could we set for ourselves than to go back and re-read and contemplate the Declaration of Independence, and give special attention to the assertion that men "are endowed with certain inalienable rights that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," and that "to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." There is need to refresh our minds with the fact that "the Representatives of the United States of America" are enabled to declare thus and so, and to do this or that, "in the name of and by the authority of the good people" in these States. These days are not so favorable to democracy as were some of the days that are past. The people are forgetful of their rights and authority, and leaders are ambitious and self-seeking and covetous of power. The foundation stone of democracy is just that truth that government "derives its powers from the consent of the governed," and the day we forget that fact, or cease to guard it with jealous care, democracy is gone and we shall be once more slaves. Freedom can be preserved only by constant vigilance.

Then we need to remind ourselves that back of all human authority and power stands God, that the Lord Jesus Christ is the source of all civil authority. All powers that be are ordained of God, he is the supreme ruler of nations, all authority is given unto him in heaven and on earth. All men in all relations are subject to his will and responsible to his word of power, whether they recognized and acknowledge his rule or not. Christian people should not fail to keep that in mind and give to him the allegiance that is his due and render to him the obedience that is his by right. By so doing will men find true freedom, and in no other way. In very truth it is only by walking in God's way that the nation or the individual can be really free, and only so can freedom be safeguarded. This fact was taken into account at the beginning of our national life, and with that consciousness the foundations of our government were laid.

But not only should we contemplate the past and cherish the lofty heritage that we have received, but we should consider also wherein we are failing to take possession of the full measure of the freedom that is ours by right and by divine decree. There is greater freedom, larger freedom, new freedom that we ought to secure for ourselves.

Freedom from Indifference

In the first place, the new freedom we need is freedom from indifference to political responsibility, particularly on the part of Christian citizens. We need to bear in mind that our divine Lord said, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." That surely means that we have a duty to the government. Every citizen, Christian and non-Christian, has a duty to perform to determine the trend of his government, whether it shall face in the direction that will make the world a better place in which to live, or a worse place. All too many Christians in this very hour of crisis are asleep to their responsibility, or unconcerned about how the issues go, and unless there is a quickening of the dead bones of indifference, we shall be overwhelmed by the forces of evil and terrible will be the consequences.

Freedom from Materialism

In the second place we must needs seek with new zeal to secure freedom from materialism. We are in bondage to things. The world is on the rocks right now because of the grasping, greedy spirit that has possessed men everywhere. Just one of the many proofs of the abject slavery in which money has bound us is to be found in the Congressional investigation which exposed the "privileged lists" of those who received special favors of J. P. Morgan and Company. And the thing that makes the situation worse is the almost total lack of seriousness with which the revelations were received by the public. Scarcely any one looked upon such methods as anything out of the way. As the Reformed Church Messenger comments: "The common remark on the street is anybody would have grasped at the chance to make easy money in that fashion. That men on our highest courts while holding positions of solemn trust should have put themselves under obligations in this way is passed by for the most part with a shrug and a smile. The demand for the resignation of such officials is sneered at as hysterical and partisan." We think nothing of it because the whole social fabric has become so imbued with the love for money that scarcely any one has a sensitive conscience any more in such matters. We have become thoroughly demoralized by our continual racing after the dollar. It is no wonder that Jesus warned us against the love of money, as being the root of all evil. No warning is more sorely needed than just that, and no end is more truly needed than freedom from "the money power."

Freedom from the Class Spirit

In the third place, the new freedom we need is freedom from the class spirit and from the widely prevalent lack of sympathy and concern for our fellowmen. "Am I my brother's keeper?" we ask, and the Christian must respond in the affirmative. He must hear his Master say, "Bear ye one another's burden, and so fulfil the law of Christ." And the motto of his own blessed life was, "Not to be ministered unto, but to minister." And, "I am among you as he that serveth." Moreover, our own national history is replete with examples of men who entered into the fellowship of the sufferings of others. We are told that a most critical period followed the Revolutionary War. "Victory had been won but the fruits of victory seemed far away. Despair filled the minds of our bravest statesmen. Poverty was universal. The civilian population was bitter toward the military and the soldiers were unpaid and on the edge of mutiny. General Gates was instigating sedition. A meeting of the discontented soldiers was called. Washington attended the gathering with a set speech to be read. He was received by his old army by a silence that indicated suspicion and resentment. He rose to speak and uncovered his venerated head. His eyes grew dim and he could not see the paper. Without premeditation he said with breaking voice: 'Fellow soldiers, you perceive that I have not only grown grey but blind in your service.' The temper of the assembly changed. The old love and loyalty again surged through the heart of the Continental Army. He was no longer doubted. He bore the marks of a patriot." His heart went out to their hearts; he had identified himself with them. When that spirit prevails among the various elements of our national life, there will be no class strife, no race prejudice, no labor trouble. We shall be free from such enslaving pettiness.

Freedom from Unworthy Leadership

In the fourth place, we need dreadfully to be free from a low, narrow-visioned, demagoguery leadership. We owe much of the severe, distressing situation in which we find ourselves to the lack of high moral leadership in our nation in the last decade. People have been encouraged in their selfishness and taught to be grasping. Walter Lippmann said some time ago: "Those in high places have steadfastly preached to the people that it was their destiny to have two-car garages and eight-tube radio sets. That was the ideal they held out before the people, to be acquisitive, to seek feverishly to become richer and richer, to prostrate themselves before the golden calf." If we wish to build a nation that will be worthy of Washington and of the brave men who clothed themselves in honor by their service unto death, we must escape from the leadership of those who are small and selfish and mean, from those who are mere ear-ticklers and place-seekers, and turn to those who have ideals and strength and godliness.

Freedom from the Defeatist Attitude

And finally, we must seek freedom from the defeatist attitude and return to a revival of courage and confidence and venturing faith. We must have the courage to resist repeal to the last ditch. To lose the battle with a hard fight will be disaster enough, but to tamely surrender to the forces of evil would be disaster of the first magnitude. God give us men of courage and strength.

There is but one way for this desired freedom to come to us, and be in us a permanent reality, and that is through the empowerment of the Son of God. "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother E. M. Riddle calls Christian Endeavorers to make their contributions promptly to the national work, the offerings to be sent to Miss Gladys Spice, Canton, Ohio. Also on Christian Endeavor page will be found a splendid message from Brother L. E. Lindower on "Vacations and Stumps."

Last week the Evangelist congratulated Sister E. J. Horne of Cleveland on her 93rd birthday, but it turns out we got her age wrong, and that she is only 85 years young and her birthday is the 10th of July. We are sorry to have gotten the figures wrong but the congratulations and kind greetings still stand.

Program of Brethren Day at Rocky Ridge, Maryland, is announced in this issue over the signature of Brother J. L. Bowman, and the date is July 27th. Basket dinners are to be brought by those who attend and a great day of fellowship is anticipated. The Church of the Brethren people of that vicinity are also invited.

The work at Washington, D. C., is pressing forward under the capable leadership of Brother Homer A. Kent. The attendance at the regular services keeps up well, the Sunday school attendance reaching the high average of 325 during the month of April. During the year twenty-three new members came into the church through the Sunday school. The women's organizations and the young people's societies are doing good work.

Brother A. B. Cover, pastor of the First church of Los Angeles, reports sixty-two decisions for Christ and reconsecrations, thirty-nine having been baptized, as a result of an evangelistic campaign conducted by the "Singing Longs". Also four had previously been received into the church, one by baptism and three by relation. The various departments of the work are active and the pastor is encouraged by God's blessing on his leadership.

Brother Robert D. Crees and his people of Kittanning, Pennsylvania, dedicated the last Sunday in April three new Sunday school class rooms and three new large windows, also the church exterior was painted. The men showed their fine loyalty by the contribution of labor, forty-four different men having cooperated. We congratulate Brother Crees and his faithful ones for their achievement and for other evidences of growth.

Brother Alan S. Pearce, secretary of the Southern California conference, writes of the good things in store for the delegates of that district at their coming meeting. Prof. McClain is the principal Bible lecturer, and Dr. Bauman is also to give a series of lectures. Other pastors and special lectures are to have part on the program. We bespeak a large attendance and a real spiritual feast.

Brother H. F. Stuckman announces the Indiana Bible Conference program, which is combined with the Shipshewana Young People's Camp program, the inclusive date for which is July 16 to 23. The two Sundays included will be special days, when effort will be made to secure the attendance of members of the various Sunday schools and churches in large numbers, half the churches being urged to attend the first Sunday and the others to attend the second Sunday.

Prof. M. A. Stuckey returned from the Juniata Young People's Camp, where he served as superintendent, enthusiastic over the success of this first venture of the Pennsylvania churches to conduct a summer training camp for their young people. There were forty-four students enrolled and they were an earnest and serious minded group, the kind that promise much for the future leadership of the churches. We shall be glad to hear more about the camp from those whose duty it is to report.

Reports from both Brethren R. Paul Miller and W. H. Schaffer indicate that the Conemaugh revival was a great season of fellowship and the church was much benefited by the messages from the Word. Six souls confessed Christ and nineteen reconsecrated their lives to Christ, making a total of twenty-five. This church is going forward in a splendid way under Brother Schaffer's leadership and the future is said by both pastor and evangelist to be bright. Brother Miller is now engaged in a revival at Osceola, Indiana, with Brother Frank Gehman.

Brother A. E. Whitted announces the launching of a Young People's Training Camp for Ohio at the Loher Ranch, a very attractive camp, north of Canton, to be held July 17-22. Special efforts are being put forth to keep the expenses down to the very lowest figure possible. The instruction will be taken care of by some of the pastors of the district and the courses to be taught are such as are usually given at such camps. Summer training camps are coming to be quite popular means of training and inspiration for young people and our leaders are doing well in making possible to our young people such advantages.

Dr. Martin Shively, bursar of Ashland College, makes his first report of receipts for the Educational Day offering, the amount being $502.77, which is nearly double the amount of the first report of last year, the amount being $258.08 on July 10, 1932. While the present report does not indicate a big offering, yet it does point to the likelihood of getting a larger amount than last year, which certainly is necessary, if the standing of Ashland College is to be kept out of the danger zone. Every church should take an offering and do the best it can; and that is all that can be asked of any church. After giving your best, see to it that your offering is promptly sent to the bursar.

Dr. E. E. Jacobs, president of Ashland College, reports that the attendance at the Summer School, though not so high as formerly, is yet quite good considering prevailing conditions, the present enrollment being 274. He announces the selection of Miss Dorcas Bame, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. A. Bame, as teacher of voice and public school music, to succeed Miss Norma Hurdle. We congratulate the college in the selection of Miss Bame, whose voice and training eminently fit her for the position. The reference to the visit of the California Quartette among the churches reminds us of the slogan that was put forth a few weeks ago, namely, "a new student from Every Church". This is the time for the young people to make plans for attending Ashland College this fall.

We have a good report of progress for the mission field of the Bellevue station in Africa. Sister Hattie Sheldon writes that the average Sunday school attendance for the year has been 433, the native workers serving as teachers of most of the classes, these teachers themselves being taught by Brother Chauncey Sheldon. The industry and activity of the natives is also being developed by the building of chapels for worship, two having been built during the year and two others being under construction. The attendance at these chapels is most commendable. Miss Mabel Crawford, our latest missionary recruit to our African field, has been granted permission by the French government to start a mission school, which will be a great advantage to the work. The total communicant membership of this station is 209, there having been 49 added during the year and 75 being now in the instruction class for membership. One feature that promises good for the future progress of the work is the instruction in tithing, there being now about 100 tithers enrolled.

We are publishing in the News Department a clipping from the South Bend Tribune, telling of the honor conferred upon Brother Robert F. Porte, not only by Drew University, from which he received the degree of doctor of theology, but also by his church and some visiting ministers, who joined in felicitating him at a "family

The Christian Patriot and the Present Emergency

By Rev. R. F. Porte, Th.D.

The uncertainties and need of the present time are too well understood to be discussed. The humblest person is well aware of the world crisis. The seriousness of the present situation is evidenced by the fact that individuals and groups are frantically clamoring for relief. A time so abnormal as this disturbs the religious and social foundations of the people. Old sanctities and faith seem to have failed. The old social order appears to have led us into an impasse. The tendency at once is to listen to voices, to wildly search after some assurances of spiritual and economic security. The suggestions for help are numerous and range from the position of extreme communism to absolute dictatorship. In every case, there is failure to properly study the principal factor in this whole problem, which is man himself. Man would try to master the material world without first learning the power which must control his own life.

There is a subtle Epicureanism inoculating the whole human family from which we have not as yet been freed. It is the prevalent idea that the demands of the natural life are legitimate and right. It is easy to see at once, that to concede such a doctrine would make humanity subject to the material world. A thoughtful person ought to know that we have passed through a period of our national history when humanity did practically, and perhaps almost perfectly, gratify the demands of the physical life. We were unable to hold this material prosperity. History also testifies to the fact that humanity has never been able to effect security in material things. The fundamental character of the world is against it. There is no evidence of permanency in the material order nor in man's physical life. When we speak as we have just done, somebody says, "He is mystical and impracticable." A mystic means to many only a sort of dreamland vision of the universe, a person living in the clouds. But where does our music and art come from? Where did the great prophets of Israel and Judah get those stirring messages? In each case, these interpreters of the unseen found values above the material order of the universe. In our distress we always turn to the Bible and to the great hymns and religious literature where we find the answer to our deepest need. It is not food and entertainment we want most when we are distressed, it is that which transcends the things we see and handle. The world is dismayed, as were the Philistines when they discovered their god Dagon fallen in the temple, because our gods of silver and gold and worldly achievement have failed us.

The present world problem is our mutual problem. It is true that we may not find any satisfaction in things as they are, but the establishment of the Kingdom of God must become to us a conscious possession and reality, rather than the sin and chaos of the present world. There can be no satisfaction in a mere vision of God's Kingdom. The most devout Christian looks for a literal realization of the Kingdom of God. The Kingdom of God is more than the individual consciousness of its reality, it is an order in which the mind of God is regnant. St. Paul voices the desire of every thoughtful Christian when he said, "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death" (Phil. 3:10). The knowledge of God includes something of the personal interests of God in the world of persons. God as the Father easily implies other members in his family with whom we share relation. The despair of the worldly wise in this present world crisis ought to be contrasted with a deepening certainty and faith in those who are born into the family of God. The present time testifies loudly to the error of our human emphasis. "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." It is difficult to believe that our people will continue to build their hope on the sinking sands of time.

The greatest patriots never agree with the majority always. The great prophets of Israel and Judah loved their nation more deeply than any of their fellows. There is no eloquence like that which comes from a heart crushed by the sense of sin. Persecution from them who are sold unto sin and carnality is inevitable. A Christian is never self-seeking, nor is a true patriot. The prophets sought no political favors or national honors. Their voices were raised on behalf of all the people of the nation. I want to call attention to the fact that with the destruction of Israel's social organization their religion was also destroyed. The prophets saw that the fundamental ground of both the religious and national life lay in three fundamental social factors, righteousness, justice, and mercy. Patriotism does not mean loyalty to the selfish program of a demagogue. It is rather the defence of those elements in national life which make it strong. Have we a message from the people of God for the nation today? The religious and political need of this world will never be helped by that type of teaching which builds a human tower of Babel out of isolated scriptural texts. I want again to call attention to the fact that the prophets were not in agreement with either the accepted religion of their time or the political order. The truth is that in which we can all share and in which we must believe for peace and safety.

We are often confused as to the question of the Christian's relation to the world order. Many good Christian people seek to live in total independence of the world. The fact is that these good people do not live in isolation. The right of suffrage for example, is primarily the ascertaining of the popular mind in matter of the governmental policy. The paying of taxes is open to more serious question than that of a Christian voting because taxes support the corruption in government while voting may be a protest against certain irregularities in government. The point in question is that each individual is organically united to the social order. The key to the situation lies in the words of Jesus, "Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt hath

The Origin of a Popular Hymn

By H. H. Smith

John Fawcett, the author of the popular hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," and several other hymns that have found a place in most of our Church Hymnals, was a Baptist preacher of England. He was born at Lidget Green, in Yorkshire, in 1739. He was converted under the preaching of Whitefield and united with the Methodists, but after a few years joined the Baptist Church. He died in his seventy-eighth year, having spent nearly sixty years in the ministry. He wrote a number of books on religious subjects, and was the author of more than one hundred hymns. Besides the popular hymn mentioned above, the following are found in many Hymnals: "Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing;" "How precious is the book divine;" "Praise to Thee, Thou great Creator;" "Thy way, O Lord, is in the sea;" "Religion is the chief concern;" "Sinners, turn, why will ye die?"

His popular hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," has an interesting origin. In his early life, Dr. Fawcett became pastor of a humble Baptist Church at Wainsgate, in Yorkshire, and after a few years received a call to London to succeed the Rev. Dr. Gill. His farewell sermon had been preached and his furniture placed in wagons, when "men, women, and children clung around him and his family in perfect agony of soul." This was more than the man of God could stand. "Finally overwhelmed with the sorrow of those they were leaving, Dr. Fawcett and his wife sat down on one of the packing-cases, and wept bitterly. Looking up, Mrs. Fawcett said: 'Oh, John, John, I cannot bear this! I know not how to go!' 'Nor I either,' said the good man; 'nor will we go. Unload the wagons, and put everything in the place where it was before.' This determination was hailed with tears of joy by those around and a letter was at once sent to London explaining the case. Dr. Fawcett then resolutely returned to his work on a salary of something less than two hundred dollars a year, and this hymn is said to have been written to commemorate the event."

It adds to our appreciation of the hymn to read: "The tender ties that bound him to his loving people were severed only in death."

"The Methodist Hymnal Annotated" says: "This hymn is sung the world over, and is one of the most universally popular lyrics of Christian love ever written. It not only gives beautiful poetic expression to the growing spirit of Christian fraternity that now everywhere prevails, but the singing of it at all the great gatherings of Christian workers both in the home and foreign fields has done much to bring about this very fraternity and Christian fellowship.

lost its saltiness wherewith shall it be salted?" The influence of Christian people should be particular rather than to be lost in the midst of other destroying elements.

The Pietistic movement in Germany conserved the real elements of the Lutheran Reformation and re-established spiritual worship of God. Pietism created a social influence quite akin to that of apostolic times. When Christian people become interested in material things it is more convenient to make religion formal. Jesus was most informal even to the extent of eating with publicans and sinners. The Divine could not be destroyed by sin any more than light could be destroyed by darkness. The influence of Christianity today is not to be determined by the groups and orders we may find but by the privileges afforded for living service to this day and generation. A Christian patriot helps to create a new social order based upon the economy of mutual sharing. Permanent riches are to be found in the enrichment of life.

The church must take the lead in the regeneration of the social order. God made the world good and this present order responds to the law of right. It is only rebellion against God's purposes that brings sorrow. Whatever we sincerely say about the present world order we say it in the light of our own moral standing. What are we seeking to help this world to become? If we are passively awaiting some millennium to regenerate the world the question is, "What relation do we each sustain to the millennium?" The character of tomorrow is colored somewhat by the character of today. The tomorrow will be a day of judgment to some, to others it is a day of reward. The eternal law of righteousness vindicates itself upon that person who despised righteousness, while it brings light and blessing to that person who sought out and cherished it. Goodness creates its own new condition and situation. The world is better if there is one good man living in it. What we desire for the nation must first be our own possession, at least in principle. A Christian consciousness must be impressed upon the nation by the loyal living of Christian truth. The measure of patriotism is its loyalty to truth and righteousness. DeTocqueville said, "It is man who makes monarchies and establishes republics, but the commune seems to come direct from the hand of God." Our Lord pities the masses of the people wandering as sheep without a shepherd. "I am the Good Shepherd," said Jesus, but the world would offer the people only a super-man. The world needs Jesus and Jesus comes to the world through hearts that let him live in them. The Christian patriot will loyally live in the firm conviction that only God's way for the world will save the world from its distress. Revolution will not help the world, a super-man dictator will not help, but obedience to the law of God that makes mankind kin will point the way out of the dark.

ATTEMPT TO BRIBE THE SALVATION ARMY

The Salvation Army has been making a campaign in New York City for the purpose of raising a large fund to finance its program of charitable work. As usual, men and women of all faiths have been helping.

Miss Evangeline Booth announced the other day that one man had offered to give $100,000 to the fund if the Salvation Army would abandon its position in favor of Prohibition. Miss Booth announced that the Army would not do so for any money because they were convinced that Prohibition is the only proper way to handle the liquor trade. The Army knows that Prohibition has worked to help the poor class.

This anti-Prohibition drive is the work of rich people who can offer bribes of $100,000 because they figure it will save them more than that in income taxes and in what they make from the beer and distillery stock which only they can buy. As for the poor man's soul what is that in comparison with money in the pocket of a Raskob, a duPont or a Mellon?—Christian Standard.

LIBERTY, AN UNATTAINED GOAL

By Rev. W. Irwin Duker

Rev. Duker says, "Reaching up . . . is personal liberty, reaching down is license . . . We have set our faces to allow the imps of hell to traffic in our children to bring "back prosperity."

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." John 8:32.

Men in all ages have desired to be free, and then resolutely set their faces against freedom. Men have fought for freedom, have talked freedom, and have worshiped freedom, and then have destroyed all hope of the same by their refusal to "know the truth". Freedom can only come to men when accompanied by the Truth. Rather recently, it seems to many of us, America has desired economic freedom, has sought it through an agency always associated with lies, infamy and death. The record of the past, written in the hearts of men and women, over the graves of little children, gives the lie to the statements of those who hope for prosperity through association with evil. Had the "truth" prevailed, we might have hoped for economic freedom but now we may anticipate the slavery of the past.

There is great confusion in the hearts and minds of many people relative to the nature of this "Personal Liberty" for which our fathers fought. Personal liberty has nothing to do with "License to do wrong". To do what you may desire to do, has nothing in common with the principles for which our fathers fought at Lexington and died at Bunker Hill. He who insists that America as the "Land of the Free" gives to all men the right to sell to his neighbor that which will damn his soul and ruin his life, simply indicates either his abysmal ignorance or his wicked deceit. Our fathers fought that the privilege of reaching up toward truth and walking in its pathway might be bequeathed to their children. Reaching up toward the Truth of God is personal liberty, while reaching downward toward hell is personal license. The Truth will make one free, error will damn his soul; and many of us are seriously confused in recognizing the distinction between the two.

Men in the past desired that they might have the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. They desired the right of discussions on questions in which the quest of Truth was a matter in evidence. They wished to have their children granted these same privileges in matters of similar nature. For these privileges they braved the sea, the wilderness and the scourge of an unknown land. These efforts toward knowing God better were what made our forefathers the mighty men they were. Their many struggles through untold misery and misfortune were all made in the name of "personal liberty." What a far cry from the Puritan Fathers in their patient search for a land where they might live in peace, security and Christian relationships, to the land today where personal license prevails. One instance will suffice. "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him, and maketh him drunken also, that thou mayest look upon their nakedness" Habukkuk 2:15.

With this inspired Word of God upon our tables and in all of our churches we have determinedly set our faces to allow the imps of hell to traffic in our children to "bring back prosperity". We are placing the cup to our neighbor's lips and to the extent that he repeats the gesture will our coffers be filled. We, through our government, encourage the use of the "bottle" and thus increase our revenue. The "TRUTH" insists that "Woe" follows this procedure, but in our failure to reach out to the Truth, the "Blind will lead the blind" until the whole country will wallow in the ditch. Valley Forge was not for this! Lexington Commons was not for the debauchery of youth and the despoiling of women! Where ignorance and sin abound, discussion of the past has but little place. Thousands of men and women living today, know as much about the foundation of our country and its early hopes and aspirations as a hog knows about astronomy. And while a hog at times, wallowing in its mire, may have a faint desire to rise above his present surroundings; these people of today have no such desire. They not only relish their present unholy relationships but are willing that their children's blood and their own perspiration shall be added to the "mire."

Let us visualize for a few moments a land where personal liberty prevails. Every agency and every individual is earnestly striving to increase our knowledge of, and our respect for, the TRUTH. We search through the archives of the past and count the experiences of men today. We

FREEDOM

By Mrs. Brigadier Arnold

"If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—John 8:36.

If every man were free from sin and love filled every breast,

All war and turmoil soon would cease, the world would be at rest.

If every man were free in Christ he would be free indeed;

This freedom, peace and love Divine for all mankind we plead,

For this the world's great need.

If every heart were pure and true no man would be a slave;

In loving service each for all the flag of truce would wave.

If every heart were good and clean, would truth and right prevail,

And "Peace, be still" be spoken, for no foe would then assail,

And love can never fail.

Were every soul a righteous soul, according to God's will,

Who gave His Son a sacrifice this mission to fulfill, Then nations would be brothers all, each seek the other's good.

And over every flag would wave the flag of brotherhood;

For thus He shed His Blood.

If every man were but a man as God created him, Who filled his cup with pleasures sweet right to the very brim,

This world would be an Eden then, a garden filled with flowers—

No weeds, nor thorns, nor thistles here to spoil our happy hours,

But just sweet-scented bowers.

If every man were but a man—pure, true and brave and strong,

With lofty air and heart of gold that would not stoop to wrong;

If love Divine would take the place of murderous hate and greed,

And every man were free in Christ, 'twere Paradise indeed—

And thus the world's great need.

discount wrong and treasure right. If some act of law or privilege of man has brought sin and suffering, that act or privilege is forever branded with the "mark of Cain." Men are daily reaching out toward God. With one hand we are pushing hell away from ourselves and our children and with the other hand we are reaching out toward God. Homes have no fear and governments are not reaching out for material prosperity but rather for soul richness, remembering that God has promised to bless in house and field those who remember him. There is but one agency today that is attempting to bring about "Personal Liberty" and that agency was instituted by the Lord himself. If the Church rises in her strength and takes advantage of her God given opportunities, there will be a new birth of personal liberty such as the world has never known. If she sleeps like Samson with her head upon the lap of Delilah, she will rise with her power gone and her glory lying in the brothels of sin.

This is the time when America looks about her that she might glory in her greatness. The season of the year is upon us when we shoot firecrackers and make speeches about the glorious land of LIBERTY. God gave us America. It was founded upon the Book. Our early fathers not only went to the little white church around the corner before they assumed the responsibilities of government but they placed the BOOK upon the conference table and guided their deliberation by its councils. Every speech relative to government building rings with Bible quotations, and the tenets of solidarity found in its erection are all from the BOOK. A government so builded and so established will undoubtedly survive.

As we sit in our homes today seriously considering the future and wondering what it holds in store for us and our children, may we look not so much on what is happening today but rather on how our government was built and what has gone into its structure. When a storm comes to our homes and we are in bed with our children, we have sweet satisfaction and deep content if we know that the house that gives us and our children shelter was well builded. If we have observed its massive structure and know of its secure foundation, we may go from bed to bed and calm the fright and still the beating pulse with words of encouragement. So today, while storms are beating upon America and greater winds are rising, we may have sturdy faith in America's future only when we remember its sure foundation and its dependable timbers. If we spend much time this season in the glorification of present conditions and surroundings we will be but displaying our ignorance or our insincerity. If we recognize the nature of the storm and its source, it will help us to combat its influences.

But God still lives! He still cares for his people! America was built upon a Rock and that Rock will not fall. We have been told of the house that fell because it was builded upon sand. Our house, we hope, was built upon a Rock and since the Rock cannot fall or disappear the little structures we erect will surely stand. May we intelligently observe our National holiday, not with the false hopes and silly intentions of those who know not God, but rather with a firm hope in the eternal goodness of God to those that know him and observe his precepts. So may we "press forward toward the mark!"

THE GAMBLING MANIA

Many Canadians would read with gratification the news contained in the papers recently that the House of Commons had killed the Sweepstakes Bill. This measure sought to legalize lotteries and sweepstakes for the benefit of hospitals such as is being done in Ireland. The publicity that the Irish sweepstakes have received and the huge amounts that have been won by a few individuals have been largely responsible for the introduction of the Bill in the Canadian House. It is passing strange how multitudes of people are dazzled by the thought of "easy money", and are willing to gamble with the very necessities of life if haply they might obtain a fortune without working for it. No one can pretend that gambling is a good thing for an individual or a nation.

The penitentiaries are filled with those who thought they could secure a fortune by the hazards of chance. One of the most regrettable and terrible features of the life in England today is this craze for gambling. Like an evil cancer it has eaten into the life of the people until multitudes of adults and tens of thousands of the children and young people of the country are obsessed with the craze. The mania finds expression in a multitude of forms, but all have the same end in view namely, to avoid hard work and to reap a fortune. We are very glad indeed that the good sense of the legislators in the Dominion House of Commons has prevailed, and that this country is not to be subjected to an orgy of legalized gambling. Every Christian we believe will share this view.—The Evangelical Christian.

PACIFISTS LEAD IN STUDENT POLL

Nearly 39 per cent of the 21,725 students who have thus far voted in the nation-wide poll being conducted by the National Student Federation, the Intercollegiate Disarmament Council, and The Brown Daily Herald have signified that they would participate in no war declared by the United States, no matter what its character, it was announced on Friday of last week at the Federation headquarters in New York City. Of the number voting, 8,415 took an uncompromising pacifist stand, 6,089 said they would fight in a war of any character involving the United States, and 7,221 declared they would bear arms only if this country were invaded. The sixty-five institutions that have sent in their final votes are located in twenty-seven states and include eight state colleges, nineteen universities, and thirteen women's colleges.—Zion's Herald.

night dinner" at the church. We are also in receipt of the "Sixty-sixth Annual Commencement" program of Drew University of Madison, New Jersey, dated June 6, 1933, and among the candidates for degrees we find the following name and scholastic record: "Robert Fowler Porte, South Bend, Indiana, A. B., Ashland College, 1914; B. D., Drake University, 1921; Th. M., Princeton Theological Seminary, 1929; M. A., Drew University, 1931, Major Field, Systematic Theology and Philosophy of Religion. Dissertation: "The Pietistic Tradition in the Brethren Church." We join with his church and neighboring ministers in felicitating and congratulating Brother Porte on reaching this high degree in preparation for life's work and for service to the church. Aside from being pastor of the South Bend First church, Dr. Porte will be remembered as Vice Moderator of the General Conference.

The Ohio Conference was held at Dayton last week and we shall soon receive a detailed report from the conference secretary, Brother L. V. King, but we wish to remark that the Dayton church proved herself a wonderful host. The sun was just about hot enough to fry bacon and eggs even for breakfast during the three days of our stay, but within the massive walls of that great church and with the aid of a flock of electric fans the large delegation was kept fairly comfortable and followed through its splendid program faithfully and accomplished its work in spite of the heat. One of the outstanding results of the conference was the launching of a one-year program of activity aimed at vitalizing church loyalties and intensifying evangelism. Ohio churches seem to believe in the value of setting goals and making programs to guide and to challenge their activity. They just brought to a close at this conference a four-year "Program of Progress" calculated to stir the churches to greater efforts in Bible Study, in Evangelism, in the Promotion of Brethren Ideals and Interests and in Stewardship. Now they have determined to stimulate one another to greater denominational loyalty and to more aggressive evangelistic effort. A committee constituted of the Board of Evangelists has been designated to promote the program and the Ohio churches will likely hear a great deal from them and be challenged to greater activity by them.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humberd

Study Number Twenty-Three

The Open Book

The angel of chapter ten placed his feet upon the land and sea and took possession of the earth. He held his hand to heaven and announced that there would be time (or delay) no longer. He then told John to take the book, "and eat it up—and I took the little book and ate it up and it was in my mouth sweet as honey, and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter" (Ch. 10:10).

Eating the Word of God

John is told to eat the book. That is, read it, study it, digest it and receive strength to prophesy. When we eat food for our physical body, we digest it and receive strength. God made the corn, the wheat and the beans. He also made our stomach and it is our business to put the food into our stomach so we can receive strength for our physical body.

It is thus with our spiritual life. God made our spiritual nature. He also inspired the Bible for its nurture and growth. It is our business to get his Word into our minds so our spiritual nature can receive strength and grow. There are parts of the Bible that are simple and easily digested. As a new born babe cries for milk so a newly born-again person should "desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby" (1 Pet. 2:2). The Bible also contains "strong meat" for the more mature Christian (Heb. 5:13, 14).

Sweet and Bitter Food

It is thus here with John. He is to prophesy again (Rev. 10:11) and the contents of this book will give the needed strength. Ezekiel was shown a roll "and there was written therein lamentations, and mournings and woe" (Ezek. 2:10). He was commanded to "eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel" (Ezek. 3:1). When Ezekiel had eaten the roll "it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness".

It is thus with John. The book "was in my mouth sweet as honey; and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter" (Rev. 10:10). That is, when John first ate or glanced over the book and saw the glorious consummation of things, it filled his heart with joy; it was sweet to his meditation. But after he had more thoroughly digested and studied the matter and had seen the terrible sufferings through which his people must pass before their triumph, his heart was made sad; his belly was made bitter.

The Book For Our Profit

In Revelation 1:3 there is a promise of a special blessing for the reader of the book of Revelation. It is the revelation or unveiling of Jesus Christ. The gospels reveal the humiliation of our Lord—his death, resurrection and ascension, but the earth still goes on under the blight of sin. Has his death been for naught? No, he "gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time" (1 Tim. 2:6) and the book of Revelation shows the "due time" when he brings into effect his work on the cross.

The Bible is the history of the redemption of the human race upon this earth. Thus the whole of Scripture has to do with the securing of the rights, titles and warrants of redemption and, since this book is the title-deed to our redemption, everything is bound up in this book which is now open in the "angel's" hand. Well could John have wept had no one been found who was able to open that book (Rev. 5:4). The Lamb prevailed to loose the seals and all he has done to clear the title of any difficulties is for the benefit of us, his people, that we may take it from his hand, feed upon it and make it the subject of our hopes, prayers and meditations.

Chapter Eleven

Great things have been happening under the seals and first six trumpets. The seventh angel is to sound and bring the end of Satan's rule. The seventh trumpet will not merely be an event but "in the days of the voice of the seventh angel" (Ch. 10:7) seems to refer to a prolonged period, probably the latter three and one-half years of Daniel's seventieth week (Dan. 9:27).

Contents of Following Chapters

The next few chapters do not carry on in matter of time but give different viewpoints of the Great Tribulation. Chapter eleven shows us the mercy of God in giving everyone an opportunity to repent, even though he has to use supernatural power to keep his two witnesses alive (Rev. 11:5). Chapter twelve shows us what is happening among the Jews during this same period of twelve hundred sixty days, or three years and one-half. Chapter thirteen shows us the political side of human affairs. Chapter seventeen gives us light on the religious conditions, while chapter eighteen reveals the commercial life of that time.

Since the Battle of Armageddon is to be the crisis of Satanic rule, we can expect to find many references to this terrible event in different chapters.

The Battle of Ezekiel Thirty-eight

Some think that the battle of Armageddon will be a battle between two great armies of mankind such as Ezekiel chapters 38 and 39 describe. It is true that Russia and Germany will look upon the unbounded wealth of Palestine and the Dead Sea and will think an evil thought and go to get spoil. This will bring down the wrath of Tarshish (England,—and England now has the protection of Palestine) and the "young lions thereof" (Ezek. 38:13) (England's "young lions" are no doubt Canada, the United States, etc.) This will be a terrible time and Russia will fall by the millions. Israel will not need to cut down trees for firewood for seven years, because of the abundance of wagon spokes and other war material (Ezek. 39:9) and it will take seven months to bury them (Vs. 12).

The Battle of Armageddon

Awful as this battle is, it is not the Battle of Armageddon. The Battle of Armageddon is blaspheming humanity actually arrayed against the Lord Jesus Christ himself. They are consciously determined to drive the power of God off the earth. They gather "to make war against him that sat upon the horse" (Rev. 19:1-9) and they well know who sits astride that white charger.

If such a thing is too terrible for the reader to grasp, we need only to remind ourselves that Russia, today, is striving for this very thing and that same spirit will soon permeate the whole world.

Communist Sunday Schools

Through the Pocket Testament League of Columbus, Ohio we hear of the fearful blasphemies of Communism. One of their activities is in the matter of forming Communist Sunday schools over the land. We are told that there are seventy-seven of these schools within a radius of fifty miles of Boston, Massachusetts.

After the class period, the children march into the assembly room where the superintendent asks such questions as the following:

Supt.—"Is it true that Jesus is the LIGHT of the world?"

Children—"No, Jesus is the BLIGHT of the world."

Fearful Blasphemy

The children then sing the Red Doxology:

"Blame God from whom all cyclones blow.

Blame him when rivers overflow;

Blame him who whirls down church and steeple,

Who sinks the ship and drowns the people."

The first lines of the closing song are:

"Onward Christian soldiers, rip, and tear and smite.

Let the gentle Jesus bless your dynamite."

Let us remind ourselves that Communism has taken it upon themselves to drive God out of Russia and are now feverishly laboring to bring this same spirit upon mankind everywhere. Sad as it may seem, Scripture reveals that just such a spirit will characterize the closing months of this age.

A Great Question

ALL nations are to gather in this battle and they are to fight AGAINST Jerusalem (Zech. 14:2 and Joel 3:2). For a long time I was puzzled. What can possibly bring ALL nations against such a small city as Jerusalem when a few aeroplanes and some poison gas would quickly end its existence? I think we get our clue in Revelation 11:1, 2.

Our Constitution, the Culmination of Centuries

By Miss Lucylle Goldsmith, of Los Angeles, First Prize Winner in the National Oratorical Contest for High School Students, Held in Washington, D. C., May 21, 1932

Scientists say that coal is the sunshine that was stored up millions of years ago. Today people use this same coal to keep the warmth of life in them. Our Constitution is the stored-up sunshine of centuries of struggle for the prerogative of liberty in all its forms, and that work is today the life itself of the nation of the United States of America.

Our Constitution was not the product of 1787, nor the immediate creation of those who gave it form and substance at the Constitutional Convention. The Constitution was never the result of a single stroke of genius, it had its roots far back in the past. The framers of this document were much too wise to draw on their imagination, or to base the government of a nation on theory. Had these men attempted to create a chimerical structure, their work would have been valueless. Its guaranties bear the brand of centuries for their justification and existence. The brilliance of its framers was shown chiefly in the fact that they disturbed as little as possible the existing institutions, which were the growth of the ages and which were part of their race inheritance. The colonists fought to retain, not to destroy, their rights under the British constitution. The Americans of 1776 were British, and in framing their governmental plan they simply used the law and charter that had always been their own.

There are buildings that soar to the skies, others remain close to the ground. But none can mount high unless its foundations are entrenched deeply, firmly, into the ground. They can ascend just so far as their foundations allow. Those founders of our government knew that and, mighty builders that they were, when they erected that invincible, that ever-growing building, the United States of America, they made a foundation for it that was enduring, fundamental; that would last as long as the edifice for which it was its base, would suffice, no matter how the building expanded, how high it rose.

For this foundation, its builders gleaned facts from all history, from the motherland and from the State constitutions. The State constitutions, in turn, had been derived from the early trading charters, such as that of the East India Company.

Our idea of a Senate we got from the Romans. From the Hebrew Sanhedrin of Biblical times. That was one of the first bricks in its foundation. From England these draftsmen borrowed more material. Using the lessons taught by, and the ideals of, the Magna Charta, the petition of right, the habeas corpus, the Bill of Rights, and many others, they glued the stones comprising the foundation yet more strongly together, entrenched it even more deeply into the soil of personal liberty. The idea of a law of fundamental as to limit even the power of the ruler, runs far back into the story of early England.

Bricks and mortar of more recent origin were furnished from the original State constitutions. From Maryland was brought the idea of a small Senate with a long term of service, and the idea of the electoral college. From the constitution of New York comes the periodic readjustment of the representation after the census, and the Vice-President's duty to preside over the Senate, and to vote only in case of a tie. The constitution of Massachusetts contributed the duties of the two houses with respect to impeachments and the power of the Executive veto. Some provisions, important in the composition of this puissant foundation, such as the judiciary system, the short term of the Lower House, and the single executive, were common to nearly all the States.

The first of the materials that made up the foundation of the United States of America, that was molded from American soil and dried under the sun that shines on America, was the Mayflower compact in 1619, when a handful of men and women banded together in a heroic and fruitful attempt to ally themselves against the unknown. That small band established themselves as firmly, as peaceably as possible, in this new land, but a quarter of a century later they were forced to form the New England confederation, uniting against the brutal savagery and warfare of King Philip and his red warriors. In the year 1754 Benjamin Franklin authored the Albany plan, which was the first time in the history that all of the English colonists worked together in an organized union against its common foe. Little more than a decade later occurred the Stamp Act, an act so tyrannical and unjust as never before had been duplicated in the history of the New World. The Committees of Correspondence were organized in 1770. The first Continental Congress was held five years later. In the immortal year of the signing of the Declaration of Independence occurred the second Continental Congress. At the close of the Revolutionary War in 1781, a trial government under the Articles of Confederation began. All these events were but layers of bricks in the building of the Constitution culminating in the three Constitutional Conventions beginning in 1785 and ending at Philadelphia in 1787 when the document that was to make a nation was conceived.

A glorious foundation for a glorious structure was built! The people, jubilant, exclaimed, "The like of this has never been seen before!" They were not altogether wrong, but they were not correct. While it was true that a foundation as fitting for an institution like the United States of America had never been seen before, that no other base of a people's government before this had ever held up a structure, as our Constitution did, of a Federal government that was without precedent in the history of the world, still the bricks that made this foundation, the mortar that held it together, were precious materials garnered from all over the world, from every age! They were not made for the first time that memorable year. Each brick in the foundation was taken from other foundations of institutions guaranteeing liberty and happiness to those people.

What were the rights that our Constitution sought to safeguard? What were the weapons that it provided to insure our people against despots, tyrants, and autocrats? What were the rights that our Constitution declared to be inalienable, and stripped legislatures and courts for generations afterward of the power to repeal or modify? Were they merely the problems of a people that lived in the twilight of the eighteenth century, or were these problems that have always existed from the dawn of history? The provisions in our Constitution that guarantee to every citizen a right to a trial by jury, the right to freedom of assembly, for petition of grievances, for the right of religious liberty, of freedom of expression, are guaranties that are found in other documents long before the Constitutional Convention was conceived. The provisions in our Constitution that divide our government into the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches, each acting as a check upon the other, which guarantees against the abuses of power in any one department of the government, were not the inventions or creations of the framers of our Constitution, but go clear back to the Magna Charta in 1215, back to the codes of European states to the ancient days of Rome, and still farther removed to the first organized governments.

The rights that our Constitution declared to be inalienable were rights for which Copernicus and Bruno were burned at the stake; rights for which the champions of liberty of every age fought and sought and vindicated. And hence the framers of our Constitution said that no legislature or court of law or police officer should ever take the right of religious liberty or freedom of speech, trial by jury, away from our citizens.

Never before had any people wrought so great a political revolution without bloodshed. From a loosely bound confederacy that lacked the power of governing, the people, deliberately, thoughtfully, without drawing a sword, with no pressure from without, banded together and founded a nation and based it on a firm and abiding foundation. That Constitution, drawn up in 1787 by fifty-five delegates, signed by thirty-nine, has been in force for almost a century and a half; and as we look back on that period of time we see that that document has not diminished in power; has not grown out of date. Dynasties, kingdoms, empires, have fallen and crumbled to pieces. The United States is growing ever more powerful, rising toward the skies, secure in the foundation that is the life of our nation—the Constitution!—The Washington (D. C.) Star, May 22, 1932.

Lesson Text: Numbers 13; Joshua 14; Golden Text: Psalm 40:4

Caleb Exploring Canaan. Numbers 13: 17-21

For people who love adventure we can not imagine a more interesting narrative than this. In these modern days men, and sometimes women, strike out into the great forests to demonstrate the possibility of living from nature alone, and to satisfy a personal desire. We have an idea that Caleb and his companions secured their food from the land as they went through it. They found it good and as it had been promised to Abraham, but with the exception of Caleb and Joshua they were afraid. They had an inferiority complex, and this caused them to distrust God.

TUESDAY

Caleb's Faith and Courage. Numbers 14:1-10

It is easy to appear to be courageous when no danger is in sight, but to be courageous in the presence of danger and before a panic-stricken mob is a different matter. Upon the unfavorable report of Caleb's companions, practically the entire group of the children of Israel became panic stricken, and it required all the persuasive power of both Caleb and Joshua, aided by the "glory of Jehovah" appearing among them to prevent the stoning of the two brave spies.

WEDNESDAY

God's Promise to Caleb. Deuteronomy 1:26-36

God always rewards the faithful, and in the passage of Scripture for today's study we have the account of God's full recognition of the faithfulness of his servant, your God who goeth before you, he will fight for you, according to all that he did for you in Egypt before your eyes."

God's further promise to Caleb was that to him should be given the land that he had trodden upon, because he had wholly followed Jehovah.

THURSDAY

God's Promise Fulfilled. Joshua 14:6-15

Sometimes men lose faith in God's promises because their fulfillment seems long delayed. Not so with Caleb, for we find him, after forty-five years had passed, coming to Joshua and asking that he might now take possession of the land for himself and his children that God had promised him many years before because he had "wholly followed Jehovah." Then Joshua blessed him and in fulfillment of the promise gave him Hebron for an inheritance.

FRIDAY

Confidence in Jehovah. Psalm 27:1-14

This Psalm is called a psalm of fearless trust in God. If one has trust in God, is there any reason why it should not be fearless? The psalmist mentions many evil things that might befall him, or that might befall any one else in the common experiences of life, and should any or all these evils befall him he says "Even then I will be confident." What a wonderful support such a confidence proves to be.

SATURDAY

Some Heroes of the Faith. Hebrews 11:17-30

The eleventh chapter of Hebrews has always been a fascinating chapter to the writer of these notes, as it has been to others.

A few years ago the late Senator A. J. Beveridge, in an address before a large Y. M. C. A. audience, said he would not want to listen to a preacher who could not repeat this chapter from memory. Well, here is one preacher he would not want to listen to then, for however much he may appreciate this chapter, this preacher can not repeat it from memory; but it can be read over and over to any one's profit.

SUNDAY

Jehovah Our Keeper. Psalm 121

Sometimes a "keeper" is looked upon as a "jailer;" but not so in the mind of the Psalmist. He does not regard his Jehovah as one interested in keeping him imprisoned, either in mind or body; but as one who preserves and protects him in every way.

We do not believe Jehovah imprisons the mind any more than he does the body; but rather that he will preserve it in all its powers, if it is consecrated to high and holy purposes. However, greatest of all, is the promise that "He will keep thy soul."

Vacations and Slumps

By Rev. L. E. Lindower

The season for vacations is here. But delightful and desirable as this season may be, it always includes that which is not so desirable. Vacation season is always married to a slump in attendance. They always stick together. They seem to be ONE. The object of this article is to try to divorce the vacation season from slumps in attendance. This is one divorce case that the preacher seems to be expected to handle. And yet, who has ever succeeded in divorcing them? It is presumption, indeed, for the present writer to hope to give the solution to the problem.

How shall we keep our attendance through the vacation months? That has been a question which the writer has been seeking to answer, but so far without avail. The problem goes very deep, and we must not seek on the surface for its answer.

It is in the hearts of Christians that we will ultimately find the answer to the problems of attendance during vacations. If we could somehow instill the right desires into the hearts of our members we would never have an attendance problem. Folks do go away on vacations, and possibly they should, but if they were activated by the right desires they would never miss church or Christian Endeavor services just because they were away from home. If everybody attended Christian Endeavor and church services wherever they went on their vacations, we would not miss them so much while they were away, because there would always be others spending their vacation in our vicinity who would attend our services.

The whole problem of Christian life and service depends on the right love in the heart. The Scripture says, "Love not the world, neither the things in the world" (1 John 2:15). The Christian may properly take a vacation when he takes it for clean recreation and rest from his work, but he never needs a vacation from the love of God, which should activate his whole being. In fact he needs God's love in his heart more during his vacation than at any other time, because it is then that the temptations of the world are strongest.

If we will, therefore, prepare for vacations during the winter months, by instilling the Word of God and God's abiding love in the hearts of his children, they will be prepared for vacation time. Christianity is not just a matter of feeling which a good many receive during their winter revivals, but which dies out with the call of outside recreation in the spring, to the exclusion of the Lord's services. As someone has said, "There are too many who wear out the knees of their breeches in the winter time repenting of their sins, and their seats in the summer time, backsliding."

There are one or two suggestions which may help to retain interest in attendance during the summer months. The usual type of program may get monotonous, as it does many times, for young people. For instance, those who use the usual method of selecting a leader and having that leader hand out topics to others to present during the program, may find them becoming dull and uninteresting. To have a special speaker often in the services during the summer months may bring variety and relieve monotony. Special speakers are not usually hard to obtain. Most communities have folks who could give interesting and helpful talks along their own line of interest or work. Care must be taken in the speakers chosen and the topics presented. Remember, this is CHRISTIAN Endeavor!

Another suggestion is, why not utilize the call of the out-doors for a good many C. E. meetings in the summer time? There are great lessons to be learned about God from the out-of-doors, and why not have these meetings outside? Special times should be selected which would not conflict or keep some away from the church services. In every community there is some spot of special interest or beauty outside, which would make a good meeting place if the right time can be found.

Along with these few experimental suggestions, the important thing to remember is:—CAREFUL PLANNING BY THE RIGHT KIND OF LEADERS. In fact, if we should merely say the right kind of leaders, that would be enough. Without the right kind of leadership the meetings cannot be helpful and inspire new interest in attendance. Without the right leadership we might forget that no matter where a meeting is held or what kind it is, the Christian Endeavor slogan remains the same—FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH. Within these bounds originality and variety may help to retain the attendance throughout vacation time, and divorce slumps from vacations.

The Acts of the Apostles Continue

By Karl E. Aurell

Secretary of the Japan Agency of the American Bible Society

(The following letter was recently received in the American Bible Society office in Tokyo, Japan, from a young Japanese who was saved from suicide by reading a pocket copy of the Acts of the Apostles given to him by a fellow-Japanese traveller.)

* * *

I trust the recent extremely cold weather has not impaired your well-being. In making bold to write to you, unknown yet longed for teacher, allow me to say immediately that I am a believer who owes his present physical existence to you!

I shall never forget a year ago today, when I arrived at the conclusion, as the result of a long period of a nervous malady, that my condition was hopeless. There was absolutely no help for me. I had lost heart and in a completely dejected state of mind, I drifted to the station and almost before I was aware of it, found myself with a ticket on a train bound for Tokyo. Many times I tried to jump from that train as it sped along, but somehow, reflecting upon the terribleness of such an attempt, I failed to carry it out. That the fact of fear should prevent me that again I regarded as cowardly, and I said to myself: "Well, I will take poison." But I decided that could be done after arrival at a hotel in Tokyo.

Now, there were still two or three hours to spend in that coach before arrival at Tokyo, and presently the mistress of mind again got the best of me and I decided once more to fling myself from that train. A woman sitting beside me, noticing there was something the matter, asked if I was suffering. I answered: "No, I am all right." But she continued to talk most kindly to me and I was impressed that she realized I was in a desperate condition. That also annoyed me extremely much and in order to avoid hearing more from her I got up and went to the other end of the car. When the train arrived at Yokohama that lady came by and with a few comforting words bid me farewell. It was so unusual and it gripped me deeply and I thanked her.

When I arrived at the Tokyo station, it occurred to me that I had better run out and see an elder sister in a suburb of the city before I died, and so engaged a taxi. As the taxi was fast taking me to my destination, suddenly a feeling of terrible indisposition toward seeing her overpowered me and I requested the driver to take me to a hotel. I would make that the place of my death. Having taken a bath I wrote a farewell note. In the meantime I had asked a servant to buy a certain kind of sleeping powder for me. By this time it was 11:00 A. M., and I thought it would seem strange to the people around to see me go to bed, and stepped aside to take out a cigarette package from my overcoat. As I stuck the hand into the pocket, I got hold of a little book and found it was the Acts of the Apostles with a note on it written with a pen in a woman's handwriting: "Read this and go through life with hope in your heart." Surprised, I thought, "Well, did you ever! That woman on the train must have made me a present of it," and I fell to reading. I read the book with intense

Progress on the Bellevue Station in Africa

Bellevue, Africa.
April 30, 1933.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

It has been almost seven years since the Bellevue Station was opened and how the Lord has blessed in that time! We shall try to recount to you some of the blessings of the Lord throughout the past year.

The Sunday School attendance for the year has averaged 433 a Sunday. The native workers care for most of the classes. Of course they have to be taught before they can teach others therefore Mr. Sheldon has a class for them during the week when he gives them the lesson. We have gone through the Old Testament, just giving the high spots of course. Now we are starting on the New Testament.

During the year two chapels have been built by the native Christians, and another is under construction. A fourth is being built by funds provided by one of the missionaries. Native workers care for them and this very work is making many stronger. The average attendance, at the chapels for the year has been 115 per Sunday. A smaller number, mostly enquirers come daily for teaching.

Miss Mabel Crawford joined our missionary staff in November. Almost from the beginning of the work here the children and older ones as well, have prayed for a school and now their prayer is answered. Permission has already been granted for the opening and Miss Crawford has already started some classes. Others will be started as soon as everything is ready.

Throughout the year the Medical department has continued to minister to the sick. Many have been helped through this work. Boubou, one of the native evangelists, preaches the Gospel to the patients who come day after day.

The Gospel of Mark has been translated into the vernacular. Now we are busy correcting it and getting it ready for the printers. It will mean so much to the growth of the Christians when they have access to the Word.

Bible reading classes were started last September, and now we have about 50 natives who are beginning to read the Gospel of Mark in their own language. They are very much enthused because of this, for very few can read in this land, and they are the first ones in their own language.

Some have turned from heathen darkness and taken the Lord Jesus. There have been 49 additions by baptism. About 75 are in the enquirers' class. The total communicant membership is now 209. Death has removed some from us. Throughout the year there have been seven Christian funerals conducted.

The building work continues although funds do not permit it to be carried on as ardently as before. Recently the foundation for the new church was begun. We are almost crowded out of our present small building and besides, the white ants have just about devoured it. We will be so thankful for a new church.

There are about 100 tithers on our list now. During the year they have given 1645 francs ($65.00). At Christmas time the Christians brought a gift of their grain harvested just at that time. It was sold and the proceeds used to support the native workers at the chapels.

Easter Sunday we had a special program at the church. The 16th chapter of Mark was read by one of the native evangelists who this time last year was praying that he might have an opportunity to learn to read. Others sang songs and gave Bible verses. It was all very impressive. How we do long that they realize that Christ is living and risen. It will put life into them when they do. It is a wonderful privilege to be able to proclaim Him here in a heathen land where so many worship trees and stones. How glad we are that we can point them to the Creator of all.

In all we see a gradual growth in these young Christians and we covet your prayers that they might be strengthened, for heathenism is strong and ever present.

In His Service,

interest and it must have taken me more than forty minutes to finish it. The result was the beginning of a change of outlook on life. It is impossible to explain how it came about but the reading of the Acts had taken away the flagrant desire to die, and in reflecting upon the immediate past I was awfully ashamed of my unmanliness and weakness, and immediately returned to my home city.

After that without any particular restorative I regained physical health and strength and was soon able to take up my position and, with pleasure, do my work. I have no idea who that woman was who spoke to me on the train that night but I regard the incident as absolutely of the Lord Jesus, and I am constantly praising God for it. I am now serving in a hospital as a physician in charge of the department for children's diseases, and I am happy to say I enjoy my work very much, continually endeavoring to improve myself in every respect. Every day is a day of thanksgiving! I have already decided that when I call my friends together to celebrate Christmas we shall, at the same time, celebrate the first anniversary of my restoration of life.

I hope to run up to Tokyo some day to express my gratitude to you, who is the publisher of the Scriptures, because that is why I am a saved man today. Naturally, I should like to have you come and join us but as my rural town is far from Tokyo I cannot, for a moment, expect to be favored with your presence. Hoping you may always enjoy health, and praying God's signal blessing upon you and all co-laborers.

Miss Bame possesses a soprano voice of unusual sweetness and clearness. She is well known in the city as a soloist. The committee feels fortunate in securing her services.

Miss Hurdle will spend some time at her home in western Tennessee after which she expects to complete her degree requirements in music. Miss Hurdle performed a fine service here and the College and her many friends will miss her.

THE REVIVAL AT CONEMAUGH, PENNSYLVANIA

Upon closing our meeting at Roanoke, Virginia, we came direct to Conemaugh for our next campaign. This makes the second meeting in this church, having held a meeting here in March, 1932. In a real sense it was a pleasant anticipation. Last year we enjoyed a very fine meeting with these folks, but this year it seemed that in spite of all we could pray for or do, we could not get the real revival fires burning as they must burn if a real turning to God will be had. The pastor had done his part faithfully and capably as is characteristic of him. Better preparation could hardly be made. Three months of cottage prayer-meetings, especially if they are well attended, should have some effect upon a community. However, the Lord may have accomplished a great deal more than was apparent to us. We humans are so prone to look at outward indications only that we do not always know what God is working in the hearts of many. It is the Lord's work, and not ours, so we leave it all with him feeling that in some way his will has been accomplished.

A happier three weeks were never spent in fellowship than with Brother Schaffer and his wife. It is a real privilege to be with them and work together. God is using this man to work a great work in Conemaugh church and community. He has led this church into the leading place among the churches of the town. He is respected by all both inside and outside of the church. In a few more years under his leadership there will be in Conemaugh one of the strongest Brethren Churches, or I miss my judgment.

The hospitality of these people is refreshing indeed. God bless them. We greatly enjoyed the fellowship of many homes.

With the church folks solidly back of their pastor the Conemaugh church has a great future before it until the Lord returns.

EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN AT CONEMAUGH, PENNSYLVANIA

June eleventh closed a three weeks' effort of special evangelism in the First Brethren church of Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, with Evangelist R. Paul Miller.

As a direct result of the meeting 25 accepted the call, six for the first time, others in a rededication of themselves to serve their Lord with a more consecrated life. It was a great joy to see not only the unsaved take their stand with the Lord Jesus to unite families into a complete Christian home but also to witness others line up with "A Whole Gospel Church."

Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio. June 25, 1933.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

It will be of interest to the readers of this paper to know that while the enrollment in the summer school is less by about 75 students than last year, yet we regard it as satisfactory, when one considers the conditions. In line with this fact we had to reduce the number of courses offered and also the number of teachers. While this is not entirely satisfactory, yet it helped to bring the situation in hand. The enrollment is now 274.

Many of the teachers went to Dayton to attend the Ohio district conference. Dean E. G. Mason was elected member of the College board of trustees.

Reports from the quartette now among the churches are good. It is a genuine pleasure to record the fact that they are uniformly cordially received. It is hoped that they may accomplish their mission, viz., to interest the churches in the College.

It will also be of interest to know that the Prudential committee recently engaged Miss Dorcas Bame to teach voice and public school music, a place that had been made vacant by the resignation of Miss Norma Hurdle, who had been with the school for the past four years.

Miss Bame, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. A. Bame, is a graduate of Ashland both in the arts and music, also of Chicago Musical College and has spent the past year in the Cleveland Institute of Music. Also she tions have been attending our Sunday school and church for the past few years. It was not a case of proselyting but a desire to be members of a church that practices rather than explains away the Scriptures. Although the results are not what we had anticipated, yet we believe that the messages brought by Evangelist Miller stirred up a deeper meaning of the word "Christian."

Our growth the past few years has not been sensational but it has been steady. The average growth per year for the past three years has been a bit more than 33. Our field of service although containing a large percent of Catholics offers great promise for the future of the Conemaugh First Brethren.

At present we are looking forward with high hopes, financially. The Railroad and Bethlehem Mills are working better now than they have for the past two years. The mills especially, are getting ready for a great boom but no one seems to know where it is coming from. With this chaotic international situation before us and God's Word with us, it is not a very great problem to many. Even so come, Lord Jesus!

We wish to thank all who remembered us in prayer during our campaign. May the Lord richly bless you.

W. H. SCHAFFER, Pastor.

HONOR PASTOR GRANTED DEGREE

Rev. Mr. Porte Greeted by Congregation at Church Dinner

Rev. Robert F. Porte, pastor of First Brethren church upon whom was conferred the degree, doctor of theology, at Drew University, Madison, New Jersey, on June 6, Tuesday evening received the congratulations and felicitations of his congregation and a group of visiting pastors in a family night dinner in the church.

The affair was sponsored by the Laymen's Forward movement of the church, of which C. C. Strycker is president. Rev. E. A. Duker, assistant to Rev. Mr. Porte, served as toastmaster, and about 150 persons listened to a group of addresses. Speakers were Rev. George M. Anderson, pastor of Indiana Avenue Christian church; Rev. G. L. Maus, of First Brethren church in Nappanee, Indiana; Rev. J. Clyde Fortney, of First Church of the Brethren, here; Roland Obenchain, former moderator of the church; and A. G. Carpenter, this city, Indiana trustee of Ashland College, at Ashland, Ohio, from which Rev. Mr. Porte was graduated in 1914 with a bachelor of arts degree.

Other guest pastors present were Rev. W. I. Duker, of the Brethren church of Millport, Indiana; Rev. C. D. Whitmer, of the church at Brighton, Indiana, and Rev. A. T. Wirick, of the church at Ardmore.

Rev. Mr. Porte received his master's degree from Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, in 1921 and has been studying since that time toward the degree conferred this summer. He has been pastor of the local church since the autumn of 1931.—South Bend Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Considerable time has elapsed since a report has been made of the work in Washington. It is hoped that none will take this silence to mean that the church here has not been active. But under the efficient leadership of our pastor, Rev. Kent, and Brother R. E. Donaldson, superintendent of the Sunday school, there has been an increase of activities along certain lines more especially in visitation work in an effort to increase the attendance at all the services. And attendance has been keeping up very well. The mid-week prayer meeting is well attended; the number present each week averaging about fifty. The reports given at our last business meeting from the various auxiliaries show encouraging activity and accomplishments on the part of each organization.

During the past few months a committee has been busily engaged in making plans for the completion of the church building. We are badly in need of more room. The plans are now complete but owing to conditions now prevailing in the financial world we have been prevented from starting work on the final unit of the building. At this writing we are unable to say just when work will start.

The annual report given by the secretary of the church school showed that the school had a successful year with a net increase of eight in enrollment. The month of April was the best in the history of the school for attendance with an average of 325 present each Sunday. The average for the same month last year was 250. Notwithstanding our crowded quarters, the attendance has been keeping up very well during May and June. During the year twenty-three members of the school have united with the church.

The Women's Missionary society and the Laymen's League have been holding their meetings at the church on the same evening. Commendable interest has been manifested by the members of each organization. For a number of years members of these societies have been doing personal work at the Gallinger Hospital; the League being in charge of the services there one Sunday in each month. The League has charge of the services at the Gospel Mission one night each month, Rev. Kent preaching the sermon. Some very successful meetings have been held.

Good work is being done by all three of the Christian Endeavor societies. Very interesting meetings are being held and attendance and interest is growing. On the third Sunday evening in each month the Senior Society leads the song service for the church.

Both Senior and Junior Sisterhoods of Mary and Martha are keeping up to their excellent standards. Both societies are preparing for their annual mothers and daughters meetings to be held during the week of June 18. Recently the Juniors presented a program in the church entitled, "The Spirit of Missions". The program was carefully prepared, well presented, and contained a most helpful message. This society has more than doubled its attendance at their meetings during the last quarter. We feel that the church here should be greatly encouraged by the interest being shown by these various groups of young people. Following the older societies are the "Signal Lights" with fifteen or twenty children being capably trained by Mrs. Harrison.

Last Sunday was Ashland College day. The California Quartette was with us Sunday morning and again on Monday evening, giving us two well rendered programs. Every one enjoyed their spiritual songs and their testimonies exalting the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and what he has meant in their lives. Prof. K. M. Monroe of the Ashland Seminary was with us on the same Sunday, teaching the Sunday school lesson to the combined adult and senior classes. At the close of the Sunday school one young girl confessed the Lord Jesus as her Savior, and, with several others who have already made confession, is awaiting baptism. Sunday evening Dr. Monroe delivered one of his instructive and inspiring sermons. Since the visit of these men the church here should have a better understanding of and a deeper, more vital interest in the work of Ashland Seminary and what it means in the future for the Brethren Church.

Some of the days for which the people here are planning are the Sunday school picnic in Rock Creek Park on June 24; Children's day, June 25, and the "Brethren Day" at Rocky Ridge, Maryland, July 27, where many of our people are planning an outing with Brethren from the nearby churches. The Senior C. E. society is planning to hold a meeting in the Baptist church at Winchester, Virginia, on July 9th.

The Summer Bible school will open June 26th for a three weeks' term under the direction of Miss Mabel Donaldson, an efficient trained teacher in the Washington public schools.

The Washington church cordially invites anyone that may be visiting the city to attend services with us. The Brethren Church is not following the growing custom of omitting Sunday evening services during the summer but is open at all regular worship periods. We are always glad to welcome visitors and strangers to our services.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT BIBLE CONFERENCE, JULY 21-30, 1933

A preview of the program of the twenty-third annual Bible Conference to convene in the First church of Long Beach, July 21 reveals the fact that a rich spiritual feast is in store for the brotherhood of the Southern California District.

Obtaining as their leading Bible teacher Professor Alva J. McClain who will lead the conference in a series of Bible Doctrinal subjects such as, Sanctification, Grace, Election, Calling, Repentance, Faith, and other edifying subjects as, The Tragic Error of Legalism, The Incarnation, and Some Remarkable Scientific Confirmations of the Truths of the Bible. Thus spiritual blessing of the conference is assured.

In addition to the presence of Brother McClain in this conference the California Male Quartet (students of our Theological Seminary) will have no small part on the program. The entire musical program has been put in their hands, as well as the delivery of an address on the part of each member. One evening will be devoted entirely to the young people of the District at which time the California Quartet will bring five minute messages pertaining to our college and seminary, musical numbers and an address from Brother McClain on the bearing of the college and seminary upon the future progress of the Brethren Church.

As is customary at these conferences an address is given by each active Elder of the District. Various subjects have been selected by the brethren, all of which are of vital importance to the Christian life.

Dr. Louis S. Bauman, Conference Moderator in addition to the moderator's address has been requested by the executive committee to deliver three other addresses on the following subjects, The Message of the Stars, The Jew in Prophecy and War.

Other outstanding preachers for which Southern California is noted who will appear on this program are Dr. Cortland Myers, Dr. Charles E. Fuller and Rev. Louis S. Talbot.

The conference covets the prayers of the brotherhood for a special outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon all who shall have a part in giving out the Word of God as well as upon those who shall attend that they may be receptive to the messages delivered.

ALAN S. PEARCE,
Conference Secretary.

FIRST BRETHERN CHURCH, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The months have again speedily passed since we reported. These months have been busy ones in which we endeavored to glean a few more sheaves for eternal harvest. To a student of the Word there are multiplied evidences of the Fig-tree putting forth its leaves. In view of this fulfillment of the Prophetic utterances, we need to heed the Master's command to "watch" and "pray." In tabulating results, we rejoice in that we have been blessed with visible results and these we wish to share with our brethren. But as we tabulate these, we are conscious of failure in accomplishing all we should have hoped to accomplish. This however is not a motive to cease our efforts but to respond to a greater challenge. It seems to me the Brethren church is confronted with a great opportunity with her Whole Gospel teaching in these apostate days.

We began our New Year with the election and then installation of officers in the church and auxiliaries. These have taken their duties seriously and through a united effort we are able to see gain. The earnestness of the officers is reflected in stimulated interest in each department of the work. The Bible school maintained a good attendance and interest all through these months. The same is true of Christian Endeavor in the several societies. They had an institute led by the County officers which was helpful. The Brotherhood of Alexander Mack meets regularly and enjoys a splendid fellowship. We have speakers address us on various subjects which is profitable. The Woman's Missionary Society is as always doing a fine piece of work and maintains a spiritual standard that we cherish. Recently, we had our sister, Mrs. George Ronk with us and with the District Patroness, Mrs. Cashman, two Sisterhoods were organized and are now functioning. Thus with these auxiliaries working for the Lord's glory coupled with the work of the church, we labor on.

At our yearly business meeting, we did not decide upon the matter of a revival meeting. But we made it a matter of prayer seeking to be guided aright in the matter. The matter of import was the evangelist. Our own men were not available at the time we desired a meeting. Then there came to the Second church, the "Singing Longs." They proved themselves Godly leaders with the Compton Brethren and finally it was decided we would secure them to lead us. They came to us two weeks before Easter and closed Monday evening after Easter. They proved to be the people for this meeting. We feel it was the leading of the Spirit that brought them to us. Preliminary to the meeting we again made a survey of the community. Faithful workers made a house to house canvass which both advertised the meeting and opened up the way for personal work. Then we also conducted cottage prayer meetings. With the field thus prepared, we awaited the coming of Brother and Sister Long who were to lead us in the actual campaign. They proved a great blessing to us in the uniqueness of presenting the message; the very plan that was needed here. Through the use of "magic" presentation of the truth, the school children became interested. The afternoon meetings were well attended. From among those children a goodly number accepted Christ. Then the evening services were well attended giving the opportunity of presenting the claims of Jesus in song, rag-picture and sermon. The consecrated leadership of the Longs, the plain preaching of the Word, the prayers and co-operation of the membership and friends resulted in a glorious victory for the Lord. There were sixty-two who came forward in first decisions and reconsecrations. Of this number, thirty-nine were baptized on the evening of Easter. Several are still awaiting baptism. The membership of the church was increased by these and four coming before; one by baptism and three by relation, since last reporting. We rejoice for the numerical gain. Some of those coming were heads of families; one mother, a Catholic, by coming brought her husband and two sons; another family whose head is Catholic, all came but the father. It was a great victory; and to God belongs the glory. Needless to say, the Longs greatly endeared themselves to our people and the community. We praise God for them and we can recommend them to others.

Our Spring Communion service was the largest attended since our pastorate with this people; and those in a position to know say it was the largest in the history of the church. Our offerings indicate spiritual health; all were in increase over last year. Again let us state for every advancement we rejoice but we have our problems. Summer is here with its lure to the mountain and beach; the devil is awake twenty-four hours each day in Los Angeles. So we covet your prayers that God may have faithful witnesses in us as a church and individuals. We praise God for the good reports from the various churches.

Our address is: 217 E. 42 St. and not (2 st.) If wrongly addressed, delivery is delayed.
A. B. COVER, Pastor.

BRETHERN CHURCH HELD DEDICATORY SERVICE FOR CLASSROOMS SUNDAY

(From Kittanning "Leader-Times." May 29, 1933)

In a brief but impressive service yesterday, the three new Sunday school classrooms just constructed in the West Kittanning Brethren church were dedicated. The program began at 10:30 A. M. at the close of a short Sunday school period. After the singing of a chorus by all, the pastor, Rev. R. D. Crees, presented diplomas to four graduates of the Teacher Training Course. The graduates were Ethel Yount, Georgia Shankle, Edgar Hooks and Warren Hooks. Following the prayer of consecration by the Superintendent, the audience joined in singing the chorus, "You Can Smile". A few words of greeting were brought by Ira Bennett, the Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the church. Mr. Bennett, spoke of the need for new classrooms, and how the goal had been met only through the personal sacrifice and volunteer labor of members and friends.

The pastor then took charge of the Recognition Service, and mentioned that in addition to the new classrooms, three new, large windows had been placed in other rooms and the exterior of the church painted white. He read the names of all the men who had aided in the building project by volunteer labor, and disclosed the fact that 44 different men had assisted. Following that the names of individuals donating the use of trucks, ladders and other materials were read, 15 in all.

After a word of thanks to all, the dedicatory prayer was offered, and the audience invited to go to the basement for an inspection of the rooms. As they passed in single file past the front of the church, their building fund offering envelopes were placed in the offering basket, and then they passed to the basement for inspection of the new class rooms.

Happy is the man who can still hear God speak to him in his disappointments.

A WONDERFUL OPPORTUNITY is being offered to the young people of the Brethren churches of Ohio to have the advantages of a Young People's Training Camp this Summer. Knowing the need for a work of this sort, arrangements are being made that those interested may have the opportunity for the training so much demanded. The camp is to be held at the Lohr Ranch north of Canton.

Dates

The conference extends from Monday evening, July 17 to Saturday noon, July 22. Registration will take place on Monday evening that all classes may begin Tuesday morning.

Who May Attend

The camp school is planned for young people of high school age and older and their adult instructors. No church is limited in the number to be sent and it is the earnest desire of those responsible for the camp that the churches cooperate to the fullest possible extent.

Expense

It is the desire of those planning the camp to make the cost just as low as possible, thus making possible a large attendance in this time of financial stress. We are indeed fortunate in being able to have those who are willing to care for the cooking without any cost for this work. The plan is to purchase the foodstuffs at wholesale, pool the cost and divide it among those who come. This plan will make the expense a nominal one. Every effort is being put forth along this line and there need be no hesitancy as to the expense. The expense will be kept at the minimum. It should be really no more expensive than to remain in the home. To assist in every way possible as to finances there will be no registration fee this year.

What to Bring

Each camper should bring linen and blankets and camp pillow. Cots will be furnished without cost. The use of these is being donated by friends in Canton. Each student should bring bathing suit, athletic equipment, Bible, note-book, etc.

Daily Schedule

The forenoon program will consist of early devotional period, breakfast, class periods and chapel. The afternoons will be given over to rest, reading and recreation. The day will close with a vesper service.

Courses

The courses to be offered correspond to the courses offered in the camp at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, and that of the group in Pennsylvania. This will make possible the transfer from one camp to another, if this is necessitated because of change of residence.

Instructors

Competent instructors are being selected—instructors both thoroughly competent to teach the subjects assigned to them and also anxious to be the greatest help to the students.

Cooperation

The management is asking for the most thorough cooperation on the part of the pastors and churches, especially those near enough to the camp to make possible the coming of their young people. The association with other Christian young people in a work of this sort is really a worthwhile experience for the young people of any church.

How to Reach the Camp

Take the most convenient route to Canton—No. 3 is the one most traveled and likely the most convenient for the most who will come—turn north on Market Avenue, Route 43. Follow 43 to the Martindale Road. Take this road to the right and follow to the camp. Look for markers as you leave Canton.

Information

In case any added information is desired this information may be had by writing Rev. A. E. Whitted, Louisville, Ohio.

Remember the date and place. Don't fail to make use of this opportunity.

A. E. WHITTED.

IN THE SHADOW

WORST—Mrs. Arminda Ash Worst, relict of Dr. E. J. Worst, of the Ashland, Ohio, congregation, passed away at the family residence at 242 West Main Street, this city, on Thursday morning, June 15, 1933, at the advanced age of 82 years, 2 months and 5 days. She first saw the light of earthly realms on April 10, 1851, a daughter of Josiah and Nancy Ash, pioneer residents of Holmes County, Ohio. She was one of a family of six sons and six daughters, of whom but two now remain. Dr. E. E. Ash, of Gosport, Indiana, and Mrs. Mauda Mumaw, of Mt. Eaton, Ohio.

Arminda Ash and Elmore J. Worst became man and wife on March 21, 1872, the union being broken after more than fifty years of wedded felicity by the death of the husband in 1927. Four children were given to bless this union, one of whom passed to the Lord's tender watch care in infancy. Three daughters, Clara W., wife of Dr. J. Allen Miller; Essie, wife of Dr. G. C. Carpenter, of Southville, Ohio; and Miss Amy Worst, at home, three grandchildren, John A. Jr., and Malcolm E. Miller, of Columbus, Ohio, and Mrs. Grant Ellis, of Ashland, comprise the members of her immediate family who sorrow at the leave-taking of one who was and will always be an inspiration in the lives of her best things.

Sister Worst and her good husband were charter members of the Ashland Brethren church, and she maintained her interest unbroken in the welfare of her church. For her the first interests of life were her home, her children and her church; and her home will miss the benediction of her quiet presence, while already her children have risen up to call her "a wonderful mother," which might be supplemented with the Biblical description of a godly woman of "blessed," while her church will miss her quiet faithfulness so manifested through the long years of her ministry with and for it. The sincerity of her nature and the depth of her sincerity are shown by the testimony which she left but a few weeks before her demise. Following a service conducted for her by her son-in-law she looked into the faces of those present and said, "My faith is firm and steadfast, and I have no regrets but to leave the longest ones." To her is granted by all who knew her that finest of encomiums. "She was a good woman."

Sister Worst had been a resident of Ashland County and city for more than fifty years, and it was to be expected that a large concourse of people should gather for the funeral services which were held at the First Brethren church on Saturday afternoon, June 17, 1933. The services were in charge of the undersigned, her pastor assisted by Dr. Martin Shively, a long-time friend of the family. A wealth of floral tributes gave mute testimony to the esteem of her friends. Her pastor gave a "Coronation Message" and Dr. Shively paid beautiful tribute to her worth and character in a brief and tender testimonial. Burial was in the family lot in the Ashland Cemetery beside the body of her companion, there to wait the consummation of all things and the coming of the Lord to gather his own. May the lives of her loved ones, and of us all, be as worthy the praise as she, as "Christian" as was hers.

DYLL BELTONE.

LIVENGOOD—Boinda Hauger Livengood, wife of Elder Z. T. Livengood of Lanark, Illinois, passed on to her eternal home from the family residence in Lanark on April 20th, 1933 at the age of 80 years, 8 months and 6 days. Married to Z. T. Livengood in 1872, and to this union one son, John, was born.

Sister Livengood was a Christian for more than sixty years, during the greater part of which time she assisted Brother Livengood in various places where he labored as pastor. She loved the church and found a joy in all its services. Her place was seldom vacant in the house of God. Her encouraging words were always a help and inspiration to those who brought the message. Many shall cherish her memory and seek to emulate her many virtues.

In her going she leaves her companion, with John and his wife, and a host of friends. Peace to her and to all who shall miss her until the morning of the resurrection of the just, when we shall meet again all our loved ones.

Funeral services were held from the home in charge of the pastor, the undersigned.

C. C. GRISSO.

DUBBEL—Edward E. Dubbel, born in Hagerstown, Maryland, and departed this earthly life from his home in Lanark, Illinois, May 23rd, 1933 at 70 years of age. In 1853 he was united in marriage to Eliza Arnold. To this union six children were born four of which with the mother survive. Brother Dubbel with his companion united with the Brethren church almost 50 years ago. Soon after uniting with the church he was called to the deacon's office in which place he served conscientiously for faithfully 30 years. He was devoted to all the interests of the church. It is doubtful if he ever missed a love-feast, when at all possible to be present.

During his last sickness he was anointed by Elder Livengood and his pastor. He was a constant sufferer for six months of the most excruciating pain and, considering, resigning his all into the hands of him who doeth all things well. Quietly and peacefully as at the close of a summer day, he slipped away from us into the home that his Father has prepared for all of his believing children. In the morning of that bright and cloudless day we shall meet again.

Funeral services were conducted by his pastor from the First Brethren church in Lanark on May 25, 1933.

C. C. GRISSO.

EMERY—JoAnn Emery, youngest child of Brother and Sister Howard Emery, died at the family home in the bounds of the Lanark congregation on May 28, 1933, at the age of one year and eleven days. She leaves her parents with one brother and two sisters. This beautiful little life had a brief stay here, but certainly not in vain, for heaven will be more real and precious for all because it holds another treasure. The parents' hearts are full of joy, their family circle find great comfort in all the promises of God's Word.

Funeral services at the home by the family pastor.

C. C. GRISSO.

MILBURN—Richard D. Milburn, well known farmer of Fort Scott, Kansas, 71 years of age, was killed by accident at the sales pavilion at Fort Scott, Kansas, Saturday of June 10th, being run over by a loaded truck.

Mr. Milburn had lived near Fort Scott, nearly all of his life. He was an industrious and hard working man and a good neighbor and citizen.

Mr. Milburn had a carpenter make his casket out of cedar wood and had kept it under his bed for two years.

He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Clara Reed, with whom he had made his home for several years. Also several brothers and sisters and nephews and six grandchildren. The funeral was conducted from the undertaker's chapel, June 12th, 1933, by the writer. A large number of friends and neighbors were in attendance.

The body was laid to rest in the family lot in the Evergreen Cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

SEVERY—William Henry Severy, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Severy, died very suddenly at the home of his parents in Fort Scott, Kansas, Monday evening of June 12th, 1933.

Little William was an exceptionally bright child, loved and admired by all who saw him.

His age at death was only 1 year, 4 months and 25 days, but the sweet memory of him will linger in the hearts of those who loved him so dearly.

Funeral was conducted from the Brethren church of Fort Scott, Kansas, at 3:00 P. M., Wednesday, June 14th, 1933.

He is survived by his parents and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Clint Morrison, and Mrs. W. H. Severy of Fort Scott, Kansas.

Many beautiful floral offerings were made as tokens of respect and sympathy. The service was conducted by the writer, and the body was laid to rest in the Grove Chapel Cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

DAVIDSON—"Ted" Davidson of Junction City, Kansas, was killed in an automobile accident, June 10th, 1933, on the highway a few miles north of Fort Scott, Kansas.

His age was 26 years. He was a native of Missouri and came from their home and had the body to rest in the Oak Grove Cemetery, near Fort Scott, on June 29th, 1933.

A brief service was conducted by the writer from the Cheney Chapel.

L. G. WOOD.

WILLIAMS—Mrs. Lee Williams was born in Carl County, Missouri, January 15, 1866, and departed this life at her home near Evans, Missouri, January 20th, 1933, at the age of 67 years, 5 months and 2 days. Before her marriage she was Mary Newson, daughter of I. B. and Mary Newson. She was married to Lee Williams in Fort Scott, Kansas, 25 years ago.

Her husband preceded her in death by 11 years.

She is survived by three children, Mrs. Clarence Johnson and Orman William Davidson, of Deerfield, Missouri, and Davenport, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, also by two brothers and three sisters: Mrs. Lewis Clayfield, Rocky Ford, Colorado; Mrs. Alfred Wilford, Trinidad, Colorado; Mrs. Anna Beal-Ingold, Fort Scott, Kansas, Anthony and Hughie Newson of Council Bluffs, Iowa. Five grandchildren and two great grandchildren also survive. Mrs. Williams resided in the neighborhood for 22 years and was highly respected by a large circle of friends. FISHING BRIDGE, Yellowstone Park

I recall once asking a native westerner why a certain mountain was called "Rattlesnake Mountain." He answered that it was because no rattlesnakes had ever been found there. Our present and very temporary address—"Fishing Bridge"—is not that kind of a name. There really are fish at Fishing Bridge. The man who couldn't catch fish here is a hopeless case.

Fishing Bridge is an actual bridge that crosses the Yellowstone River at the point where it flows out of the great Yellowstone Lake. Those who wish to camp will find here the finest tourist camp within the Lake. Those who wish to camp will find pole pines on the north edge of the Lake. From our own location we can look through the trees across the lake and see Mount Sheridan, snow covered, about thirty miles distant. In the clear, brilliant sunshine it does not seem more than five. Yellowstone Lake is one of the most remarkable fresh water lakes in the world. It has a shore line of about one hundred miles and its altitude is nearly 8,000 feet.

SPEAKING of Fish

When we drove in here, a few days ago, the Park had not yet officially opened for the summer season, but already there were several dozen auto campers located at Fishing Bridge waiting for permission to fish from the bridge (which came yesterday). I told one of the amiable Rangers that I was hungry for fish and he directed me to a certain spot about four miles down the west side of the lake. Having heard fishing advice more than once, I did not take the Ranger's council very seriously, but decided to drive down and look things over. In fifteen minutes we had seven large native, or cut-throat trout. Yesterday and today hundreds were caught from Fishing Bridge. Everybody is trying to give away fish. As I sit here writing a party of campers drove in and began to set up a tent a short distance from our own camp. Within five minutes they were supplied with more trout than they could possibly eat. It is the same all over this large camp where automobiles are constantly arriving. We left Fishing Bridge for a couple days to see another part of the Park and returned yesterday. Thinking we were newcomers, four fishermen offered us fish! No one need go hungry.

All this has raised a question: If these trout were something you could store up in the bank like money, would the fishermen be so generous? You can only eat a few fish yourself, the law will not permit you to sell them, and they will soon spoil if you keep them, so you might as well give them away. Perhaps this would be a better world if money were something like fish.

As a matter of fact, in the last analysis money is like this in a certain respect. You may as well give it away before you leave this world. Afterwards it will do you no more good than spoiled fish.

THE Boys from Ohio

Two boys from Ohio arrived in an old Model T Ford. It was their first trip away from home and they came over to talk, being drawn by our Ohio license. They had finished one year in college and not having enough money to continue, decided to see the West. Strangely, when offered a mess of fish they politely declined the gift. Later we found that they did not know how to prepare and cook fish. Mrs. McClain initiated them into the culinary mystery of frying and they were happy. One of them said they had been living on canned beans for the most part, since the beans were easy to prepare. They came over to say goodbye this morning, after I had helped them select their route to Southern California. The driver said he didn't much care which road they took just as long as there were no mountains. After crossing the Big Horns, he didn't want ever to see another mountain! Both said they were going to look up the First Brethren church when they arrived at Long Beach.

A NOTE to Weary Wives

If your husband complains about your cooking, bring him up here on a camping trip. He will eat anything, and be glad to get it.

And speaking as a husband, I am quite sure that any woman can cook better on a camping trip in the high mountains. Mrs. McClain argues that this is wholly a matter of appetite, but I am unconvinced, being certain that her cooking has improved up here.

INTERESTING Sights in the Park

Due to the policy of conservation followed by the Park administration, a remarkable assortment of wild life may be seen in the Park. Only you must drive more leisurely than the average tourist does. We took two days for the trip around the Grand Loop road and were fortunate to see many interesting specimens of both birds and animals. While ascending the mountain over beautiful Durraven Pass, we met a black bear ambling down the middle of the road and followed by a cub not much larger than a good sized toy teddy-bear. The mother came up to the side of the car for food while the cub scampered down over the side of the grade, being somewhat suspicious of our good intentions. Another big fellow sat up on the side of the mountain in an open meadow of flowers, taking a sun bath evidently. He regarded us with little interest, being surfeited with curious tourists, I suppose.

A BEAR Story

On the first night spent in the Park we had a visitor. About 2 A. M. we were awakened by the crash of falling cooking utensils. I looked out the car window, and saw a bear sitting on the seat of the Park table over which we had spread a little shelter tent. He had been quietly trying to get a couple of trout we had placed under a heavy skillet, and unfortunately, knocked some utensils off the table. I shooed him away and he galloped off in the moonlight to look for another victim.

In some of the camps, where tourists have fed them, the bears have become veritable pests. Friendly as they seem, it is not safe to feed them, and the administration has posted signs warning people not to offer them food. Isaiah 11:7 has not yet come to pass.

The big grizzlies do not come into camp, but may be seen at certain places where they are fed regularly with an armed ranger on guard. I was somewhat relieved to learn that grizzly bears cannot climb trees.

SCHMELING and Baer

At the Canyon Camp two black bears got into a fight, which began good-naturedly over a question of precedence in pilfering a garbage can, but finally wound up in a knock-down affair without any visible rules. A group of President Roosevelt's conservation workers, hard-bitten fellows from the New York river front, gathered round to watch the battle. They named one Schmeling, and the other Baer. Schmeling won the fight, much to the disgust of the New Yorkers, and a little later both bears were eating together in the most brotherly fashion, their heads in the same garbage can.

It was all very amusing, and about as senseless as most of the fights between "cultured" nations.

THE Strangest Sight

Walking through the camp at Fishing Bridge yesterday, I saw a young woman with bobbed and marceled hair, dressed in overalls, washing baby clothes on an old-fashioned washboard, a cigaret in her mouth. The combination of activities did not seem to work well, as the smoke got in her eyes and hampered her efforts.

The Apostle Paul, once discussing the action of certain women, appealed to Nature—"Doth not even nature itself teach you?" Apparently not, in some cases. A bear, for instance, would move away from the smoke. But the woman hung on to the cigaret.

ALTITUDE and Power

Yesterday a man drove in from the east, this being his first experience driving an

Have the People Learned Their Lesson?

We are told there is an upward trend in the economic situation. That is good news. Everybody will hope that the trend will turn out to be a real swing back to prosperity. Stanley High, writing in the Christian Herald, says, "There are, at least, some economic facts to justify the optimists in their optimism. March 4th witnessed the closing of the banks of the country and, in the opinion of many observers, marked rock-bottom for the depression. Here are some of the indications that these observers may be right. From March 1st to May 16th wholesale commodity prices advanced 13.9 per cent—an advance which wiped out entirely the losses sustained in the fall of prices through the entire previous twelve months. Some commodities have increased in value even more notably, in particular farm products. Reports indicate that, on the heels of these rising farm prices, business in a wide range of commodities, from tractors to shoes, is picking up in the farm belt. The general business index of the New York Times reached an all-time low on March 18th, with the average at 60 per cent. Within seven weeks, however, the figure had advanced to 74.1—the largest consecutive and sustained advance since the depression began. Business failures in March of this year were fewer than in any year since 1925." Also there is said to be a gain in employment and in payrolls, and a pronounced decline in demands made upon relief agencies. These are all encouraging indications, and if they are the forerunners of permanent improvement there will be much reason for gratitude, and surely it would seem to be about time for such improvement, if reconstruction efforts are made on fundamental grounds.

But that is the point at which there is considerable doubt. Can we expect anything permanent in the way of reconstruction into the ideals and inner qualities of the people are not taken into account, but in many cases are purposely ignored or betrayed? There are some things that are being done to improve conditions that seem to be the part of wisdom. The machinery of government, many think, is in the process of improvement, and in some respects it may be true. But is it not lacking in that idealism lacking that consideration for the morals of the people, and that encouragement and defense of the spiritual qualities so necessary to the permanent well being of a nation? We are depending on improved mechanics to do the work, and that is not sufficient. The cause of the world's sickness, and of our national ills is not poor machinery, but a poor quality of people. The fundamental consideration is not the improvement of our institutions, but the making of better men. And to do that, men must be turned back to God. We have largely forgotten the Rock whence we were hewn; we have left him out of account, and we are suffering the consequences in the present situation.

It was so with Israel of old. When she forgot God and turned to idolatry and unrighteousness, the nation was oppressed and the people were caused to suffer, but when God was revered and his word was obeyed, prosperity and happiness prevailed. That was the principle set forth in the divine instructions to Joshua as he was about to lead the people into the possession of the land that was said to flow with milk and money: "Only be strong and very courageous, and observe to do according to all the law, . . . turn not from it to the right hand or to the left that thou mayest have good success." If he should be faithful to read the law and obey all that was written therein, he was told, "then thou shalt make thy way prosperous." That ancient doctrine is still true. Prosperity is linked up with our relation to God. We make our prosperity by our righteousness and godliness, and we design our depressions by our selfishness and greed. Israel had both good times and evil. Her good times were times of spiritual alertness and moral strength, while her bad times were times of backsliding and sin. It is equally true with our own nation and every nation. God is not partial with nations or with individuals, but he has plans and purposes, and he is with those who work in harmony with his plans and further his purposes. We are where we are because of our unresponsive attitude toward God and his righteousness.

Unmindful of this fact, our leaders in civic and economic affairs are trying to remedy the situation merely by tinkering with the machinery. The machinery may or may not need improvement, but all the improvement in the world would not leave us any better in the end, but only faced with larger possibilities of evil, without a return of the people to God. To improve man's tools only makes man more dangerous, unless the man himself is made better. Dr. William R. Moody of Washington, D. C. said recently in discussing this point: "The problem of reconstruction comes down to a question, not of methods, but of men. That is where Mr. Scott, of Technocracy, falls short of the mark with his theories. He fails to take into account that most confusing, that most baffling thing in the world, the human personality. You cannot measure the human personality with a slide-rule, nor any other kind of rule. The human animal will not be standardized. Thousands of years of effort have failed to make all men think alike, or act alike. You can measure a machine; you can determine with accuracy what it will do under stress; but nobody can predict what a man will do when you put the pressure on him." Mr. Moody is right with one exception, and that exception is, when the Spirit of God dwells within a man; then you may know how he will react under pressure because he will rely on the Spirit and power of God. Christianity is the only truly standardizing agency for humanity, and that standard is the Lord Jesus Christ, who is exemplar as well as Savior. But Mr. Moody is right when he declares that the really big problem is one, "not of methods, but of men."

And the sorry part of the whole program to find the way out of the present muddled situation is that no really worth while effort is being considered to deal with the human element, not even in the field of morals, but rather every predatory evil agency is being turned loose to plunder human weaknesses. Not in many years have the fundamentals to human welfare been so completely submerged to what is popularly but erroneously considered necessary to economic recovery. We seem ready to license almost every minion of hell that promises to help balance the budget. The liquor traffic, gambling and vice have not been given such free rein since pre-war days as they are now receiving, and the forces of righteousness can scarcely muster the fighting strength of a "corporal's guard" in the average run of communities. Many of the good people have thrown up their hands and are saying, "This generation will have to learn from experience and the sooner we cease to restrict them the sooner they will learn."

But men do not learn to do right by experience alone. They have not been able to free themselves from their evil ways merely by experiencing the folly of those ways. The depression years themselves prove that. Stanley High says he talked to a prominent New York investment banker about the hopeful signs of an economic recovery now appearing on the horizon. "He agreed that the turn apparently had come. But he was not particularly joyous at the prospect. 'Brokers,' he said, 'are being flooded with orders to buy stock. These are not New York orders. They come from every corner of the country. Three and a half years of the depression do not seem to have changed the attitude of the country. People still want to get something for nothing. If the present improvement continues, another six months may see us the victims, again. of the same speculative fever that afflicted us back in 1929. And if we can go through times like these and still learn nothing then, in my opinion, we will have even worse times ahead of us." And that is just what we are doing—learning practically nothing from experience, that is, nothing that gives us the power to escape the evil ways.

That makes the present situation a challenge to the church. If we have not learned from experience, and if financial recovery will only stimulate men to plunge again into those unchristian ways that brought on the depression, the very approach of prosperity brings the church face to face with a challenge that is urgent and gigantic. The people must be warned against returning to the worship of the "golden calf," and the church alone has the voice of warning that will carry conviction and the moral and spiritual concern that will move to action. The church alone can point men to the Power that can turn men's hearts from the greed of gold, the lust of power and the passion of vice and can stir them with the desire and the determination to withstand the temptation. And it alone can fire men with the courage necessary to fight the organized forces of evil, and to seek to put the powers that be on the side of righteousness and sobriety and the protection of the weak and the innocent. The church must deliver its message with new zeal and urgency, call men to repentance with new boldness and power. This is no time to run away from duty, like Jonah of old, and let prejudice shut up the bowels of compassion against those whom God would have us warn. He will manifest his power if the church will prove willing and faithful.

A Chinese Layman on the Pearl Buck Case

Pearl Buck's difficulty with the foreign mission board of the Presbyterian church, or rather, the foreign board's difficulty with Pearl Buck, is now a matter of history with which most of our readers are doubtless familiar. But it may be news and a matter of interest to learn of a Chinese Layman's viewpoint of this case, as reported by the China Weekly Review and passed on to us by the kindness of Brother F. E. Simmons of Washington, D. C. When this view was written the case was still hanging fire, but since, as is now well known, Mrs. Buck has taken herself out of the picture by resigning from the mission service of the Presbyterian church. Our Chinese correspondent has not taken very seriously all that was involved in Mrs. Buck's theological liberalism, which was the chief cause of the criticism that was launched against her, but his reply to her criticism of missionaries in general is particularly effective, coming as it does from a native Christian layman.

He does not say that Mrs. Buck is a "high-brow", but he does think she has spoken out of the abundance of her ignorance of the missionary as such, at least, "she apparently was not too well informed."

Then he goes on to say:

Her declaration, for example, that all missionaries should possess college degrees and become unofficial "ambassadors of good-will" from the occident to the orient is rather far-fetched. Hundreds of the occidental missionaries who have accomplished the greatest good in China possessed no college degrees at all. Possibly they may have been uncouth in appearance and not too well educated in the collegiate sense. But they possessed a vision and a purpose and they went forth to convert and they did convert and they did a tremendous amount of good among the people with whom they worked. We remember once traveling in the far interior and coming across an American missionary delivering a speech on the street corner in a native village. He possessed no college degrees and he spoke his own language ungrammatically, but the people in that district admired him, had confidence in him and came to him by the hundreds for advice and help when they were sick or in trouble. This man happened to be a member of a Protestant sect, but we have also known a Catholic priest, German by nationality, who had more influence among the bandits and unruly elements in a certain mountainous section of China than any other man in the whole province, Chinese officials not excepted. He had lived there for thirty years, was supported entirely by the people with whom he associated, spoke their language, ate their style of food and was one of them. But the man was not "educated" in the accepted sense of the term. To Mrs. Buck he probably would be

EDITORIAL REVIEW

*Brother C. A. Stewart, the retiring vice moderator of the Ohio Conference that met recently at Dayton, writes a word of appreciation concerning the conference. He mentions a number of features which he enjoyed. And we would say he did his share toward making the conference enjoyable.

The church at South Gate, California, is soon to have a new lighting system, we learn from the church Calendar, and they are requiring that all the money necessary to cover the cost shall be in hand before they "begin on the new lights." It is not a bad plan, especially for these times; it will save the church the possibility of an annoying debt. Brother Leo Polman is the pastor.

Brother H. F. Stuckman supplies the program for the two Sundays of Bible Conference at Shipshewana, preceding and following the Young People's Training Camp. The opening Sunday is July 16th and the closing date is July 23rd. Sunday school services are to be conducted on both Sundays, one group of churches to be present on one Sunday and another group on the second Sunday.

Dr. R. R. Teeter, our business manager, has a message for you this week. See his "Corner", and do not fail to renew your subscription to The Evangelist. You cannot afford to be without your church paper. It is absolutely necessary to keep yourself informed and loyal to your denomination. There is no other religious paper that can take its place, and he who allows another paper to take its place will become something else than Brethren. Nor is your church paper an expensive proposition. It costs but four cents a week, which amounts to the mailing of one letter and a postal card each week. Any one can afford that, if the proper sacrifice or self-denial is exercised.

Brother C. H. Ashman, secretary of the General Conference Executive Committee, has supplied us with a copy of the program, which you will find in this issue of The Evangelist. The date of the conference is August 21 to 27, and the place, as usual, is Winona Lake, Indiana. There is some splendid talent scheduled on the program and it is all Brethren talent, too. We urge all our readers to study the program carefully and be convinced that it offers a spiritual treat that they cannot afford to deny themselves of. It is time for churches to make plans for their delegations. We have not yet received information regarding rates for lodging and meals at Winona, but they will doubtless be very reasonable. Definite information will appear in a later issue.

Rev. Quinter M. Lyon, who for seven years served as Sunday school editor in our Publishing House, informs us that he completed his doctor of philosophy course and was granted the degree in June at Ohio State University. He says: "The subject of my thesis was 'Three Typical Views of Progress.' It was based on a study principally of Rousseau, Condorcet, and Vico, who represented respectively the negative, the affirmative, and a combination of both. I set a criterion of 'comprehensiveness' or the number and variety of harmoniously experienced qualities, as the test of progress. Man has achieved the elements of progress, but needs to integrate them." We congratulate Dr. Lyon on this achievement of progress and this very thorough preparation for life's service. At present he is teaching a full schedule in Ohio State University summer school. His address is 143 Frambes Avenue, Columbus, Ohio.

First the Indiana conference, in cooperation with the National Sunday School Association, launched a young people's Training Camp. It has now been running for several years and has been a splendid success in every way. So enthused did the young people and their leaders of other districts become that they fell in line and started a Young People's Camp of their own. In June the Pennsylvania district had such a Camp and it was a real success. Then we learned that a similar Camp was started for the young people of the Ohio district. It is to be held at Loher Ranch, North of Canton, July 17-24. The same week the Shipshewana Camp is to be conducted. Now we learn through Dr. Bauman's church bulletin, of Long Beach, California, that the young people of Southern California are enjoying a Camp this week, the dates being July 6 and 7, held at San Dimas Canyon (Bethel Camp). This is fine. We shall be glad to have all report their activities.

God's Plan for Making Men New

By Frank G. Coleman

That God saves the souls of men is accepted by at least one-third of the human race, but there is a wide range of opinion as to just what is God's plan. In fact the whole religious field is strewn with the debris of plans and systems of redemption. Most, if not all, of these systems or plans claim divine authority and sanction. They range from a radical fundamental position to a rank modernism. The former is viewed as one laying aside all negative forms and committing himself to the unmerited, and unrecompensed grace of an omniscient, and all loving heavenly Father as revealed in the only begotten of the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. The latter casting aside the "Faith once for all delivered" has denied practically everything held by evangelical Christianity, and has turned each to his own way. "But there were false prophets also among the people, EVEN AS THERE SHALL BE FALSE TEACHERS AMONG YOU, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them and bring upon themselves swift destruction" (2 Pet. 2:1). "For there are certain men crept in unawares, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only true God, and our Lord Jesus Christ" (Jude 4).

In between this "highway and low" there goes trooping every conceivable persuasion. Certainly a glittering array. Strange to say that when we come to the Bible with unprejudiced minds we can find no trace of divine authority for them. Many of us go to the Bible with our preconceived ideas of what the Bible teaches and it is not difficult to read these ideas into the text. Bending the Scriptures to our peculiar mental warp is almost a universal game. Misapplication is bad enough, but dislocation of texts and portions of the Word is confusing indeed. By this sort of jugglery heresies are established and multitudes are led into a fool's paradise. You will recall that the anathema of God is pronounced upon "Wresters" of the Scriptures.

Now what is God's Plan for Making Men New? Let us lay aside all confusing terms and high sounding phraseology and consider this tremendously important doctrine in the light of God's Word. Many otherwise fine Christians reject certain doctrines, not because they have sought out what God's Word has to say, but because of some "belittling" term by which it is referred. For example, take the subject of the believer's security, many a soul has rejected this blessed teaching because some teacher or preacher has referred to it as, "Once in grace, always in grace, no matter what you do." It is the latter clause which is intended to give the whole doctrine such a character as only fools or fanatics would embrace. We are sorry to say, because of this many are terribly disturbed whenever Security is mentioned. I recall when a lad how farmers used to leap from their wagons and hold their frightened horses until the coughing, snorting monsters dashed on down the road. Well, man and beast has been most wonderfully blessed by that machine.

God's plan is so often covered up or presented in such manner as to confuse, but only by man, never so presented by the Holy Spirit. He has guarded the salvation passages against this very thing until man must deliberately read his own mind into the text to change its meaning.

Let us start with an unsaved soul and trace, as far as possible, God's plan in recreating—making new—that individual. We realize that there are degrees of divine intervention and working that we are unable to trace. The soul without God must first of all be brought to a sense of his need of a Savior. "No man can come to me, except the Father draw him" (John 6:44). God then is drawing men to Christ. Unless he recognizes himself to be a sinner and unworthy of God's love and grace he cannot be saved. For if he recognizes any worth in himself God cannot save him. "For by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast" (Eph. 2:8, 9). The Syrophenician woman in the seventh chapter of John was willing to take the place of the dogs feeding upon the crumbs which fall from the table, and for this Jesus gave her the desire of her heart.

You may ask, how does God draw a man? In the twelfth chapter of John, verses thirty-two and thirty-three, Christ declares the cross to be that by which men are drawn to him. If you follow this passage through the marginal references you will see that it is undoubtedly the crucifixion of Christ. The cross then is revealed by the Holy Spirit to be the measure of God's matchless love, and this is the thing, more than any other, that captures the admiration and awakens in the sinner's heart a responsive love. He is then led into a confession of Christ as his own Lord and Savior. "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved" (Romans 10:9). The new born Child of God is, by the Spirit, baptized into the body of Christ, and sealed. "In whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise." God is seen here as making the gift of his Spirit as a down payment, or guarantee of final consummation of the agreement. "Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ" (Phil. 1:6).

God's real problem begins after the conversion of the sinner in fitting for citizenship in heaven. For lack of a better term let us call this phase of God's dealing, PROGRESSIVE SANCTIFICATION. "That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God" (Col. 1:10). Peter adds in his second epistle, verse 18, "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our God and Savior Jesus Christ, To him be glory both now and forever. Amen." Many other choice portions of his Word teach a continual growth of the yielded one until we all come to the full stature of a man in Christ Jesus.

"Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3:5.

Sanctification or if you prefer, the transforming work and power of the Holy Spirit in the believer's life is set forth as past, present and future. The believer is said to be sanctified at his conversion. The Holy Spirit sets him aside for service for the Father and the Son. From the moment of his conversion the Holy Spirit seeks the highest possible spiritual development of the believer. When the Lord Jesus Christ shall appear the believer will be completely sanctified and changed in the adorable likeness of Christ. John calls the hope of being like him the purifying hope. "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure" (1 John 3:3).

We do not become Christlike by imitation, but by the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit. The Lord Jesus Christ is the believer's sufficiency. "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." 1 Cor. 1:30. Salvation by human effort such as imitating Christ which after all is salvation by character is impossible under the plain statement of the Lord to Nicodemus in John 3:3. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God". Our salvation is from above. Many a soul harassed by the confusion of the present day preaching is crying out from the depths of their souls, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation" (Psa. 51:12).

We know that all are not being sanctified because they will not yield themselves to the Spirit's leading. The chastening rod of the Father must fall upon these disobedient ones. "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." Heb. 12:7. The Holy Spirit is said to do seven things for us: (1) Restrains; (2) Reveals; (3) Woos; (4) Baptizes; (5) Seals; (6) Indwells (7) Infills. We are the temples of the Holy Spirit, and as living stones we are being built up into an habitation of God. We are being fitted and framed together so that each joint supplies strength to every other joint. Sometimes things get out of joint in the church and among God's people because you or I rebel at God's plan and purpose for us. Each is placed in the Body of Christ by design and has an equally important part.

This is God's plan for making "New Creatures in Christ Jesus" and happy, and blessed are you if God's Spirit is having his way with you. "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature (creation); old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new" (2 Cor. 5:17).

THE BOY WAS RIGHT

Several persons sat talking after dinner about a period of probation after death. Little Jimmie sat drinking it all in. Finally one of the wise grown-ups observed his intense face and said to him, "Jimmie, I don't suppose you know what probation means?"

"Oh, yes I do," replied Jimmie. "I know what probation is, but it's going to be repealed. There won't be any probation after death."—The Christian.

The Bible and Science in the Christian College

By Willis Belcher

KEY STATEMENT—

"The works of God in nature and the words of God in the Bible are in perfect and eternal agreement."

Valictory at the June Commencement

What is a Christian College? It is not necessarily an institution of higher learning with a denominational connection; not necessarily one endowed by a church people; not necessarily one with an orthodox statement of faith; and not necessarily one with a large percentage of Christian students. Though all these things are good and important, just one thing makes a Christian College; namely, a group of Christian men and women teaching. And by a Christian I mean one who has come to know God through Christ; one who has proved in his own life the power of Christian truth; one who has tasted of its more abundant way of life.

Science, as defined by one of the standard dictionaries, is "knowledge gained and verified by exact observation and correct thinking". Science deals primarily with the physical universe. This is in keeping with the great "Magna Charta" of the first chapter of Genesis, "subdue the earth". Therefore, science investigates, performs experiments, tabulates the results, and, where possible, tries to verify the work. Then by processes of reasoning it seeks to establish hypotheses, theories, and laws. All this is very commendable. Every day of our lives is made more satisfactory by modern science.

A wrong position for a Christian College to hold in the apparent conflict between science and the Bible is a belief in partial revelation. The advocates of this theory claim that, since the Bible was not intended to teach science, it must be excused for its scientific blunders. But if the Bible contains erroneous teaching about facts of mind or matter, it would evidently bear the imprint of human origin. Besides, if we concede the argument at this point, where will the expurgation cease? One might just as easily question its philosophical teaching, its historical teaching, or its teaching about any other branch of human learning touched by the writers of the sacred record. We can think of a man being right in one field and wrong in another field, but not so with God. If he should mislead in any place, he is not God. No, this position will not suffice.

A correct position for a Christian College to take is that the Bible is a divine revelation from God, and as such is truth. Furthermore, it should hold that all truth is harmonious; that is to say, truth found in one field does not contradict truth found in another field. This means that when science restricts itself to knowledge "gained and verified by exact observation and correct thinking", it never clashes with the Bible. To date, this has been true. It will always be true because of the simple fact that the works of God in nature and the Words of God in the Bible are in perfect and eternal agreement.

Just two cautions here: First, we must be absolutely sure that we are dealing with facts, not hypotheses. Second, we must be just as sure that we have the true meaning of the Bible and not merely some private interpretation. A leading scientist said that ninety per cent of the errors of science have not been made in faulty observations in field or laboratory, but in the interpretations of those observations. For example, to find a fossil is definite proof of former life. But to say that the fossil is ten, thirty, or eighty thousand years old is an interpretation of that find and may be right or wrong.

In 1931, near Cromwell, Indiana, the remains of a giant mastodon were discovered. An expedition from the Museum of Science of Buffalo, New York went there to carry on an investigation. The first age estimate fixed for the skeletal remains was fifty thousand years. As excavation proceeded, other fossils were found in the same stratum. Shells of snails and clams together with the trunks and branches of several trees were uncovered. Because of these finds, the age estimate dropped to ten thousand years. Even this small figure was destined to suffer another modification. The finding of an Indian arrow head in connection with charcoal makes it probable that the Indians were here when the animal died. Dr. Sanford, curator of geology and paleontology of the Buffalo Museum, is quoted as saying that the finding of fresh water shells similar to, if not identical with, modern species, would indicate that the mastodon lived as recently as one thousand years. I repeat, it is one thing to find a fossil, but it is quite another matter to interpret the meaning of that find. It is the misinterpretations that involve us in serious difficulty. And to be fair to the scientist, we must concede that the misinterpretations of certain Bible passages have likewise resulted in unfortunate implications.

However, oftentimes the passages of the Bible that have been the most bitterly attacked, in time have been proved to be scientifically accurate. Job speaks about an empty space in the north. The first telescopes were pointed skyward to examine the starry deep. Everywhere the instruments were pointed it revealed the canopy of heaven jewelled with countless, brilliant stars. "Surely", said the critics, "modern science has proved the Bible inaccurate in this particular statement, for there is no empty space in the north." But gradually, larger and better telescopes were made. With each new type the stratosphere was pierced to greater depths until finally, a great empty space was discovered in the north. Job was right. Similar incidents have occurred with such frequency that another has said, "All human discoveries seem to have been made with the express purpose of confirming more strikingly the Word of God." Therefore, I truly believe that science, or any other department of a Christian college, should never cast the slightest doubt upon the accuracy of the Bible. No amount of book-learning can ever compensate for a shrinkage of faith. In reference to any apparent conflict or discrepancy, it should believe and teach that when experience and knowledge catch up with revelation, there will be complete harmony. Judging the future by the past this will be true.

Friends, we are approaching the closing moments of this service. We have met for greeting and to say goodbye, some of us perhaps never to meet except in sacred and fragrant memories. More fitting, I feel, it would be if each member of the class of 1933 could have a share in our parting word. Surely, there must throb in each heart emotions that, if expressed, would combine to make a powerful testimony of our love for "Old College Home."

Many things we will not soon forget: the fond friendships of campus life; the personal interest of the faculty and their labors of love; the constructive helpfulness of our class advisor, Dr. Ullman; the sympathetic and hopeful counsel of Dean Mason; the constant flow of inspiration from Dr. Jacobs—all these unseen things, and more, have gone to make our brief sojourn here pleasant and exceedingly profitable. Yet, these very associations and experiences make it doubly difficult to say our final word. No doubt each member of the class can unite with Tenyson and say:

"In thy spirit I shall dwell,
And dream my dreams and hold it true,
Though my lips may bid adieu,
I cannot think that thing farewell."

VOICE OF THE CHURCHES

FEEDING THE NEW NATURE

Blessed is the man whose delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night.

We are born into this world with a fallen "old Adam" nature. This fleshy nature produces and delights in such things as adultery, uncleanness, hatred, strife, envying, murder and drunkenness (Gal. 5:19).

When a man is born again, he receives a "last Adam" nature. This new nature produces and delights in such things as love, joy, peace, goodness and temperance (Gal. 5:22).

"Faith cometh by hearing" (Rom. 10:17). That is, the avenue to the heart is through the hearing (including the eyes, when we read). The daily newspaper and worldly magazines contain food for the old nature, while the Bible and Christian papers and magazines provide food for the new nature.

It is very evident that these two natures cannot live together in peace, so there is a continual strife between them (Gal. 5:17). The outcome of this battle lies in the power of the owner of the heart. Only Christians have the two natures and it is their business to mortify or starve the old nature and feed the new (Col. 3:5).

It is not necessary for the Christian to read the daily papers. In fact, he cannot make a practice of reading of the murders, robberies, divorces and other evils, without great harm to his spiritual nature. His reading will determine the thoughts of his day and blessed is the man who is willing to so control his reading that he will meditate on the law of the Lord all day.

A few years ago my eyes began to bother me and I could not do so much reading. If I would average thirty minutes a day with the daily paper, I would use 180 hours in a year in that which would work a curse in my life, so I do not take a daily. I do, however, take several good fundamental magazines, thus providing me with food for thought along the right lines.

"Whatever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report—THINK ON THESE THINGS" (Phil. 4:8). It is very evident that the daily and such papers do not provide food for such thoughts. Let us guard our reading, for what we read determines the thoughts of our day.

If a person is cold, he gets to the heat; if he is hungry, he hunts food; if he is thirsty, he seeks a drink; if he desires to be in God's sphere of blessing, let him so guard his reading that he will meditate in the law of the Lord day and night, for God says: Blessed is that man (Ps. 1).

OUR CHALLENGE

Since America has drifted backward in its moral stand for righteousness, and has fallen for the idea that beer will balance the budget, we find that Religion is seemingly with its back to the wall. The church has seen, and is in, for a tough time. It is being tried as by fire. And it cannot win by the tactics of panic. It must match itself to the hour.

"For such a time as this". Today the world's scales are weighted against the church. It has few champions and fewer defenders, except its own ranks. But for such a time as this the church has always drawn on its reserve resources. It isn't expecting to quit. It will be a going concern when the present distress is history. So the path of VICTORY is found in the way and power of God.

The best defense is ATTACK. Just now the church MUST go FORWARD. If the business of the world has been DOWN, RELIGION MUST GO UP! The church has something to offer which men begin dimly to see that they need. God's people must be aggressive, and the church must make preparation for its own tomorrow. It has just recently been "plowing time". Every farmer knows that to break up a stiff and stubborn sod is one of the most profitable jobs. Where the plow has gone, we can look for new harvests. May we each operate the Gospel Plow faithfully, regardless of the drift of the times, that we may be able to take a few sheaves home and lay them at Jesus' feet.

A WORD ABOUT THE KINGDOM

The idea of the kingdom of heaven ought to be and is a delightful thought for the Christian to study. John the baptist came preaching "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Jesus began his ministry with the same message; a positive declaration that it was present. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." The kingdom of heaven cometh not by observation, he said in words to that effect, but like the wind ye hear the sound thereof but cannot tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth. This message seems to have had a remarkable appeal to the people that heard him gladly. It was an up-to-date message, all Jerusalem came to hear him and the good news; or the gospel of the kingdom, with its "repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

It was uppermost in the teaching of the Master; it was the living issue which he did not hesitate to preach over and over again. Matthew refers to it nearly thirty times. Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and all the material welfare will follow freely. Obviously it was first in his personal ministry, and he sends forth the twelve, instructed thus—"As ye go, preach, saying the kingdom of heaven is at hand." "Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor scrip." "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

Oh, it is great to be even the least in the kingdom. Who shall be the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? he was asked. He took a little child and told them that whosoever should humble himself as this little child the same should be great. "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "I appoint you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me."

On another occasion Jesus said, "There be some of them that stand here which shall not taste of death till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power." Does not this prophecy refer to Pentecost? To the reborn a most delightful and inspiring teaching is that—"The kingdom of heaven is within you." Christ before Pilate said, "My kingdom is not of this world." With prayerful consideration may we not conclude that the kingdom of God is an association of reborn souls? With Jesus our KING? The bloodwashed the subjects? Thus we are assured that the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our LORD to the glory of God the Father.

NEVADA WAKES UP

Some years ago the state of Nevada suffered a delusion that a wide-open state would mean revenue, and also relief from taxes. Divorce and gambling bills were "liberalized" to the extreme. Political leaders were given prominence as advocates of such free and easy unrestraint. It is now evident that the state has tended to poverty rather than prosperity by such legislation. At least three thousand citizens have signed petitions initiating laws to restore the anti-gambling laws. They declare that the wide-open policy

"wrings three quarters of a million dollars every year from Nevada people, with no return but depleted pocketbooks, darkened homes, and wasted lives." This experience never ceases in states or communities which in a corporate capacity accept bribes for permission to commit social and individual wrong. A gambler's paradise always is a hell for honest citizens.—Christian Advocate (Cincinnati).

Matthew

"No war, nor battle's sound,
Was heard the world around;
The spear and shield were high uphung;
The hooked chariot stood
Unstained with hostile blood,
The trumpet spake not to the armed throng;
And kings sat still with awful eye,
As if they surely knew their sovereign Lord was by.

But peaceful was the night
Wherein the Prince of Light
His reign of peace upon the earth began:
The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kissed,
Whispering new joys to the mild ocean,
Who now hath quite forgot to rave,
While birds of calm sit brooding on the charmed wave."

So wrote the Bible-loving and liberty-loving John Milton. He knew that at the Father's behest came the Savior to redeem mankind from the catastrophe of sin. The story, we all know, is wondrously revealed in the Four Gospels.

Out of the center of the Garden of Eden, so we are told, there flowed a river which parted into four heads to freshen the famished earth. Likewise in the Gospel era do we read that the river of life was parceled out to four Evangelists, who watered the North, South, East, and West spiritually and morally. The center of their message was Christ. In him the directions of the compass have no particular meaning save as they are attached to his famous "Go ye." We are creatures of time and space; he is beyond both. Matthew reminds us that Christ is a Ruler rejected and a Redeemer prophesied than whom there shall never be a greater.

Who is Matthew?

Matthew before his conversion was named Levi (Mark 2:14). As a worldling he was a rich publican and tax-gatherer. His vocation was heartily despised because of the trickery and unfairness involved in it. But Levi found Jesus one day—the great day of his life—and followed him to the end of his days (9:9).

After Matthew began to grow in favor with Christ and man, he must have been very humble. He ignores himself continually in his writing, making little mention of himself. In that respect, he is like the Apostle John and everybody sees in that fact a well-developed compliment.

Why Did Matthew Write?

The immediate object of the book of Matthew seems to be the proper identification of Christ to the Jews and to the entire Christian world. Some think this book is solely for Jews, and not for Christians. That is a tragic mistake as the most ordinary reader will know. All Scripture is given for our instruction and edification.

Matthew begins by alleging that Jesus Christ is "the Son of David, the Son of Abraham." His genealogy links Christ with the famous characters of the Jewish race and makes him a fit legal subject for the kingship of David. He further announces that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand" and entrance into it is conditioned upon repentance. The King in this kingdom is the Messiah himself. His purpose in coming is to fulfil and not to destroy the law. This last fact the Jews never could understand. To them the Messiah had to be a prophet who would identify himself with their race fully and without reservation in any particular. Well, Jesus did that in the sense that "he came unto his own," but he could never embrace their traditions and evil doings and still be God. One of their number properly called him "a teacher come from God."

Matthew, moreover, writes to show how the "good news" came into the world through the life, death, and resurrection of Christ.

What Did Matthew Write?

The subject matter of Matthew consists mainly of discourses; it is a record of impressions; its key is found in verse 5:17; its background is strikingly Palestinian; its viewpoint is highly Jewish; its main topic is law; its arrangement is topical; its character is Judaistic; its outline is symmetrical; its aspect is oriental; its outlook is prophetic; its distinctive quality is power; its style is stately; its classification is prophecy; its time pertains to the past mainly, secondly to the present, and thirdly to the future; its key-word is fulfilled; its gospel is one of sacrifice; its Christ is a Man of Sorrows; its office is that of a King; its symbol is that of a lion; its interpretation is that of strength; its portrait is of the Messiah; its picture is profile in appearance; its quotations number 45; its allusions are 42; its pages are 68; its peculiarities are 42; its coincidences are 58; its words in the Revised Version are 23,407. Such is a brief characterization of Matthew's subject matter.

The following outline of Dr. Charles R. Erdman will suffice to show how the Evangelist developed his story of the life and work of the Savior:

- I The Antecedents of the King. Matthew 1:1-4:11.
- II The Proclamation of the King. Matthew 4:12-7:29.
- III The Credentials of the King. Matthew 8:1-9:34.
- IV The Messengers of the King. Matthew 9:35-10:42.
- V The Claims of the King. Matthew 11. 12.
- VI The Parables of the King. Matthew 13.
- VII The Withdrawal of the King. Matthew 14:1-16:12.
- VIII The Person and Work of the King. Matthew 16:13-19:29.
- IX The Servants of the King. Matthew 18-20.
- X The Rejection of the King. Matthew 21-23.
- XI The Prophecies of the King. Matthew 24, 25.
- XII The Trial, Death, and Resurrection of the King. Matthew 26-28.

Where and When Did Matthew Write?

Matthew wrote presumably in Palestine somewhere between the years of 37-60 A. D. The exact date of the writing of this Gospel is not known.

Some Distinctive Features

In connection with the Kingdom theme of the book, it is interesting to note that the word Kingdom occurs 55 times; the words Kingdom of Heaven occur 32 times; the phrase Kingdom of God, 4 times; and Son of David, 7 times.

Of all the Evangelists, Matthew alone records the coming of the Magi; the slaughter of the innocents; the exile to Egypt; the coming of the Pharisees and Sadducees to the baptizing by John; the betrayal by Judas for thirty pieces of silver; the remorse and death of Judas; the dream of Pilate's wife; the watch at the sepulcher; the bribing of the soldiers there; the opening of the graves and the resurrection of the saints; the Sermon on the Mount in all its completeness; the discourse on humility; the last judgment; the idle words to be brought into judgment; the blessing of Christ upon stumbling Peter as well as the great confession which preceded it; the parables of the Tares, the Hid Treasure, the Goodly Pearl, the Draw Net, the Unmerciful Servant, the laborers in the Vineyard, the Two sons, the marriage of the King's Son, the Ten Virgins, the Ten Talents, and the Sheep and the Goats.

Conclusion

What is the judgment of history relative to Matthew's contribution? He has given us over one-fourth of the entire sayings and deeds of the Master. Our loss without him would be great. The supreme question for us is: Will we do as well as did he to spread the "good news" o'er all the earth?

Some Questions About Tithing Answered

By A. N. Fisher

In a recent issue of the Michigan Advocate certain questions relating to the practice of the tithe were submitted with request that they be publicly answered. As an adherent of the system, I venture response.

1. "What do you understand by a tithe; a tenth of what?"

A tenth of income from salary, wages, investments; or from industrial pursuits minus necessary operating expenses. Minus living expenses? No. Minus support of dependent relatives? No.

2. "Is there any distinction between tithing and systematic giving?"

Yes. A man may be systematic in giving any fraction of his income. Moreover many writers emphasize a distinction between giving and paying. Strictly speaking, we do not give the tithe. It is not ours to give. We pay it as belonging to God.

3. "Should all tithes be given to the Church benevolences, or should part be given in a private way?"

The prevailing custom in the region with which the writer is familiar is for each steward to make distribution of the tithe according to the best light he has and being answerable to God for its uses. There are, however, earnest advocates of what is known as "The Storehouse Plan" which places the tithe under control of the church authorities. We think that the majority of tithe payers do not regard the argument in this behalf conclusive.

4. "Name some practical difficulties in the way of tithing."

We know of none worthy of mention. Bunyan's Pilgrim saw lions in the way; but he was admonished: "Keep in the midst of the path and no hurt shall come unto thee." This provision holds concerning all high-ways cast up by the Lord.

5. "Should people tithe when in debt?"

The intelligent tithe-payer regards himself as always in debt. Whatever his fiscal relations with his fellow men, he is always in debt to God, the owner of all with which he is entrusted and who has therefore first claim on his profits. It is a manifest injustice to use God's tenth in squaring accounts with human creditors.

6. "Under what conditions would you consider tithing too much or too little?"

Let us divide the question. "Too much?" It is not easy to designate the precise degree of destitution that will deprive its victim of the privilege and benefit of tithe-paying. Except to say that where there is no income there is no levy. Nor need we give ourselves concern in the premises. The extremely poor are God's poor, and we cannot think of him as being exacting with them. On the other hand, a good way to realize improved conditions is to trust in God and observe all his commands.

"Too little?" Here our task is easier. Proportionate giving is plainly taught in the Scriptures. "As God hath prospered him" answers the question. Any one whom God has favored with ability to give after his tithe has been paid is expected to honor the Lord with his substance by free will offerings proportioned to his prosperity and his just obligations.

7. "Do you consider tithing a wise policy?"

From the point of view of one who regards the tithe a divine institution this is a strange question. We find in Revelation a time law and a money law directing us to set aside one-seventh of the time God affords us and one-tenth of the money, for sacred uses. Is it competent for me to raise the question of "Policy" as to the wisdom of such requirements? God does not consult

THE SINGING IN GOD'S ACRE

By Eugene Field

*Out yonder in the moonlight, wherein God's Acre lies,
Go angels walking to and fro, singing their lullabies,
Their radiant wings are folded, and their eyes are bended low,
As they sing among the beds whereon the flowers delight to grow—
"Sleep, oh, sleep!
The Shepherd guardeth his sheep.
Fast speedeth the night away,
Soon cometh the glorious day:
Sleep, weary ones, while ye may,
Sleep, oh, sleep!"*

*The flowers within God's Acre see that fair and wondrous sight,
And hear the angels singing to the sleepers through the night:
And, lo! throughout the hours of day those gentle flowers prolong
The music of the angels in that tender slumber song—
"Sleep, oh, sleep!
The Shepherd loveth his sheep.
He that guardeth his flock the best
Hath folded them to his loving breast:
So sleep ye now and take your rest,
Sleep, oh, sleep!"*

*From angel and from flower the years have learned that soothing song,
And with its heavenly music speed the days and nights along;
So through all time, whose flight the Shepherd's vigils glorify, God's Acre slumbereth in the grace of that sweet lullaby—
"Sleep, oh, sleep!
The Shepherd loveth his sheep.
Fast speedeth the night away,
Soon cometh the glorious day;
Sleep, weary ones, while ye may,
Sleep, oh, sleep!"*

me in setting forth what is best for human welfare.

Of the tithes, No. Of the tithe, Yes. There were Levitical tithes that were ceremonial and ritual, just as there were Sabbaths of the same order. These fared the fate of all ceremonialism. But the tithe that is pronounced "Holy Unto the Lord" is not distinctively Jewish as the Holy Sabbath is not. No man ever had any right to the tithe in any age of the world. Like prayer tithe-paying was practiced by the patriarchs long before the formation of the Hebrew Church, and like prayer it received distinct commendation from the lips of our Lord. That he who said referring to tithe-paying: "This ought ye to have done," himself practiced the tithe, there is every reason to believe. Leviticus calls new machinery into existence, but it affirms the old principle of the tithe as belonging to God. The New Testament modifies the machinery, but it does not abrogate the principle, it rather affirms it. It is time that the Church has done with the unfounded notion that the tithe was a Judaistic practice that Christianity outlaws.

9. "Under the old law of tithing the government taxes were included in the tithe. Ought our modern civil taxes likewise be counted as part of the tithe?"

In a theocracy all fiscal contributions would necessarily partake of the nature of what we call "taxes." But in modern governments, where Church and State are separate institutions, the tithe that is "Holy unto the Lord" is exclusively devoted to sacred uses.

10. "Is tithing easier for the well-to-do or the poor?"

It is not "easy" for anybody who lacks in love for Jesus Christ and in zeal for his cause; but to the devout whether rich or poor it is a delight. We pity the man who feels it a duty to tithe, but who knows nothing of the joy of the Lord. If he is poor he will shrink from reducing a meager fund; if he is affluent he will deplore a heavy draft upon resources which to him somehow never seem abundant. But as the Christian who pays the tithe as an act of worship finds in the practice a sense of fellowship with the Lord of heaven and earth that renders him oblivious of sacrifice in its attainment. Indeed, he makes no sacrifice, but rejoices in an obedience that is better, and that crowns with the benediction of the divine approval. To the pious, whether indigent or affluent, the holy Sabbath and the holy tithe are privileges of which neither will be willingly denied.

The tithe is no experiment as some of these questions seem to imply. In all lands Christian believers of every name have demonstrated it a present day method of financing the Kingdom that is practicable, equitable and efficient. Nor is it merely a superior financial system, pleasing to God and profitable to the church. Its spiritual results commend it as a divine institution. Next to prayer itself it is the surest means of keeping alive a sense of dependence on God. It is a form of Thanksgiving that affords the best possible expression of heart gratitude. It meets the conditions of a great promise and insures abode beneath the open windows of heaven.

Great progress toward success has been made when we recognize our inability to achieve character apart from God.

DEBORAH

(Lesson for July 16)

Lesson Text: Judges, Chapters 4 and 5;

Golden Text: Psalm 46:1

MONDAY

Deborah a Judge, Judges 4:1-5

For several hundred years there was no established central government in Israel. Each emergency was met as the occasion demanded by some leader or judge whom God raised up for that purpose.

Today's lesson points out that a new crisis had arisen. For twenty years the northern tribes have been oppressed by the Canaanites. Something must be done; no man seems available, but a remarkable woman is at hand, and to her, with her reputed good judgment, is assigned this task.

TUESDAY

Deborah a Leader, Judges 4:6-10

Deborah's wisdom as a leader is manifested in that she did not undertake to do this great task alone. She knew the value of human cooperation, and called to her assistance another leader, Barak, and explained to him the work that was to be done, and at his declaration that he would not undertake the task unless she accompanied him she gladly assented to this condition and the great work was undertaken in a spirit of cooperation.

WEDNESDAY

Deborah a General, Judges 4:11-16

A woman is not considered, as a usual thing, to be possessed with any great degree of understanding of military strategy, and in this case one might be led to believe that Deborah was no exception, and that she simply followed the instructions of Jehovah; but I do not accept that view. I think God intends his servants to use the natural intelligence with which he has endowed them to meet the emergencies of life under his direction or guidance. Deborah must have done this as the result of the conflict with Sisera plainly indicates.

THURSDAY

Deborah's Song, Judges 5:1-11

After such a victory as the children of Israel, under the leadership of Deborah, won over Sisera one might expect the leader as well as the soldiers who wielded spear and sword to give expression in some manner to feelings of great joy. They do this, and Deborah gives expression to her feelings in this wonderful song. She does not understate her own part in the victory, but she gives special reference to the loyalty and bravery of "the leaders and the people who offered themselves WILLINGLY." For this she exclaims "Bless ye Jehovah."

FRIDAY

A Woman of Courage, Esther 4:9-17

When king Ahasuerus fell in with the plans of Haman to destroy the Jews that were in his kingdom consternation reigned in their midst. Mordecai, a leader among them, felt there was but one way by which they might be saved. A plea must be made to the king by one whom he regarded highly, but to enter into the king's presence without a summons to do so might result in the death of the one who was so bold as to do this unheard of thing. Esther was chosen for this task; she hesitated, but upon hearing the explanation of Mordecai she assented to do so.

SATURDAY

Esther Saves her People, Esther 8:1-8

Realizing the seriousness of the occasion Esther called upon the Jews to enter upon a three day fast for her, and then with the memorable words "if I perish, I perish," she undertook the task assigned her. It is needless to add that such devotion and such courage, under the guidance of Jehovah, is sure to win. It did win, and the Jews were saved.

SUNDAY

Jehovah our Strength, Psalm 46:1-11

This is no new discovery, that Jehovah is our strength. We are not treading upon dangerous ground when we declare that every real servant of God has had that demonstrated in his experiences on more than one occasion from the days of the earliest followers of his leading until the present day. The Psalmist was saying nothing new when he said "God is our refuge and strength."

Installation of Officers

By Rev. William J. Barnes, Ph.D.

1. The secretary calls the roll of officers to be installed, and they come to the front of the platform.

Pastor (to the society). "Have these officers been duly elected by your society?" "Do you accept these officers to guide you in the administration of its affairs for the ensuing year?"

Pastor (to the officers). "Do you accept the office to which you have been elected by this society?"

2. The officers will repeat after the pastor the following pledge of allegiance: "Trusting in the Lord Jesus for strength, I humbly promise him and this society that I will be faithful to the extent of my ability to all the known duties and responsibilities devolving upon me as an officer of this organization. I will endeavor to be regular in my attendance, cheerful in my service, large-hearted in my sympathy, open-minded in my planning, patient in the face of trials, persistent in the presence of difficulties, and Christ-like in my fidelity and willingness to sacrifice for the welfare of the cause of Christ and his church. I will seek by example and precept the promotion of Christian fellowship among all of our members, and the fullest extension of the kingdom of God in my own heart, in the —society and church, in the home land, and throughout the world."

3. The officers may be seated, and the members of the organization will rise and repeat the members' pledge of allegiance:

"Having chosen these officers to guide us in the administration of our society, we, its members, do now herewith affirm our own loyalty to the work, and promise that we will give our kindest consideration of the plans, and our heartiest co-operation in the service, which may be suggested to us. We acknowledge our duty, and declare our determination to be sympathetic in our attitude toward our officers, to pray for them diligently, and to share with them in the inspiring responsibilities which the conduct of the work and service of this organization requires. To this end we will joyfully seek to build up our society, ever reaching forth to a higher standard of efficiency and maintaining harmonious relations with our officers and with each other, and with every other branch of the church of which we form a part."

4. All rise for a dedication prayer and the Lord's Prayer in concert.—C. E. World, Easton, Pennsylvania.

FAR-REACHING LOYALTIES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

To Christ. His word, his will, his spirit, to be supreme.

To the Church. Increased devotion to the interests of the local church and denomination, including attendance at church services, cooperation with other organizations, participation in denominational enterprises, etc.

To Missions. Fifty-per-cent increase in number of mission-study classes. Fifty-per-cent increase in gifts to mission work.

To Stewardship. Fifty-per-cent increase in number of members of the Tenth Legion. (Those who promise to devote at least one-tenth of their income to Christian work).

To Christian Endeavor. Fifty-per-cent increase in the number of Christian Endeavor societies. (By grading the societies, by organizing in neighboring churches, etc.)

To Christian Unity. Special attention given to cooperative enterprises which bring together the denominations and promote a spiritual unity among Christ's followers.—Selected.

The commissioner of education of the State of Maine in an article in The United States Daily, stresses the importance of music in the school curriculum. He points out that music is not only cultural in value, but is intimately connected with everyday life; that music possesses a spiritual value which cannot be neglected; that the increase in leisure time is making necessary new outlets and activities for young and old alike; and that the possibilities of the study of music as an avocation have not yet been realized.

The Marching Orders of the Church

Romans 10:9-17; Matthew 28:18-20.

"Life up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest" (John 4:35).

The great commission of our Lord Jesus Christ is the marching orders for every child of God. The church is composed of individual believers; therefore the commission is both to the individual believer and to the churches as such.

I. The Definition of the Missionary Enterprise (Luke 19:10).

1. It comes from God. Christ was God manifest in the flesh.

2. It is personal, "Go ye." It is not optional.

3. The field is all the world. "The field is the world" (Matt. 13:38).

4. The missionary message, "The Gospel."

II. A Look at the Field.

1. It is white unto harvest. There are 100,000,000 in India who have never heard the Gospel. There are 300,000,000 in China who have not been evangelized. There are many millions of poor lost souls for whom Christ died in other parts of the earth who have never had an opportunity to accept Christ as Savior.

2. The laborers are few. Prayer closets are closed. Churches are not praying for the lost of the world. Church members are not giving of their substance for the support of missionaries.

3. The heathen are not satisfied with their religion of superstition. Doors are open all over the world. The depression has caused the multitudes to be more receptive to the Gospel of salvation.

Two hundred years ago a church of the Moravians in Germany under Pastor Harms turned itself into a missionary society and in forty years that one church sent out and supported 350 missionaries.

III. The Base of Missions (Acts 13:2).

1. The home church is the base of missions. When the churches cease to be missionary they die spiritually and cease to be anything more than a worldly entertainment society. No power. No life. "The Egyptians did so with their enchantments." The world can imitate to perfection the work that is being done by many churches today.

2. The home church must win the lost at home; teach and train them for mission work; send them to a lost and dying world; support them with prayers and money while they take the Gospel of salvation to a lost world.

3. Christ in his high priestly prayer said: "As thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them." Brethren, we are sent ones. Every one of us is a debtor to the whole wide world. We owe the world the Gospel of Christ's redemption. "If ye love me, keep my (words)." Out of love to Christ and a lost world for which he shed his precious Blood we must hasten with the Gospel of Redemptive Love.

4. We can do it by praying. We can do it by going. We can do it by preaching the Word and by teaching it. We can do it by personal testimony. We can do it by giving at least a tenth of our income to the cause of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. God help us, every one of us, to do it in as many ways as we possibly can. The time is short. The field is white. The laborers are few. The grain is wasting. Millions are dying each year without hope. The Savior pleads: "Give ye them to eat." The Father wills it. Christ has commissioned it. The Holy Spirit urges it. If we are true to Christ we will do it.

Missions is the heart of Christianity. Our Christianity may well be tested by our interest in missions. What kind do you have?

"Go ye." "I am with you." "Here am I; send me."

"But drops of grief can ne'er repay,

The debt of love I owe;

Here, Lord, I give myself to Thee,

'Tis all that I can do."

—J. C. Sisemore.

Horrors in Russia

Extracts from a letter, published in the European Harvest Field, describing the sufferings of God's people at the hands of the goddess Soviet:

"I am so grieved to tell you that the lot of our dear ones in Russia is unspeakably sad. My dear old father-in-law and mother-in-law had to leave their little house again—only two rooms which my sister and her husband had built for them. This wee cottage was made of clay bricks, and they were only allowed to occupy it for one winter. Then they were banished to Siberia without any reason being given. In the meantime they had taken our parents into these two rooms along with two other relatives. But it was not long before they were all banished—only to be sent back again after two or three days! About a fortnight ago we received the heart-rending news that they had again been driven out of their house and they were now located in a cellar formerly used as a poultry pen. And they are there now, without heat and without food.

Herded Like Beasts

"Of course this cellar was never intended as a human habitation. There was room for about thirty fowls. It is about thirteen feet long and seven feet wide. An aunt of ours (mother of eleven children) who had escaped from prison, with one of her sons, had also taken refuge in the cellar. Last week we had a letter to say that my sister-in-law is now ill with typhoid, and that mother has had a stroke. The great need, distress, lack of nourishment, and all the privations have made them all ill; and yet praise and thanksgiving ring through the letters written in this cellar.

"The Soviet has driven many families out of their homes and used them for their own purposes. If you can, in any way, rescue us from starvation and death, then do it, for God's sake. We have only enough of the rice left, which you sent us, to make some soup twice—and then what? Our little one-year-old Lenchen cries continually for lack of food. Up to the present she could always have one glass of milk daily, but now we can not get any more. And the pound of bread that they used to get daily for a family of seven is now given to them only every other day. My sister writes that her heart nearly breaks when she sees the pleading eyes of her little one. Again and again the older children keep asking, "Mother, when shall we have enough to be really satisfied?"

Monstrous Cruelty

"Our men folk are compelled to work in icy swamps and are required to fell twenty-seven trees a day. My oldest nephew, eleven years of age, is in charge of a group of nine boys, and each boy must fell ten birch trees daily. Another nephew also has a group of nine boys to supervise. These have the task of chopping off the branches from the trees felled by the first group. Then the old women bind the branches into bundles of fodder for the Soviet officials' cattle.

"The children often sink in the snow-mire up to their armpits. It is a marshy district where the snow and ice never quite melt even in summer, and last winter the thermometer went down to 42 degrees below zero. The workmen's legs are full of sores, and being so ill-fed, the sores will not heal.

"Of course they have no Sunday, and no divine service. Oh, let us ask the Lord to shorten the days of their sufferings according to his promise, for his elect's sake."—Moody Monthly.

I Believe in Giving

I believe in giving because I believe that the law of giving has been written into the book of life as indelibly as other natural laws. I can not study the world about me and the people in it without observing that well-being—whether physical, mental, or spiritual—depends quite as much upon what is given out as upon what is taken in.

I believe in giving because much has been given me. I dare not think how meagre my life would be without the countless ones who have given to make it rich and full.

I believe in giving because I believe that life's good things were meant for all. I know that others covet for their loved ones the same comforts that I covet for mine. Yet for many these things are impossible save as I, and others like me, give.

I believe in giving because only so can I be my greatest possible self. But if my life is to count in only that little realm which I may touch personally, I am indeed small and insignificant in such a big world. When I touch some one by giving, and that one touches another, and so on, I touch hands with all mankind.

Finally, I believe in giving because now and then I have caught the reflection of that radiant sort of joy for which my very soul cries out—and always it has been in the eyes of some one for whom living is giving. Therefore I would give.—Used in Community Chest Service in Wichita, Kansas.

A Chinese Layman on the Pearl Buck Case

regarded as a bore and back-number, but he was a good man and possessed tremendous influence

Mrs. Buck may have been quite correct about some of the missionaries in her own particular class, that is, college professors. But she was entirely wrong in making general statements. The idea that a missionary working among primitive tribesmen in the distant interior, for example, should possess a Ph.D. degree is pure nonsense. College degrees would be wasted in such a community, but they would be highly necessary in Mrs. Buck's field. Considered from this point of view the Jesuits owe much of their success to their adaptability. They sent business men to work among business men, college men to work among educated people, scientists to work among scientists, and a laborer to work among laborers. Much of the troubles which occidental missionaries are now experiencing is due largely to the fact many missionaries are not a part of their communities and really know little about what is going on around them. Mrs. Buck, who was born and reared in China, does know a great deal about the Chinese people and their problems. Her books indicate this. But we frankly doubt whether she knows very much about missionaries, or the real missionary problems. Her troubles began when she started to lecture her own craftsmen on how their work should be conducted. And particularly at this time when the rank and file of mission workers are harassed by changed conditions in their various fields and equally harassed by changed conditions adversely affecting religious life and thought in their home occidental communities.

And what this informed correspondent said about Mrs. Buck's lack of sufficient information to enable her to speak intelligently about missionaries and their problems, some of us in the homeland would say about her ability to speak with regard to matters of Christian faith,—either that, or else she has lost that vital element of faith that drives men and women forth to proclaim to a dying world Jesus Christ as its only sufficient and divine Lord and Savior.

Resolutions of Respect

The Ladies' Aid Society of Mt. Olive Brethren church adopted the following resolutions on the death of Loula F. Michael, May 8, 1933.

Whereas it has pleased an all-wise and merciful God to call Sister Loula F. Michael, our co-laborer and friend, from earthly labor to reward, therefore be it resolved:

1st. That we bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well and say, "Thy will be done."

2nd. That our Society shall truly miss her pleasant face and cheerful ways in our meetings; but since she died in faith unflinching, we will not mourn as those without hope, but will anticipate meeting her some day in that happy home in Heaven.

3rd. That we tender to her kind and beloved husband, and two little girls, also her parents and brothers and sisters, our heartfelt sympathy and pray that God's sustaining grace may be their comfort in this their sad bereavement.

4th. That these resolutions be placed on the minutes of our Society, a copy sent to the family, and one to our church paper.

MRS. WM. MILLER, President,
MRS. LUTHER BAKER, Treasurer,
MRS. RUSSELL BAKER, Secretary,

Thank You

I want to express my appreciation for the fine conference we all enjoyed at Dayton. I say enjoyed. This means, of course, the conference and not the intense heat. But I believe we were privileged to hear some of the best addresses that we have heard for many a day. They were all good and we thoroughly enjoyed them. But we did consider the Bible lectures to be the high peak of the conference, and among some of the best we have ever listened to. I see no reason why our national conference needs to go outside of our own denomination for speakers for the Bible hour. I also want to express my appreciation for the fine way we were taken care of by the local church. We could not have been looked after and cared for any better. Their concern was for us while we were their guests. They did not hesitate at any time to do their best for our comfort. Some of us who had the privilege of going through the National Cash Register Company's factory feel indebted to Mr. Kline for his time in taking us through the factory, and the many nice things he did for us that our stay in Dayton might be pleasant. Again we say, Thank you all.

C. A. STEWART.

Praying should be as natural as breathing, the swift upward look for guidance and protection amid the perplexities and dangers of every day.

THE AXIOMS OF CHRISTIAN CIVIL GOVERNMENT

The Christian conception of civil government, while seldom absent from the consciousness of the followers of Jesus Christ in any age has shown a greater fluctuation in form, extent, power and expression than perhaps any other phase of Christianity unless it be the supremacy of Christ in the domain of philosophy.

But through all its changing form and expression it has left the precipitate of ideas that has taken the form of political maxims which are steadily becoming the basis of the governments of the world. Not all of them are equally accepted yet all of them are slowly approaching the axiomatic state in the sphere of political science.

A simple enumeration of them may be helpful in shaping political thought and life. They are as follows:

1. Jesus Christ is the source of all political authority. The supreme ruler of all nations.
2. The highest good of the whole community is the one end of all civil government.
3. The people of a country are the chief item of its wealth.
4. Equality in rights and opportunities must be guaranteed to all.
5. Aggressive and destructive force is self destructive.
6. Only when it coincides with the law of God is it true that vox populi vox Dei est.
7. The law of nations should coincide with the law of God and govern in all international relations.

Christianity did not originate all of these axioms, but it either bore them within its fold or adopted them from the world's best outside its own life and it has purified and preserved and applied them all.

He who allows these maxims to shape his political life will never go far astray in either his ethics, politics, economics or his social science. Every ill that plagues modern states can be traced to a violation of one or more of these political maxims. Every real political advance grows out of an expanding conception of them and a growing respect for them. No true success for either individual statesmen or nations is ever achieved by ignoring or defying them.

The hypocrisy charged against many modern statesmen grows out of the acceptance of these principles and maxims as axiomatic, coupled with a failure to comprehend their scope and application. The weakness of many lies in picking and choosing as to which of them shall shape their lives and which may be ignored. A Gladstone, a Lincoln, a Wilson is simply a man of generous capacity who has accepted all of these axioms and comprehended a little more fully their application than the ordinary run of men.

Political idealism is the comprehension of how and where these axioms should be applied, coupled with a hopeful determination to achieve their application in some sphere of political life not yet reduced to law and order by them. "Ideologues," as Napoleon sneeringly called this type, he both hated and feared but they are dangerous and obnoxious only to the transgressor and defier of these laws.

The hope of democracy lies in the multiplication of this type of citizen. The hope and prayer of every true patriot is "O Lord, give us men who can and do carry these maxims in their hearts and are not ashamed of them, however much the world may scorn them." "God's Fools" they have been called, but they are the political salt of the earth.—Christian Statesman.

WHO DID IT?

*Who made the stars look out at night?
Who gave the sun his heat and light?
Who framed the moon so clear and bright?
'Twas God!*

*Who gave each little bird a wing,
And taught it how to fly and sing,
And make the woods with music ring?
'Twas God!*

*Who made each pretty blade of grass
O'er which my little footsteps pass
Wear drops of dew, like beads of glass?
'Twas God!*

*Who filled the salt and stormy sea
With water and with shells for me,
And fishes bright, that bound with glee?
'Twas God!*

*Who shaped my little hands and feet,
And warms me with his light and heat,
And gives me clothes and food to eat?
'Twas God!*

*Who built a happy place on high,
A glorious city in the sky,
Where all may go, e'en such as I?
'Twas God!*

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

automobile in the high altitude of these western mountains. He was quite disgusted with the action of his car, one of the smaller makes. "I don't know what is the matter with it," he said. "It never ran like this before." He had not learned that the higher the altitude the less power a motor develops. At ten thousand feet there is often a loss of 40 per cent of the power.

In spiritual matters the rule works differently. The higher you get the more power you will have. Positionally, the believer is seated with Christ in heavenly places. Experimentally, he sometimes lives on the plane of the Dead Sea. For such Paul wrote, Col. 3:1—"If then ye were raised together with Christ (your position), seek the things that are above (your experience)."

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE SKABILLIKAN SPECTACLES*

By Robert Hugh Morris

This isn't a story in which the hero is a prince, nor is the heroine a beautiful swan who turns out to be a fairy. It is about a very strange pair of spectacles! Did you ever hear of such a thing as a pair of spectacles being the hero—so to speak—of a story? If it is ridiculous to think of a story about spectacles, what will you say when you learn that the spectacles in this story are called "Skabillikan Spectacles?"

* From "The Prince and The Pig's Gate," a collection of children's story sermons, used by permission of Harper and Brothers, New York City, publishers.

These are the strangest spectacles in the world. They are more uncanny than those X-rays which looked right through your cheeks, and showed your teeth and jawbone that time your dentist wanted to know something about your teeth which he couldn't see with his spectacles, and so sent you to Dr. Roberts to have him photograph you by a light which looked like denatured lightning.

Another strange thing about the Skabillikan Spectacles is that they can not be seen except when looked for by eyes which already have on a pair of Skabillikans. But with these spectacles, you can see what a thing really is. An apple, seen through the Skabillikans, shows whether it is sour or sweet, green or ripe, mellow or hard.

In fact, the Skabillikan Spectacles would be most useful to mother when she goes out marketing. Just think! No one can deceive her by selling her worm-eaten fruit, stale nuts, tough meat. She could see right through those things!

Put on a pair of these wonderful "specs" and go out calling on your friends. You will have some surprises. You might even be shocked. One of the first boys you meet is "Butter" Benson. "Butter" is round-faced and jolly-looking. "Butter" is generally eating something. He is a pleasant-looking boy. But when you put on the Skabillikans and look at him through them, you may be so astonished you will fall in your tracks. For what you see is not a fat little boy, but an animal with a big round body and four short legs, and a long snout, and a little curly tail! An animal which grunts and squeals for all the world like a pig!

The next one you meet is Bessie Blue. Everyone says that Bessie is "just too pretty for anything." She often wears a dainty dress, and a hat that would make even a bluebird look brighter. Blue stockings and the "sweetest" little shiny slippers complete her costume. While you are admiring Bessie, expecting any minute to see the bees come buzzing around her pretty lips, looking for honey as they do from other flowers besides a little girl's pink lips, you put up the Skabillikans. You are sure you will see angel-wings on those dear, dainty little shoulders; and that the slippers will be seen to be golden sandals with wings on them. Now for the look! With the Skabillikans over your eyes, you turn to gaze upon the real Bessie Blue. But she has disappeared. You can scarcely believe it but you can't see her. If she had been a bubble—all shiny for a second or two, and then gone to nothing at a finger's touch—she could not more quickly or more completely have disappeared. A moment ago she was here—all pink and white of face and hands, all gold and halo of head and hair, all sky-blue of eyes and dress—a fairy, fresh from fairyland; and now, in two seconds she is gone.

On a twig of a little tree near by, chattering, squeaking, and admiring itself, sits—a blue jay! That is all you see—a vain, heartless, chattering, scolding jay: the bird which looks like a winged sunbeam and sounds like a sick door-hinge! The bird which cheers the eye, but is a thief of other birds' nests and of other birds' eggs! A jay! That is what the Skabillikans show Bessie Blue to be.

You go on making your visits, and you continue to meet with surprises. Some of your friends look more real and true seen through Skabillikans, but many are shown to be so much like certain birds, or even animals, that you want to shout with laughter or else run away in fear. Some seem to be forever talking, and, when looked at through the spectacles, they show up as parrots. The boys who are never happy unless quarrelling and fighting all the time and boasting of how strong they are, the Skabillikans show to be roosters, terriers, cats, or some other kind of noisy, quarrelsome bird or animal. Some are so petty with it all you can think of nothing but always-fighting English sparrows.

But happily only a few of your young friends disappoint you when you examine them through the Skabillikans. Many of them are fine little gentlemen and sweet little ladies.

That's the kind every one of us wants to be, so that when people who wear Skabillikans look at us they will not say, "What vain, what silly, what noisy, what quarrelsome girls and boys!" but, "What sensible, what polite, what courteous, what friendly, what lend-a-hand-like, what charming young people!"

Business Manager's Corner

Apples of Gold

When the writer of the book of Proverbs wrote, "A word spoken in due season is like apples of gold in net work of silver" (IV, marginal reading), he voiced a truth so simple in itself that it is entirely overlooked by entirely too many followers of the lowly Nazarine; and thus great opportunities for good are passed by unimproved. But last week we received a letter that is so much in keeping with the quoted proverb that we produce it in its entirety, hoping it may do others the good that it did us.

"Dear Brethren: Times are moving along at a rapid gait, so fast that we can not keep up with the crowd. We have no radio, no automobile, not even an airplane; but we are thankful to our Heavenly Father that we have a small home that we can call our own, and thank God that, at our age, he has given us our health and physical strength to care for what we have. Our income is small, but we had a small amount deposited in the bank for emergency, and they are still holding it, I suppose for their own use, as they will not let us have it.

"Sometime ago we had saved up two dollars that we intended to send to you for the renewal of our Brethren Evangelist, but one of our neighbor's house burned down, and one of the boys had just graduated from high school, and it burned his suit of clothes, so we gave him one of the dollars and spent the other for groceries. But after all the Lord has made it possible for us to meet this obligation, and while we are thankful to our Heavenly Father we are thankful also to The Brethren Publishing Company for bearing with us and still sending us the Evangelist, as we would feel lost without it. May the Divine blessing rest upon the Brethren church that it may continue to be a blessing to humanity as it has been in the past. Fraternally"

Another Expression of Interest

A few days ago a brother from Indiana sent us a check to cover the amount of his past due subscription, and included with it an additional amount of two dollars with the request that we send the paper to some one whom we think would be benefited by it.

This brother is so tied up with duties to the public he is serving that he feels he can not give enough time to the reading of the paper himself to justify continuing taking it for himself, but he is willing to have it do more good somewhere else, thus he subscribes for some one else who is not able to subscribe for himself. We feel this brother is mistaken in the thought that he can not find sufficient time to give to the reading of his church paper to justify his continuing to remain a subscriber; but we appreciate his interest and his generosity in making it possible for another to do what he feels he has not time to do.

There are many members in the Brethren church, without income, who would appreciate having The Evangelist sent to them by some one who may have just A LITTLE more than their own personal needs require, and we would be glad to receive two dollars for this purpose from any of our members.

The Subscription Price

Occasionally we are told that our price of two dollars per year for the Evangelist is too high. This statement is made of course by those who do not understand. The truth is every yearly subscription to The Brethren Evangelist costs The Publishing Company a great deal more than two dollars to produce. Every week there comes to our office an exchange from another publishing house that is serving a membership of more than one million people. This paper is now a sixteen page paper, just as The Evangelist is, but the price of it is THREE dollars per year in order to meet the cost of its production.

We would appreciate very much having about five hundred of our subscribers renew their subscriptions within thirty days.

Paying Accounts

The month of July closes the financial year for the Publishing House and then we must make out our Annual Report for Conference.

We do not recall that we ever had as large accounts carried on our books as we have at this time. We realize that most every church and Sunday school is having some difficulty in meeting home expenses, and we have all manner of sympathy for them, but it seems that a large portion of this difficulty in an accumulated form is passed on to us, which is too much for us to bear. So we very humbly implore all our schools and churches as well as all individuals and subscribers who are indebted to us for either large or small amounts to make payment as soon as possible.

Conference Minutes

The pastors will remember the last General Conference voted that one thousand copies of the minutes should be published and distributed among the churches according to membership, and that each church should become responsible in a financial way for the cost of the minutes.

The minutes were printed and distributed among ONE HUNDRED SIXTEEN pastors with an explanation enclosed with each package and a request that they should remit twenty-five cents each for the number received.

To date SIXTY-THREE pastors or churches have made remittance, leaving FIFTY-THREE unaccounted for. Last week we mailed statements to these fifty-three, and we trust that for the sake of General Conference they will make prompt remittance. This is not the action of the Publishing House, but the action of General Conference. Please give heed.

IN THE SHADOW

WOLFORD—Emma Bruchmans Wolford, daughter of Eleonor and Julius Bruchmans, was born in Machlin, West Prussia, Germany. At the age of fourteen years, accompanied by her parents, she came to America. The greater part of her early life was spent near Arlington, Ohio. She had been in failing health for the past few years. After a brief but very serious illness, she fell peacefully asleep in her Lord, on June 12th, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Park, at Arlington, Ohio.

On September 16th, 1884, she was united in marriage to Fiedler Wolford. He preceded her in death September 25, 1913. The following children survive their parents: Mrs. Lillie Park, Arlington, Ohio; Mrs. Ethel Swanger, Modesto, California; Mrs. Violet Webber, Forest, Ohio; Mr. Merton Wolford, Williamstown, Ohio; Mrs. Carrie Oppelt, Avon Lake, Ohio; Mr. Harley Wolford, Stockton, California, and John Wolford, Williamstown, Ohio. There are also nineteen grandchildren. Besides these of the near relatives there are also three sisters: Mrs. Peter Baumunk, Postoria, Ohio; Mrs. Herman Marohn, Arlington, Ohio, and Mrs. A. I. Cook, Detroit, Michigan.

In early life she united with the Lutheran church. Later she transferred her letter of membership to the Williamstown Brethren church, where she remained a devout and faithful member until the call to another world was answered. The funeral services were held in the Williamstown Brethren church, and the body was interred in the Eagle Creek Cemetery. The services were in charge of the writer.

BRETHREN EVANGELIST

THE NEW STANDARD OF CONDUCT

Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you.

Bless them which curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you.

As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.

Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful.

Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven.

PRaise Him in The Heights"

This is being written at Jenny Lake in the Grand Teton National Park, a section of Wyoming only recently added to our national parks. It really consists of a range of mountains, said to be the most spectacular in America. I have not seen all of our mountains, but these Tetons surpass in certain respects any I have seen. The only ones comparable are certain parts of the Canadian Rockies and the Sierra Nevadas seen from the east side.

If you have never seen mountains you should begin with the Tetons. Often eastern people are disappointed with the Rocky Mountains. The ascent is so gradual that the height can not be appreciated. The Tetons will fulfill all your expectations. The great Jackson Hole Valley is in the neighborhood of 6000 feet high, and the Tetons rise with startling abruptness nearly 8000 feet above the valley. There are no foothills, no gradual ascent, but the lift is so steep on the east side that rock slides are almost an every day occurrence. We are camped on the east shore of Jenny Lake. Across the Lake, perhaps two miles distant, a great peak rises directly out of the water. If you came in here at night and woke in the morning to see the mighty and jagged peaks towering above your head, outlined in grey rock against the bluest sky you ever saw, streaked with snow-filled ravines and canyons, you might rub your eyes and wonder if you were dreaming.

AN Outdoor Geological Laboratory

It is unfortunate that every teacher of geology can not bring his class out here to see many of the things he tries to teach out of books. The entire Teton Range is a perfect example of lifted or block mountains with the steep face of the fault on the east side, and the long gradual slope on the west side. At the foot of nearly every canyon on the east nestles a little glacial lake. Jenny Lake is one of these. Our car is parked on the moraine deposited by the original glacier and which dammed the canyon. High on one of the peaks you may see a glacier still cutting its way backward slowly. Mount Moran has a perfect example of a dike, an upthrust of the original rock. The dike is black rock and looks from here to be about the width of your hand. It is actually 125 feet wide. At one place you may see the original limestone which once covered the top of the range, but is now eroded away for the most part. It is hard to believe that this limestone thousands of feet above your head was once the floor of a great sea, formed by the skeletons of minute animals which died, generation after generation, through countless years. Then the rock was heaved up by the mysterious forces of which geology tries to tell.

BEFORE the Mountains were brought forth"

The Bible writers will tell you that God made the mountains, and they knew what they were talking about. Geology is a fascinating and profitable study, but geology without God is like a headless statue, like trying to account for a painting without an artist. I sincerely hope that all who read these few lines will sometime have an opportunity to acquire some knowledge of this branch of science. But if you cannot know both, remember it is better to know God than Geology. The artist is more important than his work, the inventor than his inventions.

THE Eternity of Jesus

In the shadow of these mountains, built up by the processes of the ages, the 90th Psalm comes to mind.

"Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place

In all generations.

Before the mountains were brought forth

Or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world,

Even from everlasting to everlasting

Thou art God."

Our Lord is not one of these gods who have come up of late. Before the birth of the mountains, before there was an earth or a universe, Jesus was God. "He is before all things, and by him all things hold together" (Col. 1:17 A. R. V. margin). Jesus, the One who was born of the virgin in Bethlehem, is the Lord of the 90th Psalm. By His power the mountains were built up. All science can do is observe the working of the process and describe it. But the source of the power man cannot know by research. God has revealed himself in his Son. Apart from Christ man dwells in darkness. He watches the machine at work, he sees the wheels go round, but who made it and what the power that makes it run, he does not know, except as he comes to know God in Christ.

THE Fourth in Jackson, Wyoming

Needing some groceries, we drove from the Teton Park to Jackson, a distance of about 20 miles. We almost forgot that the date was the 4th of July. Jackson, a little town of 500, was celebrating the birth of the nation. We drove in about 5 o'clock P. M., stayed an hour and left, being glad to get away from "civilization" back to nature. I saw more drunken men that one hour than during the last ten years. In justice to the inhabitants of Jackson, who were courteous and hospitable, it should be said that the drunks for the most part were members of the government conservation camps. They had come to Jackson from various directions, by the truck load, to celebrate.

As we sat in the car by the side of the public square, one man suddenly got the bright idea that he must ride a horse. So he staggered up to the rack where a cowboy had hitched two horses, one saddled. He managed to get astride the latter without disaster, and the horse being patient, trotted about quietly with his drunken load. Dissatisfied apparently with the lack of excitement, he next proceeded to unsaddle the one horse with the intention of saddling the other. This horse endured the drunken fumbling for a while, then reared and knocked the man down. It looked as if he would be seriously injured, but the horse apparently had more sense than the man, and planted his front feet astride the man's body. A group of his companions, not quite so drunk, rescued him, and then had to hold him to prevent him from attempting to ride the horse again.

I thought of the ass which had more sense than Balaam.

I am concluding this contribution in Pocatello, Idaho. We left the Teton park yesterday, crossing the Teton Pass west into the State of Idaho. Unless you have a good motor and a stout heart, do not attempt this pass. At the top the road rises 2,800 feet in four miles, the hardest pull in my experience in mountain driving. But the view looking eastward from the summit was well worth the effort.

In driving a road like this, you do not have to make several mistakes to come to disaster. Just one slip of the hand or foot is enough. The driver who makes one slip will plunge just as far as the man who makes half a dozen.

Sin, it occurs to me, is like that. The soul which makes one moral blunder is just as much lost as the one which breaks all the laws in the moral category. No use saying it isn't fair to damn the soul for one sin. You may as well complain that it isn't fair for the force of gravitation to pull your automobile down the mountain chasm just because your foot slipped once. The laws of the moral universe are just as inexorable as the laws of nature.

Better commit the journey of life to Christ, the God of both the moral and natural worlds. He is able to salvage the wrecks of time and guide you safely over the heights into the Mountain of God.

Tonight we shall be in Salt Lake City, the place founded by men following the "Light of Delusion."

Chicago scrip, worth $25,000,000, which the city clearing house had engraved during the banking holiday has been cut up and burned. The cost of making the scrip was $40,000, but the need for it was removed by the provision of the treasury department for the new federal reserve "asset" currency. The money was in five, ten, twenty, and fifty dollar denominations.

The New Commandment of Christ

"A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another" (John 13:34). It sounds easy when we are with congenial folk, but in the presence of ugly dispositioned people these words come to us as a bitter pill. We shrink from the obligation because it imposes a hard task, but there is nothing we are in more need of facing up to sincerely than just that. There is nothing that will more effectively solve our problems and clear up misunderstandings than the possession of genuine love in our hearts for one another. And there is nothing that is more distinctively Christian, for Jesus says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35). No other duty did our Lord stress more strongly than that, and if we should all—ministers and laity, alike—endeavor to take it seriously, our relations in every way would be much more happy.

Selfishness and Jealousy

We do claim to love one another, after a fashion, but if our love were but more genuine, there would be less of selfishness and self-seeking, less of jealousy and unkind feelings. Moffatt translates Paul as saying, "Love is very patient, very kind. Love knows no jealousy; love makes no parade, gives itself no airs, is never rude, never selfish, never irritated, never resentful" (1 Cor. 13:4, 5). Paul is talking about the real thing, and not merely an inconstant sentiment. There is the trouble; our professed love is all too often but a fitful emotion. We give way to selfish thoughts and feelings, and these are destructive of the finer qualities of the soul. We make idols of self-interest and waste the gold of character. G. B. Cheever says: "As a man goes down in self, he goes up in God." We go down in self, into jealousy, envy, bitterness and other such "fruits of the flesh," and all sorts of difficulties loom up in the imagination. As one Cervantes has said, "Jealousy sees things always with magnifying glasses, which makes little things large, of dwarfs giants, of suspicions truths." Trouble breaks out like a contagious disease, and no one is secure from it. The only cure is a flooding of the soul with the sunshine of God's love. That is the only thing that can counteract the ravages of self-love.

One Another's Weaknesses

Again, we say we have love one for another, yet we find it hard to bear with one another's weaknesses. Paul, by inspiration, enjoined: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ" (Gal. 6:2). To what law did he refer? It was the self-same law we are discussing, the law of love—"love one another." The Apostle was dealing with the important and delicate subject of the proper treatment of the faults and inconsistencies of our fellow-Christians. And he found the solution in the "new commandment" that Christ gave to his disciples, who were both full of faults and finding faults in one another. Christian people are all faulty, but very often they are most faulty who are finding most fault with others. That very act has that effect. The devout Fenelon once said: "So long as we are full of self we are shocked at the faults of others. Let us think often of our own sin, and we shall be lenient of the sins of others." That helps wonderfully. It is sobering to think of self, that lone individual so full of weaknesses and inconsistencies and with a soul to lose or save. It subdues the critical spirit and helps one to be patient and forbearing of the faults of others. In every one of us there is sure to be something that will be a hindrance or a burden to the Christian progress and service of the others. Humbly and with kindness and tact we must seek to help one another to overcome the faults and avoid such conduct as would provoke faults, remembering that we are all sheep of the same flock, branches of the same vine, and members of the same body, in Christ. Thus we shall "bear one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ."

Unwilling to Forgive

Yet again we insist that we do love one another, but we are miserably slow and unwilling to forgive one another, and to take a new and benevolent attitude toward those who have wronged us. But we must face the fact that it is not genuine love that animates our hearts when we are unforgiving of one another, and we are far from walking in the will and way of Christ. Jesus forgave those who wronged him, even those who caused his death, and his heart was full of love for them and for all men. And it is the will and requirement of our Lord that we shall forgive one another. Hear him: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive men not their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses" (Matt. 6:14, 15). And Paul admonishes: "And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you" (Eph. 4:32). "Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye" (Col. 3:13; James 2:13). Nothing is more God-like nor more ennobling than love that is willing truly to forgive. E. H. Chapin has written: "Never does the human soul appear so strong and noble as when it forgives revenge, and dares to forgive injury." And what joy it brings! No one can understand it until he has from the heart forgiven some one. As Lavater has said, "He who has not forgiven an enemy has never yet tasted one of the most sublime enjoyments of life."

Forgiveness Wins

And he who loves strongly enough to sincerely forgive, even an enemy, has the power to win his enemy and, through intercession, to save his soul from death. History records that Peter Miller, one of the Brethren leaders of the Ephrata Movement, in Pennsylvania, seventy miles from Philadelphia, and who also was a school friend of George Washington, was the means of saving from death and winning to Christ, a bitter enemy and persecutor. For many years Peter Miller had endured abuse from a man named Michael Wittman, who did all in his power to distress this servant of God, even to the point of inflicting personal violence, and publicly denouncing the preacher. Wittman eventually became involved in treason and was arrested and sentenced to death. No sooner was sentence pronounced than Peter Miller set out on foot to Philadelphia to see General Washington, to intercede for the life of Wittman. It is said that Washington replied: "No, Peter, this case is too black, I cannot give you the life of your friend." "My friend!" he said, "he is the bitterest enemy I ever had." "What!" rejoined Washington, "you have walked seventy miles to save the life of your enemy? That, in my judgment, puts the matter in a different light. I will grant you his pardon."

The pardon was made out and Miller at once proceeded on foot to the place, fifteen miles distant, where the execution was to take place on the afternoon of that same day. He arrived just as the man was being carried to the scaffold, Wittman seeing Miller in the crowd remarked: "There is old Peter Miller. He has walked all the way from Ephrata to have his revenge gratified today by seeing me hung." These words were scarcely spoken before Miller handed him his pardon and his life was spared. Preacher and persecutor walked back the seventy miles to Ephrata together. The man was melted by the pardon and was soundly converted. Peter Miller baptized him and the criminal was brought to the joy of salvation. What power there is in true forgiveness and the love that is willing and courageous, not to seek revenge, but to return good for evil and to do good to those who despitefully use them! Let us seek to rise in strength and power to the glory to which Christ calls us up.

Words of Appreciation

The Evangelist staff is encouraged not infrequently by the receipt of such kind words of appreciation as the following, taken from two recent communications:

A well-known physician in one of our congregations, writes under date of July 4th, in part as follows:

"Dear Brother Baer:

"I have been spending part of the day reading the Evangelist and I find it so good that I think I must tell you about it.

"There are several timely and extremely good articles in it, especially your editorial, the articles by R. F. Porte, W. I. Duker, Miss Goldsmith, and L. E. Lindower; also the church news is good . . ."

One of our active pastors, writing under date of July 8th, sends us these gracious words:

"Dear Brother Baer:

"I enjoy the Evangelist very much and I do not know how I would be able to line up the work, especially for the special days, if it were not for the Evangelist. How so many people can claim to be Christian and take no church paper, do no Bible reading and no praying (I have had professed believers—Brethren, if you please—tell me they took no church paper, did not read the Bible and could not pray), . . . that stumps me. As for the Evangelist, it is necessary to my work . . ."

We thank the good doctor and this loyal pastor for their gracious words. Others write now and then mentioning other features of the paper. Recently one of our readers said: "I always read the Editorial Review, the News department, the Mission page (when you have something from the field) and Prof. McClain's page." The Bible Study Department has received many commendations. And now some says to the editor: "What has become of the Voice of the Churches department? I liked that." Others have said they enjoyed it also, but, well—people are slow to write, and neglectful. That's our only explanation. We hope pastors and lay leaders will take advantage of this opportunity to express their opinions briefly through the columns of their church paper. But we started out merely to quote a couple words of appreciation. And we were moved to do this by the thought that some of our pastors and Evangelist agents who are cooperating with us in the congregations to extend the influence of our beloved paper might be encouraged and their work made easier by a few of the words that have encouraged us. And to make their work still easier, our business manager, Dr. Teeter, has agreed that a special offer might be made for either new or renewal subscriptions of $1.00 for seven months. Friends of the paper who read this offer will do a good service to their Christian friends by bringing this opportunity to their attention. We make bold to claim your cooperation on the merits of the paper, and remember, the paper is what it is because of the fine cooperation of the leadership of the brotherhood. It stands for the whole Gospel, represents the thought of the brotherhood and reflects the spiritual status of the church in its news department. The Evangelist is your paper, it is the property of the whole church and of every member, and it is every one's job to help to extend its circulation and thereby serve the Brethren cause.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother H. F. Stuckman writes of his work at Elkhart, Indiana, where he has been the undershepherd for nearly a year. He says his experiences there have been pleasant and the members have given him their loyal cooperation. The work has gone steadily forward and every department is active. The outlook of the Elkhart church is bright, and doubtless under his leadership, the Lord will give it his blessing that the larger future that is possible may be realized.

We are glad to commend the Winona Lake Bible Conference to the attention of our readers and to give space to the names of speakers and dates, as will be found in the News department. Many of our people go to Winona each year in time to take in this splendid conference and are greatly benefited by its inspiration and instruction. As usual, it immediately precedes our own national conference, the date being August 11-20.

Brother R. I. Humberd, pastor of Martinsburg, and McKee churches, of Pennsylvania, reports eight baptisms in the McKee church. As is his custom, he has made large use of tracts, having distributed 59,600 during the past year. It is a great means of service, and we could wish that more of our pastors would make larger use of the printed page. On account of his health, Brother Humberd was granted a vacation during the recent weeks, when, among other places, he visited the Chicago World's Fair, concerning which he makes comment.

Brother N. V. Leatherman, of Berlin, Pennsylvania, writes of the successful Young People's Camp conducted in Pennsylvania. There were forty-four young people present. Four courses were offered and all students took advantage of all our courses. The recreational activities and the meals are said to have been highly satisfactory and expenses were kept at a minimum. We congratulate the Pennsylvania leaders and Sunday School Association officers responsible for launching out upon this splendid religious educational agency. We shall hope to hear from other camps in other districts, after they have completed their schedule.

We are introducing to our readers this week a new writer in the person of Dr. McCartneysmith, whose splendid article appears on page 5. Rev. Riddle, pastor of our Waterloo church says this new brother is a highly trained and sound student of the Word, that he has for some time been the popular teacher of one of the Bible classes of their Sunday school and has recently come into membership with their church. He with his capable wife, who is a trained musician, were until recently members of the Church of the Brethren, and are now giving fine cooperation in the work of the First Brethren church of Waterloo, Iowa.

A part of the machinery of a modern denomination concerns itself with keeping records of its numerical and physical growth. We have delegated statisticians in the various districts and a statistician in the national conference to do that work for us. They are endeavoring to do their work faithfully. But they must have the cooperation of the churches. Brother George E. Cone, our national statistician, makes a plea in this issue for the cooperation of church secretaries and pastors in making reports. Let's play fair with our brotherhood servants and give in every instance the cooperation they need.

The Secretary-Treasurer of the National Christian Endeavor Union, Miss Gladys Spice, reports the financial status of the organization, and it is stated that only ten societies have cooperated during the present year. Those societies have done a fine service, but they ought to have many more societies stand along with them. Christian Endeavor is endeavoring to show itself a real agency of service to the brotherhood. This is the opportunity to prove its worth and every Endeavorer interested in maintaining an appreciation of the place of Christian Endeavor in the program of the brotherhood should rally to the support of the national organization.

The National Conference Secretary, Brother J. L. Gingrich, informs us that he has mailed out credential blanks, and that others will be sent to any church failing to receive its supply, or an insufficient number. Again, we want to say, it is time to begin talking national conference in your congregation and planning your delegation. We ought to have a great conference, if we can have a large attendance. It is just fifty years since the organization of the church at Dayton Ohio, and while we formally celebrated last year our denominational beginning, we ought to see a new demonstration of loyalty and devotion, that the church may be stimulated to new zeal in behalf of the Whole Gospel and the Brethren movement throughout the world.

Brother Charles H. Ashman favors us with a report of the "United Service" that he and his church have inaugurated at the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania. After six months of operation under this new form of service, they are enthusiastic about it. We know our other churches that may be contemplating a similar program, or have already launched one will appreciate reading this word from Brother Ashman. It appeals to us as a splendid arrangement, but the important fact is that the congregation and pastor are satisfied with it and are continuing on with it. Other churches have already reported similar programs of their own, with considerable satisfaction to their people. If still other churches have experiences along this line, we shall be glad to hear from them.

THE OLD and the NEW COVENANT

A Comparison of the PASSOVER and the SUPPER of Our LORD

By * * *
L. O. McCartneysmith, Ph.D.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt . . . But this shall be the covenant that I will make . . . I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God, and they shall be my people. . . . They shall know me, from the least to the greatest of them. . . . I will forgive their iniquity and I will remember their sin no more." Jeremiah 31:31-35.

God, when about to cause his people Israel, to be led out of the land of Egypt, informed them of the impending doom to the first-born of all the Egyptians, and also to those of the Jews who disobeyed his command, and entered into a covenant with them under the following conditions: (See Exodus 12:1-20).

1. Each family was to select a faultless lamb.
2. Slay it at eventide and roast it with fire. (Between 3:00 and 5:00).
3. Sprinkle of its blood upon the door posts and lintel of each home.
4. Eat of its flesh the same evening, with bitter herbs and unleavened bread.
5. It was to be eaten in haste, with staff in hand, shoes on feet, and with girded loins.
6. The blood was to be a token of God's covenant with them, and the angel of death was to pass over them.

In recognition of their keeping this covenant with God, the angel of death passed over without molestation, all homes under the sign or token of the blood. At God's command, this covenant was to be observed throughout all Jewish generations. Thus, the blood of the Paschal lamb was used as the seal of the covenant with God and his people.

This, the first and the greatest of all Jewish feast days, is not without significance. It was the beginning of their religious year; the birthday of the Jewish nation; their day of deliverance from Egyptian slavery.

The feast of the Passover lasted seven days, and every ceremony connected with it recalled some awful scene enacted in their bondage and deliverance.

On the first evening, they tasted the bitter herbs, dipped in a sauce, or sop, composed of ground dates, almonds, figs, and spices, and thinned with vinegar. These were both highly emblematical. The bitter herbs, possibly wild lettuce or chicory, representing the bitterness of their enslavement; the sauce, or "sop", emblematic of the mortar from which they had formed bricks during their servitude under the hand of the Pharaohs.

The body and blood of the Paschal Lamb was representative of something far greater than slavery! It represented deliverance, liberty and life. It represented freedom after years of bondage. It meant deliverance from toil and privation under the taskmasters of Egypt. The lamb's body was broken and its blood shed that Israel might live. The blood was God's seal of promise that he would not destroy. It was the sign of God's possession; that he would not harm his very own. It was Israel's covering; his salvation. God had promised: "When I see the blood, I will pass over you" (Ex. 12:13).

It is well to mention here a number of very interesting facts concerning the preparation of the lamb for the Paschal Supper. This lamb was to be:

1. A faultless male, a firstling of the flock.
2. Slain at eventide. (Between the hours of 3:00 and 5:00 P. M.)
3. Not a bone was to be broken.
4. Roasted with fire instead of being cooked in water.

God demands of his people the very best they have. He was not willing that these Jews should substitute an inferior or second-grade lamb. It could not have represented salvation had it been so. It had to be the finest lamb they possessed.

How similar is this lamb to the Lamb of God! If you remember, when Jesus came to John to request baptism, John beholding him cried out: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1:29). This he repeated the day following. Yes, Jesus Christ was the Lamb of God. He was faultless. He gave his life that others might live. He was slain between the hours specified: at the ninth hour, or about 3:00 P. M. Not one of his bones was broken. (See Matt. 27:46, and John 19:33-36.)

Another interesting matter concerns the manner of roasting the Paschal lamb. The lamb was to be roasted whole, over an open fire. This fire was built in a pit dug into the earth, about three feet deep and four feet square. The lamb was roasted over live coals in the bottom of this pit. A skewer or spit of pomegranate wood was thrust lengthwise through the body of the lamb, and another similar spit was stuck through the body just behind the forelegs, thus forming a Roman cross! The ends of the transverse spit supported the weight of the lamb, resting on the edges of the pit, while the cook turned the lamb with the long or upright skewer. Josephus, the Jewish historian, tells us that the penalty for breaking a bone of the Passover Lamb was the infliction of forty stripes.

The unleavened bread was the bread of slavery. It also typified the haste with which the Israelites left Egypt. This bread was made of fine flour of either wheat, barley or oats, preferably wheat, and great care was exercised in preparing it to prevent bacterial fermentation.

According to the Hebrew Mishna, wine occupied a prominent position in the observance of the passover, and four separate cups are mentioned as being used in the ceremonial at stated intervals.

The first cup was called "The cup of Elijah", and that prophet was believed to appear in spirit when it was presented. This cup was offered in complete silence, during which time the door of the room was left open so Elijah could enter.

The second cup was called "The cup of Salvation", during presentation of which the young men were told by the host of the wonderful delivery from Egyptian bondage.

The third cup was called "The cup of blessing" and during its presentation thanks were given for the freedom from slavery and preservation as a nation.

The fourth cup was called "The Cup of Hallel", or Hallelujah. During its presentation the latter half of the "Hallel" was sung. The Hallel was composed of Psalms 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117. These Psalms were divided into two sections: the 113 and 114th were sung during the first stages of the meal, and the 115th, 116th, and 117th Psalms were sung after the fourth cup. These three are the song mentioned as having been sung by Jesus and his disciples after the institution of the Supper of our Lord. (See Matt. 26:30.)

The actual order of the Jewish Passover was practically as follows: The service began with all members participating reclining upon couches arranged about a large table. The feet were not placed under the table as we sit, but they sat with the left side toward the table, the left arm resting thereon, the right being free to use in eating.

The host, or head of the house, was usually at the head of the table, and opened festivities by reciting a prayer of thanksgiving and blessing for the day and for the wine that he and his guests were soon to drink. This is the first cup, or "cup of Elijah," during the drinking of which absolute silence reigned, and the spirit of that departed Prophet was supposed to appear. The door was left open for his entrance.

The Hebrew Mishna specifically states that even the poorest Jew should eat "reclining like a king, with the ease becoming a free man. He was to keep in mind the standing posture of his ancestors at their first passover, the attitude of slaves! Luke 22:14 informs us that Jesus "sat down" to eat the Passover with his disciples.

The second course of the Passover Supper was then brought forth. This consisted of the bitter herbs, which were dipped in the Charoseth, or sauce previously described, and eaten, thus recalling to the participants the bitterness of Egyptian slavery, and the mortar used in making the brick of bondage.

It was at this stage of the Passover that Jesus informed his disciples that one of them should betray him, stating: "It is one of the twelve that dipeth with me in the dish." (Mark 14:20, also Matt. 26:23.) Further, regarding this, John informs us that he personally leaned against Jesus' breast at the Passover supper and asked at the request of Peter whom it was that should betray him, and was told: "He it is, to whom I shall give a "sop" when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the "sop" he gave it to Judas Iscariot." (John 13:26).

Here it was that Judas Iscariot at the command of Jesus: "That thou doest, do quickly," left the upper room to go and bargain with the rulers for the betrayal of his Master. Therefore, it is plainly evident that Judas Iscariot was not present when Jesus washed his disciples' feet, nor when he said: "This is my body; this is my blood." Judas had neither part nor lot in the rest of the Passover or the New Covenant which Jesus there instituted. He had sold himself to the Devil, and was about his master's business.

The custom after the partaking of the first cup of wine and eating of the bitter herbs with the Charoseth or sauce, was that the hands of all present should be laved, for naturally, the hands would be soiled from dipping with the fingers in the dish of sauce. Towels and water with essential basons were a part of the supper equipment. This function was usually performed by a servant, but tonight there was no servant present. It was also customary for a servant to wash the feet of guests upon arrival, before seating them at the table.

There seems to have been a perpetual argument among the twelve as to who should occupy the places of greatness. (See Mark 9:34:36, also Luke 22:24.) Had not this been the status, no doubt some one of the twelve would have volunteered to wash the feet of the others; but in all probability each was afraid of being classed as an inferior, and would have therefore lost caste socially had he done so. Jesus had at Capernaum several days previously given them the only recipe for becoming great. He had assembled them and delivered the ultimatum that: "If any man desire to be the first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all" (Mark 9:35).

The disciples having been given ample time and opportunity to do the menial service of washing their fellow disciple's feet, and signally failed, the Master arose from the table, and laying aside his garments girded himself with a towel and began to wash their feet! He would do something that they had refused to do, and thus forever set before them an example to follow!

Much has been said relative to this unprecedented act of the Master. Many think of this as an act of humility, to teach all men that we should humble ourselves in the sight of God. Others consider it an act of service.

Personally, it brings to my soul more joy and peace to think of the ordinance of washing the feet of the saints, as an act of Love! Jesus did not wash their feet to humiliate them, neither do I believe he did it to show that he was humble. He did it for one reason and one alone. He loved them. And loving them, he washed their feet. We are always perfectly willing to humble ourselves before one we love. And we must love one in order to humble ourselves. If we did not love God, we could not humble ourselves before him. Take the mother for example. When her little boy comes in from the street with his feet soiled and grimy, his mother patiently washes them for him. To humiliate him? To cause him to be humble? Rather not. She does so just because she loves him.

God needs no man to serve him. This is the duty of the angelic host. God wants men to serve each other and thus fulfill his law. We serve God because we love him. We expect no gain from serving our brethren, but serve them because we love them. "If ye love me, keep my commandments," is the word of Jesus. He further said to them: "A new commandment give I unto you; that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another" (John 13:34).

When we as Brethren wash one another's feet, we do

I SHALL BE SATISFIED

Psalms 17:15

By Dyoell Belote

*I surely shall know satisfaction,
When I to Thy likeness attain.
I know that I shall be like Thee
When I see Thee returning again.*

*Hear the heart-cry of the ages:
"Oh that to my soul might come rest!"
The Psalmist suggests true contentment,— 'Tis likeness to Jesus that's best.*

*Oh for a likeness to Jesus!
Like him who bears sorrow and pain.
When we shall have attained to his likeness
We shall be satisfied then.*

*Lord lift up the light of Thy visage,
Upon us, and bless us today.
Our souls crave to sense the assurance
Of dwelling in safety alway.*

*'Tis fullness of joy to be like Thee,
And in Thy blest presence to dwell.
The pleasures Thy right hand dispenseth
Are those of which tongue cannot tell.*

*Blessed the man whom Thou chooseth,
And causest to come nigh to Thee.
Such shall dwell in Thy presence,
And ever Thy courtier shall be.

What Young People Can Do To Aid Prohibition

By Willis Wood

Address at Young People's Session of Southeastern District Conference, held in Bethlehem church.

As a Scriptural keynote I wish to use Proverbs 20:1. "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise". There are many other Scripture passages which might be used in a prohibition message, I wish only to use this one verse. I have been asked to speak for a short time on the subject, "What young people can do to aid prohibition." I might think of a great many things which you might do to aid but unless I can lead you young people to want to aid prohibition I will accomplish nothing. We young people have grown up and lived in an age of prohibition. We do not have first-hand knowledge of the conditions before prohibition and do not know what conditions in our land would be if the liquor traffic returns. I wish to bring some definite facts and figures before you which I hope will lead you to want to aid prohibition. I shall then mention just four things which you can do to aid prohibition. If I can succeed in moving you to want to do something my purpose will be accomplished.

Let us not be deceived by wet propaganda, the eighteenth amendment has been successful. Its enactment closed 200,000 saloons. The fact that it decreased drinking may be proven. Death resulting from the use of alcoholic beverages and from diseases resulting from their use were decreased in number 58% by prohibition. Much of the money which was used for liquor in other days was put to useful work. The amount spent for education during the first 12 years of prohibition was more than during the 40 preceding years. Life insurance protection which after 78 years of growth totalled 50 billions was actually doubled during the first six and one half years of prohibition. Prohibition has saved thousands of lives in our country indirectly by decreasing the number of deaths from automobile accidents. During the year of 1931 there were 35,000 lives taken in the United States by automobile accidents. In Canada with her government control deaths by automobile accident were two and one half times as frequent considering the number of automobiles in use. In Great Britain they were four times and in Germany six times as frequent considering the number of automobiles in use. These figures are indeed startling but we probably do not realize the greatness of the present automobile death rate. During the last 15 years, almost all of which were prohibition years, there were 325,000 lives taken by automobile accidents. During 15 years of war including the Revolution, War of 1812, Mexican War, Civil War, Spanish-American War, and World War 300,000 American men lost their lives in action or died of injuries sustained in action. You will notice that fewer lives were taken by shot and shell in these six wars than by the automobile during a corresponding length of time. Can any thinking people consent to the repeal of prohibition which may multiply this present great death rate two and one half, or four, or six times. With the modern machinery which is in use, industrial accidents have been decreased in a similar amount.

Government control has been suggested as a solution for our problem. Government control did not succeed in Canada and it would not succeed in our country. The wets claim that prohibition caused a crime wave in our country; this is not true. In Canada crime has greatly creased under government control. In Canada liquor law violations were increased 92% from the year 1923 to 1930. During the same period the consumption of absolute alcohol was more than doubled. As we have already noticed automobile deaths were much greater. Government control will not succeed, nothing short of absolute prohibition can succeed.

Another false claim is that the return of liquor will bring with it the return of prosperity. The wets have made greatly exaggerated estimates of the number of men which would be put to work in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages. They have failed to consider the numbers who would be thrown out of work in other industries. They have told the farmers that repeal would create a market for grain and raise its price. Much of the money which otherwise would be spent for food would then be spent for alcoholic beverages. With this decrease in sale of food the demand for grain would be decreased. Liquor uses very little grain. Consider if you will the amount of grain consumed in producing a glass of beer with that consumed in producing a glass of milk. Or consider the amount consumed in producing a drink of whiskey with that consumed in producing a pork chop. At no time during the height of the liquor traffic was as much as one percent of the grain of our country used in the manufacture of liquor. Other wet propaganda may likewise be disproved; let us not be deceived by their claims.

We should then educate our young people on the prohibition question. This is the first thing which we should do. I believe that every Christian Endeavor Society should hold at least one prohibition meeting. Material for these programs is not as difficult to find as we may suppose. Try to find definite facts and figures such as those which I have just presented to you. Make a direct appeal to young people by showing them how Prohibition protects them, their families and loved ones. Many young people have been misinformed, some have not had the right home training, and some are undecided, many can be won to the dry side if the true facts are put before them.

A second thing which we can do is to boycott those who sell wine and beer. Let us not be deceived by those who say that beer is not intoxicating. Medical authorities say that a given amount of alcohol has practically the same effect upon man whether it is taken in hard liquor or in a highly diluted form. The so-called 3.2 by weight beer is really 4% by volume, volume measurement was always used heretofore. A Washington druggist analyzed samples of beer and prescription whiskey. He says that there is about the same amount of alcohol in a bottle of 4% beer as in a whiskey glass of 50% whiskey. This man is

DETERMINED EDITORS

The annual meeting of the Editorial Council of the Religious Press, held in Washington, April 18, 19, emphasized once more the devotion of the editors of religious periodicals to the high purpose of Christianity in the social order. Always hard pressed to keep their journals going, even in "normal" times; working with small staffs and most of them overworked with inadequate capital, they are carrying on through the trials of added economic pressure with both optimism and passion. They believe, even more ardently than in former years, in the basic value of the mediums they produce. Over and over again the danger in the failure of the churches fully to recognize that value was stressed. At a time when daily and all other secular journalism is a "big business," religious journals remain free to speak their minds; they are almost the last stand in America for unimpeded enlightenment in the journalistic field. Their impact on the aggregate millions of readers they reach is of immeasurable portent to every good purpose in America. Their support for questionable causes cannot be bought; neither banks nor commercial organizations can dictate their policy; week after week they are molding opinion toward the Kingdom of God on earth. We know of no group of men in any department of life in the world more unselfishly and courageously devoted to high ends, further beyond the reach of entrenched and therefore dangerous interests, than the editors of religious journals. They have fought, and will continue to fight, a desperate and optimistic battle against the extinction of their periodicals. Some day the churches will recognize the far-reaching implications, the masterful potency, of their free press.—The Churchman.

CHRIST'S SEAMLESS ROBE TO BE EXHIBITED

The credibility of some human beings must indeed be great. Here comes a story that the Holy Coat which Christ is reputed to have worn upon the Cross, is to be placed on exhibition at the Cathedral of Trier in conjunction with the observance of Holy Year in Germany this year. The news item which brings the information gives the history of the garment as follows:

"History reveals that Roman soldiers cast lots for the Holy Coat under the Cross. According to chronicles of the fourth century, it was sent by St. Helena, mother of the Roman Emperor Constantine the Great, and herself born in Trier, as a present to St. Agritius in about the year 330 A. D., together with a nail from the Cross.

"The first public exhibition of the sacred relic was in 1512, when it is said 100,000 pilgrims viewed it during the two weeks it was on display. In 1891, when it was last shown, more than 2,000,000 came to Trier to see the garment."

Christian faith is not centered in relics, but in a living Christ and even could clothing or other material objects associated with Christ's earthly ministry be preserved for a period of 2,000 years they could have no value except that of stimulating a morbid interest. God never intended to stimulate faith by the use of material objects, but by the preaching of his Word and the stimulation of spiritual perception. Otherwise he would have ordained the erection of a museum in Jerusalem where relics could be safely housed and preserved for the vision of future generations.—The Evangelical-Messenger.

SOUTHERN SYMPTOMS

Although the lives of the Scottsboro boys remain in jeopardy, the case itself appears to have furthered the progress of the Negro. Racial bitterness has not increased, nor has there been any jump in the lynching record. Outside of Alabama many newspapers have been quite sympathetic with the case presented by the Negroes. But even more significant, the names of colored citizens are being added to the jury rolls, although that does not always mean that they are accepted for jury service. However, in recent weeks two Negroes have served on the grand jury in Atlanta, one of whom was a member of First Congregational church. This is the first instance of the kind since Reconstruction days. According to newspaper reports a Negro served on the jury in an important murder trial in Tennessee recently. In the Herndon case in Atlanta the judge sustained a Negro lawyer when he objected to the prosecutor calling the defendant either "nigger" or "darker," and now it is reported that Georgia lawyers are deleting those words from their vocabularies for fear of affording a basis of appeal to Negro defendants. Alabama appears to be as adamant on the subject of the Scottsboro boys as was Massachusetts on the subject of Sacco and Vanzetti, but elsewhere about the South unmistakable signs of progress can be detected.—The Congregationalist.

CIVIC SITUATION NOT HOPELESS

When we consider how huge and heterogeneous are our great cities and how well organized are the forces of evil we sometimes feel hopeless. What can we as individuals do? Lord Bryce once had such a proposition put to him and he answered as follows:

"You may say, what can private citizens do? Well, the state is made up of private citizens and such as they are will the state be. Each of us as individuals can do little, but men animated by the same feeling and belief can do much. . . . The rain drops that fall from the clouds meet to form a tiny rill, and meeting other rills it becomes a rivulet, and the rivulet grows into a brook, and the brooks as they join one another swell into a river that sweeps on in its resistless course downwards to the sea.—The Watchman-Examiner, New York.

THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES

The United States is planning to contribute to the cause of peace in four ways:

- (1) By going "as far as the other states in the way of reduction," with the ultimate objective "to bring armaments as soon as possible through successive stages down to the basis of a domestic police force."
- (2) By accepting at once the British proposal for reducing offensive armaments and thus relieving nations of the fear of surprise attacks.
- (3) By consulting with other states in case of a threat to peace, and, if our view of the guilty party coincides with that of other nations, to refrain from interfering with measures to discipline the guilty country.
- (4) By assisting in and accepting international supervision of the armaments of every country.

This program will not be liked by everyone in this nation. Certain newspaper chains are likely to object with great clamor. We believe, however, that the people at large will be ready to follow the President's lead. And perhaps the first step will soon have been taken toward a genuine disarmament and the erection of an international federation which will free the peoples from the gnawing fear of an ever incipient war.—The Christian Evangelist.

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Mark

The second witness is John Mark. Of him Papias says: "Mark, having become the interpreter of Peter, wrote down accurately whatever he remembered, without, however, recording in order what was either said or done by Christ. For neither did he hear the Lord, nor did he follow him; but afterwards, as I said (he followed) Peter, who adapted his instructions to the needs (of his hearers), but not in the way of giving a connected account of the Lord's discourses. So then Mark committed no error in thus writing down such details as he remembered; for he made it his one forethought not to omit or to misrepresent any details that he had heard."

That paragraph is authentic and final. It tells us explicitly that John Mark was an amanuensis of Simon Peter. He serves well in that capacity for he preserves for us a true picture of "the Son of God" and also a very life like portrait of the fiery Apostle.

The writer would believe that the second gospel was Simon

Peter's gospel (and, primarily, Christ's gospel) because of the auspicious way in which it is introduced. Andrew, Simon's own brother, brought him to Christ at the day break of his ministry. We would expect Peter, therefore, to begin his story in all probability at that point, leaving the infancy and youth scenes to more competent hands. The older commentators overlook this point. Many new ones also pass it by. It bristles with truth.

So, when John Mark writes, he begins with the testimony of the Baptist. "The voice of one crying in the wilderness" is heard saying in a prophetic chant "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." Who can say that Isaiah was not guided by Divine Inspiration?

"Hark! through the lonely waste
By foot of man unpaced,
"Prepare the way!" a warning voice resounds:
"Level the opposing hill,
The hollow valley fill;

Make straight the crooked, smooth the rugged grounds:
Prepare a passage from it, plain and broad
And through the desert make a highway for our God!"

Thus, in Bishop Mant's sentiment, was the only "new deal" the world has ever seen or is now seeing inaugurated. It will be consummated when the Lamb of God arrives again. Meanwhile let us fear God, take our own part, and eat the honey of the Word.

The Varying Fortunes of John Mark are carefully preserved in the archives of the New Testament. He was the son of a certain wealthy Mary whose home was in Jerusalem. Acts 12:12, 25. At this place the devoted disciples gathered for prayer. He was a cousin of Barnabas, a native of Cyprus. Col. 4:10; Acts 4:36. Uncertainty prevails as to his personal acquaintance with Jesus, yet we know definitely that he went to Antioch with Barnabas and Saul, acted as their assistant, left them at Perga, (probably because he was homesick and had a sweetheart back at Jerusalem?), was rejected by Paul and later reinstated into the great Apostle's confidence and fellowship.

Keble, in remembering the message entrusted to Timothy, writes:

"Companion of the Saints! 'twas thine
To taste the drop of peace divine
When the great soldier of thy Lord
Called thee to take his last farewell,
Teaching the Church with joy to tell
The story of your love restored."

There is blessing attached to "the falling out that all the more endears." Let us kindly remember that John Mark, perhaps fickle once, eventually saw the God-Sent Servant in all his beauty, saw him as the God of Immortal Love, and begged men to look steadily at the passing Saviour, and "Trust in his redeeming blood,

And try his works to do."

Many Pertinent Facts

concerning this gospel must be omitted in this brief study, but the reader will not object to have his or her "pure mind" quietly "stirred up by way of remembrance" when it is suggested that the date of Mark is 55-63 A. D. The place of writing is usually supposed to be Rome. It was written at Rome for the Romans. It is Clement of Rome who describes the remarkable impressiveness of Peter's preaching and the requests which subsequently came to John Mark to edit the oral discourses of the preacher. This was done early. Justin Martyr refers to this writing as the "Memoirs" or "Gospel of Peter." The book certainly reflects the energetic, impulsive, hustling movements of the first apostle. It also depicts accurately the Working Servant reconciling a lost world unto himself.

Simon Peter's Gospel,

if it may be so-called, in subject matter consists of memoirs; it records facts; its key is discovered in verse forty-five of the tenth chapter; its background and viewpoint are strikingly Roman; its theme is the ministry of the Divine Servant; its topic is labor; its arrangement is anecdotal; its character is realistic; its outline is compact; its aspect is imperialistic; its outlook is practical; its quality suggests endurance; its style is lucid and terse; its classification is chronological; its time is the present; its key-word is straightway; its gospel is one of deeds and action; its Christ is a Wonder-Worker. Various considered its quotations from the Old Testament are 22; its allusions to the same Scripture are 12; its pages number 42; its peculiarities are 7; its coincidences are 93; its words in the Revised Version are 14,854.

In addition the writer desires to suggest that the gospel of Mark carefully describes the general character of the Saviour's work; points out the rest periods between seasons of greatest activity; evinces the Lord's humanity; singles out for notice many minute particulars such as the feelings of his characters. Aramaic expressions are explained: Boanerges (3:17); Talitha cumi (5:4); Corban (7:11); Ephphatha (7:34); Abba (14:36); Golgotha (12:22). Roman words like legio-legion; denarius; penny, etc. abound.

Conclusion

It is true that Jesus Christ is presented to the Christian world in Mark's Gospel as a Preacher, a Healer. The Lord of Heaven and Earth and Hell, a Wonder-Worker, but chiefly his is the Divine Servant. His words and deeds, his parables and miracles, his ministry and death reveal his mission clearly. He came (1) To Minister, and (2) To Give His Life as a Ransom for Many. He accomplished his work as the Pattern Servant. He has done better than all the Sons of men. Now

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

By Rev. Milton Bennett Lambdin

1. Nineveh, the Magnificent

The first mention that we have of Nineveh, in all the literature of the centuries, is in Genesis 10:11. "Out of that land went forth Asshur, and builded Nineveh, and Rehoboth, and Calah."

That pen stroke of inspiration carries our minds back two thousand or more years before Christ, to a point so remote that secular history is absolutely silent. Herodotus, "The Father of History," so termed, wrote somewhere about 450 B. C.

But Moses, with his divinely tipped stylus, got into the historic limelight a full thousand years before Herodotus, with his first five books of the Bible, commonly called the Pentateuch, thus making that section of the sacred Scriptures the oldest book of which the world has any knowledge.

Early History

After driving a temporary stake at a point known as Kalah Shergat, the ruins of which remain to this very day, Nineveh, as Bible history knew it, had its site at the upper section of the famous Valley of Mesopotamia, on the eastern side of the Tigris.

This valley, shut in and watered by the twin rivers, the Tigris and the Euphrates, is held to be the cradle of the race of mankind, where the Garden of Eden was placed, and where the Tower of Babel was erected: In the long millenniums of the past ages before the foundations of Nineveh were laid, this valley was occupied by a primitive people, of unknown origin, called the Accadians at the North, the Sumerians, at the South.

They were not mental pygmies, as one might naturally suppose, but a highly cultured people, the first torchbearers of civilization, with their public libraries, where you could find access to learned tomes covering history, geography, grammar, mathematics, astronomy, ethics, and so on. The inventors, too, of the hieroglyphic and cuneiform species of writing. And whose extensive literary culture in after times Nineveh made its own. At some unrecorded date, and from some unknown cause, this remarkable race vanished out into racial extinction, possibly by absorption into the mass of a later incoming and conquering people.

In process of the long drawn out and unrecorded centuries, Nineveh climbed to a high peak of national supremacy, as one of the imperial world powers of her day, along with that of Babylon and Egypt.

And here we note an extraordinary and outcropping fact, that during the half millennium of years that the Hebrews were being welded into a compact nation, following upon the invasion and subjugation of Canaan by Field Marshal Joshua, in the middle of the fifteenth century, B. C., the powerful kingdom of Nineveh did not once come into collision with the chosen people.

The warlike kings of Assyria hurled their conquering legions against other nations, over-ran and ravished their lands by sword and fire, brought the inhabitants into abject submission to her authority, but not once did they even attempt, so far as we know, the subjugation of the rising, but petty kingdom at the south.

Why? There must have been some mighty reason for it. There was. You can find it imbedded in Exodus 34:24, where the Almighty said, "Neither shall any man desire thy land."

The people of Israel could have their homes absolutely unprotected, with a perfectly assured mind, as they three times annually attended their national feasts at Jerusalem, without the slightest fear of invasion of a hostile foreign foe. Jehovah threw an invisible rim of fire around their land, as he virtually said to the conquering kings of Assyria, "Touch not Mine anointed people."

But when his covenant people repudiated this authority, gave their deceived hearts to the idolatry of false and unclean gods, then we see the forms of looming up into ominous view as divinely chosen instruments of national chastisement for their sins of apostasy.

The first to stroke the divine Record is Pul, "who invaded Israel in the days of Menahem," B. C. 771, but was heavily bided to depart (II Kings 15:19).

Then Tiglath-pileser, 740 B. C., whom some authorities tentatively identify as Pul, carrying a double name, overran the territory of Gilead, across the Jordan, along with Galilee and Naphtali, and carried off a segment of its inhabitants into captivity (II Kings 15:29). The second invasion of the Northern Kingdom of Israel some ten years afterwards was in the days of Hosea, by Shalmaneser IV, who forced the helpless Israelite king to buy him off with an enormous money present (II Kings 17:3). And followed up, 725 B. C., by an unnamed king, possibly Sargon (Isaiah 20:1), who completed these several invasions in the expulsion of 27,290 of the inhabitants to Assyria and thus finally blotted out the national existence of the Ten Tribes, 722 B. C. Thus leaving only the Tribe of Judah at the south, with an infiltration of the small Tribe of Benjamin, to carry on the national life as the Tribe of Judah. From this circumstance the Hebrews were thereafter called Jews, from identification with the Tribe of Judah.

In the days of its pious king, Hezekiah, a few years following the total blotting out of the Northern Kingdom of Israel, another Ninevite king, Sennacherib, 713 B. C., II Chronicles 32:1, made an inroad against the Southern Kingdom of Judah.

Cast into poetic phrasing—

"The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold,
And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the sea,
Where the blue waves roll nightly on deep Galilee."

But with an unlooked for tragic aftermath—

"For the Angel of Death spread his wings on the blast,
And he breathed in the face of the foe as he passed;
And the eyes of the sleeper waxed deadly and chill,
And their hearts beat once, and forever grew chill."

A generation after this notable event in the experience of the Kingdom of Judah, it was invaded by "The Captains of the host of the King of Assyria, which took Manas-

Camp Juniata Echoes

By N. V. Leatherman

Camp Juniata is the name given the new young people's Camp held for the Brethren young people of the east. The camp opened, serving the first meal in the evening of June 13, and registering immediately afterward. Classes began on Wednesday morning and continued for ten days concluding Saturday, June 24.

The following organization made it possible to care for the young people to their expressed satisfaction: Dean of the camp, Prof. M. A. Stuckey of Ashland College and Seminary; Dean of Boys, Rev. W. C. Benschoff; Dean of Girls, Mrs. M. A. Stuckey; Camp Nurse, Mrs. Orpha McGee; Faculty: Prof. M. A. Stuckey, Rev. W. E. Ronk, Rev. Floyd Sibert and Rev. N. V. Leatherman. The students were divided into four groups, named after Indian tribes, Pawnee, Shawnee, Sioux and Delaware.

A large part of the success of the camp was due to the splendid meals served by the ladies, who donated their services, in the persons of Mrs. D. C. White, Mrs. Frank Beachley, Mrs. Orpha McGee and Mrs. Ella Miller. The food was abundant and well prepared. There was no waste. And the price was reasonable, being $6.50 for the 33 meals.

The recreational program in the afternoons and evenings consisted of games and contests between tribes and groups managed by Rev. Benschoff and Mrs. Stuckey. Volley ball, mush ball, swimming and canoeing were the regular features. Then for special occasions there was hiking, special water sports and field day as well as stunt night. The campfire activities were enjoyed as the closing feature of each day's program.

The entire group attended the four classes, Old Testament Studies, taught by Prof. M. A. Stuckey; Brethren Church History, taught by Rev. N. V. Leatherman; Principles of Teaching, taught by Rev. W. E. Ronk and Christian Endeavor, taught by Rev. Floyd Sibert.

The devotional life of the young people was provided for in the chapel programs, the class room, vespers, grace at meals, the regular services on the Sunday, consisting of Sunday school and preaching in the morning, C. E. and preaching in the evening, and each night concluding with Christ around the camp fire. The devotional response on the part of the young people was splendid, who knew the value of quiet as well as response with scripture quotations and prayers.

There were 44 young people present of whom 4 were college graduates, 9 school teachers, 13 high school graduates, and the others of high school rank.

We had an ideal location for this camp in the beautiful hills of Pennsylvania. The equipment was granted for our free use by the Boy Scout executives of Johnstown, Pennsylvania. Rev. Geo. H. Jones chief executive assisted in every way possible to make the camp helpful to us all.

All the young people mentioned their appreciation of the camp in many ways and have asserted themselves as very desirous for the continuation of the camp next year and each succeeding year if possible.

STUDYING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON at the Family Altar With Dr. R. R. Teeter

ISAIAH DENOUNCES DRUNKENNESS AND OTHER SINS

(Lesson for July 23)

Lesson Text: Isaiah 5:1-30; Golden Text: Proverbs 14:34

MONDAY

Drunkenness Denounced, Isaiah 5:8-12

We are told that since the Eighteenth Amendment became the law of our land, the churches and temperance societies have acted as though the work were all done and that they needed do nothing more about it.

I think this is a rather strong statement; but undoubtedly the churches and societies have let down on their teaching and admonishing. The people constantly need to be reminded of the evils of intemperance and drunkenness. One might be called a crank and a calamity howler for persisting in this warning; but we have an idea Isaiah was considered a crank by many of his contemporaries. However, he was faithful to his trust and did not refuse to denounce any kind of a sin for policy's sake.

TUESDAY

Woes of the Drunkard, Isaiah 5:18-24

Drunkenness is no modern sin, and the woes that befall the follower after strong drink are not modern, neither can they be said to be ancient, for they are really an accompaniment of every age that is given to drink.

Nothing is gained by denying these evils and these woes or by asserting they are nothing more than a figment of the imagination. They do exist, and it is useless to assert otherwise. Any one who has had opportunity to observe the results that come, not only to the drunkard himself, but to the innocent victims that belong to his family, knows that all the woes pronounced by the prophet surely are visited upon the victims of strong drink.

WEDNESDAY

Drunkenness and Poverty, Proverbs 23:19-26

"Beer and prosperity" has been the cry for more than a year that has deceived millions of supposedly intelligent American citizens. And even now we see electric signs in the windows of our new drinking places reading "Beer that brings prosperity is here." What arrant nonsense. If beer brings prosperity then Germany and England should be numbered among the most prosperous nations of the world, which is anything but the case. Yes "All we like sheep have gone astray." We have blindly followed the leader, until now the probabilities are we will all fall into a deeper ditch of poverty than America has yet known.

THURSDAY

Sobriety Enjoined, Titus 2:1-10

Paul was one of the most widely experienced teachers of the early church, and in his writings, especially to Timothy and Titus, he draws upon his wealth of experience and observation in an effort to point out the right way of life and of leadership.

When he advised Titus to impart openly "healthful teaching" he placed special emphasis upon sobriety, not only of mind but of body or appetite as well; both men and women are warned against the evils of strong drink.

FRIDAY

Obedying the Law, I Peter 2:11-17

This is one thing the liquor people of America have never done, and from the days of "The Whiskey Rebellion" to the present effort to take from our constitution the best system yet devised to control this lawless element the "lovers of wine and strong drink" have constantly defied all law of control that man or government has devised.

It is a sad admission to make, but nevertheless it is true that one of the mightiest factors leading toward the destruction of our prohibition law has been its violation by so-called "good people" who have placed their carnal appetites on a higher plane than their respect for law.

SATURDAY

Avoiding Evil Companions, I Corinthians 5:9-13

In Paul's writing of the Corinthian church he has much to say about their personal manner of living; and they are warned clearly as to the things and the type of people to avoid, if they would maintain anything like a Christian character. In the portion for today's study he warns against keeping company with a drunkard. They are warned not to eat with such a one, and yet in these modern days we see multitudes of so-called Christians patronizing restaurants that serve 3.2 with their meals. I may be "a crank", but so long as I can eat elsewhere I do not propose to "eat with drinkers" at any restaurant.

SUNDAY

Prayer for the Nation, Psalm 85:7-13

No doubt Israel needed the prayers of the righteous that the mercies of God might be bestowed upon the nation and that it might be preserved from the result of its own wickedness.

The Psalmist says "I will hear what God Jehovah will speak, for he will speak peace unto his people."

We need not expect peace among our own people when every man seeks to have his own way and gives no consideration to the welfare of others; nor can we expect peace among a people whose minds are befogged by the use of alcoholic drinks. Yes, the nation still needs to be prayed for by the people of God.

Ohio's Unit Convention

By Josephine Garber

The Ohio Christian Endeavor Union held its 48th annual convention at Cincinnati, Ohio, June 27, 30, having for its theme "Unity—of Thought, of Purpose, and of Action," based upon Acts 1:14—"And they were all of one accord." Those who attended the convention having individual problems in the detailed working so Christian Endeavor were singularly benefited by the respective conference periods on publicity, prayer meeting, stewardship, socials, society administration, lookout and introduction, evangelism and life problems, missions, music, world peace, and citizenship, led by the various departmental directors of the State Board. These conferences are periods in which mutual effort on the part of individuals and leaders is made to discuss fully and to attempt a wise solution of the problems facing societies.

A feature of state conventions which has come to mean much to us who attend is the morning Quiet Hour. This year as last, this brief period was led by Dr. Harold M. Geistweitz, pastor of the Ninth Street Baptist church of Cincinnati. During the three successive morning periods he brought in his quiet but inspiring way three effective messages on "Christ's Mind in Our Motives," "His Mind in Our Divided Interests," and "His Mind In You." In reference to the first of these problems, Dr. Geistweitz stressed the necessity of being able to see and bring order out of chaos, of being persistent, and of thinking creatively. In determining "what shall I do?" we are faced with the danger of double-mindedness, which results too often in a double allegiance. "A slit allegiance," he declared, "is the most disastrous experience that can come into life. It causes us to become spiritually ineffective." In facing the three-fold problem mentioned above, the Christian life "translates truth heard and truth perceived into truth lived. It is not what we know, but what we do; not what ideals we have, but what ideals we practice. Let his mind be in our motives, our divided interests, and in us the controlling force."

The opening evening session brought Dr. Donald H. Tippett of Columbus, formerly pastor of the Church of all Nations of New York City. A man of wide and varied experiences with peoples of all nations, a speaker who combines charm, wit, and inspiration, Dr. Tippett spoke upon "The Art of Living with One's Fellowmen." Our present day civilization with all its modern discoveries and inventions brings more closely together than ever before in the history of mankind, the peoples of all nations, of all creeds, and of all climes. Hence, as he pointed out, in order to live efficiently, effectively, peaceably, and in the spirit of Christ we must learn the art of living with others. From his experience while pastor of the Church of All Nations in New York, Dr. Tippett brought the following illustration as an example of how the gospel of Christ can teach us the art of living with others. At a communion service one evening at which were kneeling representatives of some twenty nations of the world, were found Lenin, the exponent of modern Sovietism and an equally distinguished representative of the old aristocracy of Russia. Only the power of Jesus Christ could bring together the representatives of two antithetical orders.

Wednesday evening, Dr. Geistweit addressed the assembled delegates from the theme "For Their Sakes I will Sanctify Myself." Building a house and building a life require a purpose, whether that house or life shall be useful or merely ornamental. But building a life requires that we discard the non-important, that we rid ourselves of selfishness. We must sanctify ourselves for the task if we are to be effective witnesses for Christ. "In influencing others for Christ," Dr. Geistweit pointed out, "he who becomes a Christian joins a crusade in which his life is not his own." The world itself will never be influenced until we who witness are brought into a higher standard of living. As one Chinese said: "Christianity may never succeed, but Jesus Christ will!" The challenge then falls to us who bear his name to "look up to the world's needs, see it as it is, and say, 'For their sakes I will sanctify myself.'"

Thursday afternoon the Honorable James A. Kelly of Glasgow, Scotland, Vice President of the World's C. E., discussed the relation of the principles of C. E. in our present world crisis. "The present station in which the youth finds itself demands that we do what we can in erecting a new conception of society," he stated. The principles of Christian Endeavor—loyalty to Christ, service, loyalty to the church, and fellowship with peoples, are principles which bind us all together, promoting good-will, and which aid us in establishing this new concept of society upon which our future destiny rests. Thursday evening at the Fellowship Banquet, we were privileged to hear Fay Le Meadows, former president of the C. E. Union of Ontario, Canada, who spoke on "Discovering a New World." "We have been pushed into a chaotic world but we must help to build a new world because we are young, brave, and Christian," he stated. Four things he stressed which we must face if we are to build a new world—we must learn to work, enthusiastically and bravely, we must create a true philosophy, we must learn to choose correctly, and we must fall in love with life itself,—to love life for all it holds, for all it gives, and for all it offers.

The crowning moment of our inspiring convention was reached Friday evening when Dr. Daniel A. Poling spoke during the last session, taking for his topic "What Does It Mean to Follow Jesus?" Basing his remarks on the story of the rich young ruler's meeting with Christ. Dr. Poling indicated that in calling men and women to follow him, Christ always makes clear the requirements as well as the opportunities which this course demands. To follow Jesus means to choose his life with full knowledge of what it demands as well as offers, to accept his attitude towards the truth—dauntless and unafraid, and to accept his attitude towards personal rights—which means to surrender personal rights for the good of others. "The choicest right we have is the right to live, to grow, and to be free."

In closing this rather sketchy report of the convention, may I make a plea that all our Christian Endeavor young people and societies will support and participate in the work of this great movement? Especially in Ohio, will you see that next year as we meet in New Philadelphia, Ohio for our 49th convention, that your society is well represented? Will you, pastors, if you wish to hold your young people to the uplifted Christ, do your share in supporting this work and share in the inspiration of doing "greater things than these for Christ and the Church?"

ATTENTION! C. E. Officers and members! To date only ten societies have cooperated with the National Organization this year.

Won't you try to send in at least a small gift toward this work AS SOON AS POSSIBLE? And if you have no gift, please do your Secretary the favor of at least sending in the name and address of your present Christian Endeavor President. Many societies have not reported officers' names for several years and it is difficult to even correspond with you. THANKS FOR YOUR PROMPT ATTENTION!

Modern ocean liners are equipped with fire-fighting systems as complete as those of any up-to-date city, says Popular Mechanics. If a fire breaks out in a cabin, automatic warning is given to the officer on the bridge. One of the crew investigates the fire and reports back to the officer on the bridge, who can call the fire patrol or ring alarm bells throughout the ship.

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

seh among the thorns, and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon" (677 B. C.) At this time it was subject to the authority of the kings of Nineveh and converted into its southern, or second capital.

Interesting though it be to list the numerous names, in addition to the few already mentioned, along with a recoument of their conspicuous deeds, an imperatively needed compression of topographical space puts an obvious veto upon the ardent desire. We can but content ourselves to spotlight one of the most illustrious, "The Grand Monarch" Ashurbanipal, called by the Greeks Sardanapalus, under whose reign of forty-two years Assyria reached the zenith of her glory and renown, as its territory stretched from Media and Persia on the east, to Egypt and Lydia on the South. He was a great patron of learning, and the builder of a library filled with the literary treasures rifled from the libraries of Babylon.

From the pages of the Holy Scriptures, as voluminously supplemented by the records in stone and clay, brought to the light of modern day by the triumphs of pick and spade amid the ruins of Nineveh, we are able to form a fairly accurate perspective of her prestige and power.

Endless streams of rich spoil of successful campaign continuously flowed into the treasure coffers of Nineveh, that enabled it to extend and strengthen its walls, to beautify and embellish its royal courts and palaces and public buildings and libraries, thus creating her without a peer among the great cities of that distant time.

The three times repeated references in the Book of Jonah confirm it—

"Nineveh, That Great City," with the added emphasis, "An exceeding great city of three days' journey."

But at the very crest of her exaltation, "Nineveh, the Magnificent," was in process of toppling to its ruin. But before the final stroke fell, God sent his merciful messages of warning, the first at the mouth of Jonah, 253 years before its fulfillment. Nearly a century and a half following, Nahum uttered the second, 713 B. C.: "I will make thy grave, for thou art vile;" followed by Zephaniah just a decade or two before the judgment fell, "And he will make Nineveh a desolation" (630 B. C.)

And why? Sin. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

But the warning messages were all in vain. Were not the defenders of "Nineveh, the Magnificent," mighty men of valor, its walls and ramparts impregnable, did not a legend assure them, "None shall destroy Nineveh until the river becomes its enemy?"

During the feeble reign of its last king, Sin-Shar-Ashkun, an effeminate epicurean who coined the aphorism, "Stranger go thy way, eat, drink, and be merry, for the rest of life is not worth a snap of the fingers," a powerful coalition was formed against the fated city by Cyaxares, king of Media, and Nabopolassar, deputy king of Babylon. Suddenly, during the progress of the siege, the Tigris rose to a flood tide, creating a wide break in the city's walls, through which the invaders entered in triumph, and the proud capital of Assyria, "Nineveh, the Magnificent," fell to rise no more (606 B. C.)

A mighty city, whose ancestry stretched back unbroken into the mists of more than two thousand years, whose imperious will swayed the destinies of nations, and from whose massive gates mighty legions swept forth to conquest, and whose broad streets and plazas witnessed their triumphal return, with captive monarchs and generals shackled in clanking chains to make a Ninevite holiday.

"How has she become a desolation?" The silence and the rust of the slowly creeping centuries fell upon her, and for two thousand four hundred years she became forgotten, "as a dead man out of mind."

To be continued.

Kee, who had never accepted the Lord. Fearing that the Lord might come before our fall revival and find them unprepared, we made a special effort and had the joy of baptizing eight one Sunday afternoon.

Christian Literature

One of the greatest forms of Christian service is in the use of the printed page and although the interest of many is at zero, yet others have taken advantage of their great opportunity. Among these is one who operates a hotel and uses tracts and Gospels of John in the rooms. Another, being a miller, has put tracts in sacks of flour.

We have also sent a large amount of literature to "Lucky Baldwin" to be used in the Bridewell Jail of Chicago. As my titling account permits, I send an envelope full of tracts to every address, both rural and city, in Martinsburg. In this way, many thousands of tracts have been distributed in homes where there is little knowledge of the Lord. We also scattered several thousand on the trip to the world's fair and do so in other places as we travel by train or auto. In consulting my records, I find that 59 600 tracts came into my hands last year, besides several hundreds of Gospels of John.

Foreign Missions

We are now looking forward to the coming of Brother Yett. We are glad for the interest of these people in foreign missions. This year Martinsburg gave an increase over last year. Last year McKee gave the largest offering in their history but through an error were not credited with the full amount. However, our Lord has not forgotten.

Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus.
R. I. HUMBERD.

GLEANINGS FROM ELKHART

Coming to Elkhart last fall was not like going into a strange field. In our nine years at Goshen, we had often fraternized with the Brethren here. Now almost a year of our sojourn has elapsed, and with the knowledge we had of the field before we came and that which we have gained since, we feel quite well settled. The year with all its strange experiences of a new field, and the unusual strain of the times, has gone very pleasantly and rapidly. We have had very little within the church to make our work difficult. As for other conditions, they are about the same as everywhere. This is not the day when we preach for money, if there ever was such a day. Elkhart folks are noted for their loyalty to their church, and have shown it in a marked degree since our arrival. All the different departments of the work have responded in their way to our leadership. I think this is what most pastors desire most of all.

Our services are continually enlivened by the fine choir which is ably directed by our own Faye Wilson. The Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, Missionary Society, Boy Scouts, Junior Sisterhood, are all bearing their load with great zest. The year has seen no records broken, but we have maintained much of the fine structure built by our predecessor and his helpers. We are now planning for the Training School and Bible Conference at Shipshewana. This year we will have our usual group of young people in attendance. I want to publicly thank all who have helped to make my ministry to have a certain degree of suc-

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

NOTES FROM MARTINSBURG AND MCKEE, PENNSYLVANIA

About the newest news from Martinsburg and McKee, is the visit of the "California Quartet". I am usually disappointed with such programs but for one of the few times in my life, it is otherwise. I thank God for the visit of these boys. Their presence tended only in one direction—a closer walk with our Lord.

For five nights previous to our spring communion we were privileged to have with us, Brother Joe Gingrich of Johnstown. Brother Gingrich used no thrills to bid for an audience but each night gave a sober exposition of the Scripture. It is that kind of preaching that God has promised to honor.

The Lord's Day

God's people are suffering an eternal loss when the minister uses his opportunity in another way than preaching the Word. For this cause we pay little attention to the Lincoln's days, Memorial days, Father's days and all the multitude of other "days" which a modern generation has invented to rob our Lord of his day. Truly the Lord's day should be observed in such a way as to honor him to whom honor is due. In one church we have just completed the book of James and are now studying the book of Revelation. In the other church we are studying first Corinthians in the morning and the Tabernacle in the evening services.

The World's Fair

For some time I have been afflicted with what the doctors call, "Nothing but nerves." But anyone bothered with nerves knows full well the great difficulty in controlling the trouble.

In an effort to quiet my nerves, my churches kindly granted me a few weeks of absence. I spent about two days at the world's fair in Chicago. I could wish for several days in the "Hall of Science" building for "The works of the Lord are great, sought out of all of them that have pleasure therein" (Psalm 111:2). True science has to do with seeking out God's wonders and in fulfilling the early command to "subdue" the earth, and can well be of interest to the Christian.

However, not all is of profit. As usual, there is the mingling of the good and the bad. God was represented at the fair by the American Bible Society, while Satan had his room for Christian Science. In the matter of exercise, there were the broad walks with an abundant supply of sunshine and fresh air from the lake, while on the other hand the "A and P" Store provided for that abomination—the dance. In the matter of science, we marveled at the wonders of true science but were disgusted at the display of "science falsely so called," as they set before us the evolution of the human face up through a dozen or so links from the head of a fish.

Probably nothing fills my heart with reverence as "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers; the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained" (Ps. 8:3).

A visit to the Planetarium was a privilege. We saw the stars in their courses and the planets in their ever changing movements about the sun. Certainly a machine that can display a few of the movements of the heavenly bodies is a marvel but when I consider the marvelous system of the stars themselves I am made to feel with the Psalmist, "What is man that thou art mindful of him". What a privilege to be an heir of their Creator and a joint-heir of our Lord Jesus Christ! What eternal joys await us as we take long excursions through the limitless void of God's space, visiting and beholding the wonders of each individual star, "For one star differeth from another star in glory" (1 Cor. 15).

Blessed Assurance

Repeated experience has made me feel that it is hardly an accident for me to have some form of difficulty when I give my Bible chart lecture on Satan.

Sometime ago while in meetings, I had gotten along very well with my nerves until the evening I spoke on Satan. On that evening I could hardly finish my message and immediately after service I sat for some time in the coolness of an open window in an effort to keep my heart beating. I later went to my room and then to bed. I lay thinking of the possibility of my heart stopping and almost feared to go to sleep. However, I soon fell asleep. It seemed but a few moments later that I awoke and was aware that my room was flooded with a very bright light. For one brief fraction of a second I thought my heart had stopped and I was entering heaven. It proved to be morning and the sun was shining brightly, but how I thank God for the blessed assurance of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ. Certainly it gives us a new impulse to labor, that, whether present or absent from the body, we may be accepted of him, and walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called.

Baptisms

In view of the near return of our Lord, it behooves us to "watch." This does not mean to sit idly by, but to have our lamps trimmed and everything in readiness.

There were several young people at Mccess, and ask others to pray for us that as we labor on, the great problems before us may be successfully met.

H. F. STUCKMAN.

THE UNITED SERVICE

The Editor has asked that we describe the United Service we have at the First Brethren church, Johnstown, Pennsylvania. We have waited until we had given it a six months' trial. Last January we introduced this form of morning service. It is not a "merged service"—which usually does not merge. It is not a "union" service which usually does not unite. It is a "united" service,—that is, one service, not two mechanically joined. The service is conducted after this form,—the first half hour is strictly worship; the next half hour is for the sermon then we go immediately to the classes for Bible study of one-half hour; then we return for announcements, reports, etc. It consumes one hour and forty-five minutes of time, beginning at 10 o'clock and closing at 11:45. We put into it all the instruction and worship we formerly required two hours and a half for because we have eliminated duplications and wasted time in going to and fro.

What have been the results in the six months period? The church and Sunday school have been cemented together as one. The gulf between the two has been bridged or rather eliminated. The attendance at the sermon part of the service (what formerly was known as the church service) has had an average increase of 102 per Sunday. The class attendance of Bible study (what formerly was known as the Sunday school) has had an average increase of 60 per Sunday. The work of the two has been harmonized and unified in a most satisfactory manner. More children and young people have been brought into the study of the Word in the classes. It has been necessary to open the second auditorium each Sunday to accommodate the congregation. The interruption of the worship period for announcements has ceased for none are made until the closing part of the entire service when all return from the classes. The preacher has the folks fresh for his message without the confusion which at times amounts to almost turmoil in changing from the Sunday school to the church service. The worship and sermon coming first prepares the minds and hearts for a deeper and more spiritual study of the Sunday school lesson. All in all, it has proven most satisfactory with us and there is no thought of returning to the former form of service.

Pastor, CHARLES H. ASHMAN.

WINONA LAKE BIBLE CONFERENCE

The program for the Thirty-ninth Annual Bible Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, is one of the very best that has yet been presented. This Conference carries the name of being "The World's Greatest Bible Conference." It is well known that it is the greatest from the standpoint of attendance, the attendance ranging from 2,000 to 8,000, and it would, indeed, be difficult to see how it could be made any greater in the character of its program and the richness of its spiritual tone. Winona is conservative and it cares for no one on its program with any uncertain tone in his message.

The date for the Conference for this season is Friday, August 11, through Sunday, August 20. Send to the Winona Lake Bible Conference, Winona Lake, Indiana, for a Program.

The names and the dates of the Speakers are as follows:

"STRONG DRINK IS RAGING"

In every land where intoxicants are manufactured and used for a beverage, they are a curse. It has been so since the days of Noah. It was so among the Hebrews when they were warned against wine and strong drink that "stingeth like an adder." Strong characters may avoid excess but to the young and the weak alcohol brings a loss of self-control—in body, mind and morals—and the use of it endangers others. This has been so clearly recognized that wise parents have striven to keep their children from strong drink; enlightened governments have endeavored to protect their wards—as in the case of the American Indians, the South Sea Islanders, and the Africans. This liquid fire and poison have been the cause of brawls and bloodshed, of disease and immoral revels, of accidents and death, of selfish greed and inhuman cruelty wherever it has been used freely. Strong men and women have been brought low by it; millions have been impoverished and destroyed by this curse. It seems incomprehensible that a nation like America, with its Christian heritage and culture, its prosperity and ideals, should take a backward step by again acquiescing in the manufacture and general use of this harmful beverage. For the sake of revenue and under the plea of personal liberty America seems about to sell her birthright for a mess of distilled or fermented drink.

Many governments have tried experiments in the suppression or control of the liquor traffic. Most of these measures have failed because of human greed for gold, because of individual desire for free indulgence of appetite, and because of faulty education and lack of Christian ideals. In the days before the Eighteenth Amendment was passed in the United States the saloon forces ruled politics and sapped the life of cities. Saloons flourished on the wages of the laborers and were closely linked with all forms of immorality and crime. Then, after years of education and agitation, the saloon and traffic in alcoholic drink was outlawed. The saloon disappeared, distilleries and breweries were abandoned or converted to better uses; as a result rescue missions found little need for their services, the wives and children of former drunkards enjoyed the benefit of wages spent on the family in place of in the saloon, and the beneficial effects were felt in business, in education, in health and in happiness. But the greed of dealers in strong drink was not satisfied. Many of them joined hands with the lawless elements to regain their lost wealth and power. The youth were tempted and misled on the plea of personal liberty and by a desire for self-indulgence; specious arguments were used in the press and on the platform to repeal the laws against the evil. The spread of disregard for all law, and the increasing financial depression, have turned the tide so that both houses of Congress have voted to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment if two-thirds of the states approve. It may be done. The majority of the present generation knows little or nothing of the old days of the saloon. They are misled. This in spite of the fact that, before 1918, in many lines of industry and among railway employees, even moderate drinkers could not obtain employment. Today the use of the high-powered automobile is so general that a single glass of intoxicating liquor may endanger hundreds of lives. It is said that the tax on beer will fill the government treasury—but no one tells who is to pay for the rivers of beer that must flow down human throats to supply the tax. Is the money to come from wages that should furnish homes and food, clothing and health for women and children? Are we to support the saloons in place of schools, and dance halls in place of churches? Is the money used for drink to help fill hospitals and graveyards in place of replenishing bank accounts?

What has all this to do with missions?

First, anything that affects the morals and judgment of people is of vital concern to the Christian program. Strong drink, that takes away self-control and clear vision, is antagonistic to all that the Christian Church is doing to build up the Kingdom of God and to bring in the control of Christ.

Second, the spending of labor, materials and money on a destructive, rather than a constructive enterprise, cannot fail to weaken the nation, the Church, the school and the home. One cannot be "drunk with wine, wherein is excess," and at the same time "be filled with the Spirit" of God who in place of hallucinations gives clear vision, for false energy gives true strength, for abnormal animation offers true exhilaration.

Third, the manufacture and use of intoxicants has always been one of the greatest hindrances to the spread of Christianity. Rum in the hold and missionaries in the cabins of ships bound for Africa and the South Seas represented antagonistic forces. There is great need to spread temperance and Christian ideals in all lands today rather than to give the forces of evil an opportunity to point to America as a land where the demon rum is again enthroned.

1. A knowledge of facts.
 2. No compromise with evil.
 3. Repudiation of the lust of gold.
 4. Education and example to teach self-control and to show the evils of alcohol.
 5. A greater respect for all laws that are in harmony with the laws of God.
 6. Acceptance of the Christian ideal of love which works no ill to one's neighbor.
 7. The enthronement of Christ in all life.

The Old and the New Covenant

so because we love the brethren, and because we love him who first loved us, and commanded us to follow his loving example. To me this is one of the most blessed hours of our fellowship, when we may all sit together upon the same social level and wash one another's feet in the name of our common Lord.

Returning now to the manner of eating the Passover,

The dish of sauce being removed, the bitter herbs having been eaten, and the leavened bread broken, all of the debris of the meal is removed from the table and the second cup, or Cup of Salvation, was set before the guests by the host.

The host or patriarch gave thanks for this cup, and waited for some of the younger men to ask questions regarding the cause of this great festival. Upon interrogation, the host informed the younger men as to the origin, and meaning of the Passover, or God's Covenant with his people, after which the cup was passed and its contents consumed. (This is probably the cup mentioned in Luke 22:17.)

Following this, the actual Paschal Supper was served. The unleavened bread and the lamb were set upon the table, and the host then opened what is strictly the Paschal Supper, by proclaiming a solemn thanksgiving, which was followed with the singing of the first half of the "Hallel" (Psalms 113-114-115.)

A second washing of hands then occurred, after which the host passed portions of the unleavened bread and the lamb was eaten with the bread.

The third cup, or "Cup of Blessing" was then passed, and all drank of it. In all probability this is the cup mentioned by Luke 22:20 as "the cup after supper", which became the token of the new covenant between Christ and his people. This is indeed "The Cup of Blessing" to all mankind. He said: "This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you" (Luke 22:20). In other words: the cup of the new covenant with his people.

The last act was the presentation of the fourth cup, or the "Cup of Hallel" (The Hallelujah Cup.) With the presentation of this cup the second half of the Hallel was sung (Psalms 116-117-118.) The Gospel narrative does not tell us whether Jesus used this customary cup or not, but we believe that he did, inasmuch as the last thing noted is that: "When they had sung an hymn, they went out to the mount of Olives" (Matt. 26:30).

But we do know that with the drinking of the "Cup of Blessing" our Lord instituted the New Covenant with his people, saying these words: "This is my Body; this is my Blood." Just as the words "This is my Body" give to the bread a new character, so does the phrase "This is my Blood", extend to us new life and hope.

As Brethren, we do not accept the belief of the Roman Church, Trans-substantiation, but we believe that the bread and wine are emblematic, representing great things just as the unleavened bread, bitter herbs and sauce were representative of the enslavement, pity of God, and ultimate delivery by him of the Israelites. Yet we secure much comfort from the statement: "This is my body; this is my blood."

I believe that I can better illustrate just what I mean by telling you something I saw that serves as a better means of showing the atoning life-saving blood of Jesus.

Some time ago I was making a call at one of our largest hospitals. While there a young man was brought in. He had been in an accident and was seriously wounded. Loss of blood necessitated an immediate transfusion of blood to save his life. But whose blood would be used? An older brother stepped forth. "I'll give him of my blood" he said. "Is your blood pure?" he was asked. "Test it to see", he replied. The test was made; his blood was pure. I stood by and watched the blood flow from the vein of the elder brother to the body of the wounded young man. Soon the pallor began to leave his cheeks, and he lived!

So, when I put the cup of the New Covenant to my lips it brings to my mind the fact that once I was sick from sin, badly injured and under the penalty of death. Jesus, my Elder Brother, looked upon me with pity, loved me, and gave his blood for me that I might live. His blood was pure. It was healing. It gave life.

His blood has never failed. His blood will never fail. His blood cleanses from all sin.

What Young People Can Do to Aid Prohibition

himself a wet and would hardly make the amount larger than it really was. I myself have seen a young man no older than myself drunk on four percent beer. A few weeks ago a friend of mine, a man more than twenty years my senior, saw two drunk men on the streets of Washington. He said that they were the first drunks that he had seen since the saloons were closed. Beer certainly is intoxicating. You would not patronize the saloonkeeper, why do you patronize the groceryman, the druggist or the restaurant keeper who sells this alcoholic beverage. Many Christians now refuse to buy from those dealers but a united boycott by all Christians is needed to change the present conditions. It is now often difficult to find a store or restaurant where beer is not sold.

The third thing that we can do is to vote dry. Above all vote for the retention of the eighteenth amendment. Vote for dry candidates for office, vote dry at every opportunity. The wets make every effort to have all of their number at the polls to cast wet votes, we should be as zealous in having all of the dry voters on hand. If the eighteenth amendment is repealed do not give up the fight. We must then start again to fight for local, county and State dry options.

The fourth and last thing that I shall mention is that young people can pray about this problem. Certainly anything that will so effect our future safety and wellbeing as the outcome of the liquor controversy will, should be the object of constant prayer. If you can do nothing else, do not neglect to pray. God will hear the prayers of his people and will certainly change things. As I close I wish to say that if by the first part of my message I have led you to want to aid prohibition, you can for yourselves find other things which you can do. Do not be limited by the things which I have mentioned but according to every opportunity that is presented, do everything within your power to aid prohibition.

Washington, D. C.

JERUSALEM IS STRATEGIC

For Jerusalem is still strategic. It is the place of influence and of power. It is the place where religion is outwardly professed but not inwardly possessed. It is the place where we open our Congress with prayer, and inscribe the name of God upon our coins, and put the Bible in our courtrooms, and spend millions to erect beautiful edifices of worship, but which behind the outward symbols of religion too often hides a pagan heart. It is the place of pride but not of penitence.—Dr. Harold Cooke Phillips, in "Seeing The Invisible."

THE PONY THAT POUTED

By Emma Mauritz Larson

When Uncle John brought home the red racer wagon for Danny and Cousin Louise to play with, they were very happy over it. There were so many fine games to play with it.

Sometimes they brought in apples from the orchard with it. That helped mother and they liked to do it too. They played then that they were gardeners and going to town to market like Mr. Green, the man who went driving by on the road every day and who always called out: "Hello, want a ride?"

Several times they had had a ride with him as far as the schoolhouse and back again. The seat was very high, and the two horses, Whitey and Bob, went galloping along. Danny said he liked it better than any automobile and that when he was grown up he was going to have a big team and take tomatoes into town too. And Louise liked it too and said that Mr. Green was the best friend they had, and when her birthday came she was going to give him two sticks of her nicest candy.

Mr. Green just laughed and said: "Thank you, that will be fine. And some day before long your mothers have said I may take you way over to the river with me. If I get through early enough some afternoon, I'll just stop and pick you up quickly and we'll drive over. I shouldn't wonder if you could each catch a fish over there with Billy Marvin's fish pole while I talk to him about some berry bushes."

After that every day while they were playing that the wagon was an auto or a pony cart or a train and that they were going to New York or London, Danny and Louise kept looking too for Mr. Green to come. If he got through early, maybe they would go to the river today. But he didn't come until almost supper time because he was so busy at the market in town.

One morning it was Louise's turn to choose what they would play. So she said: "You can be the horse Bob, Danny, and I'll be Mr. Green. And we'll go galloping out and get some windfall apples from the ground. Mother won't care if we take them and we'll play we're selling them to lots of people."

"I don't want to be a horse," Danny pouted.

"Well, then you get in and be Mr. Green and I'll be Whitey," Louise laughed. "I look a good deal like Whitey with this dress on."

But Danny seemed very cross today, and that plan didn't suit him either.

"Well, then let's play automobile and go to New York," Louise said again.

"I don't want to play auto either," Danny said. And he just sat on the front of the red racer wagon and wouldn't look up at all.

Then suddenly from way off on the road next to the orchard Louise heard some one calling. "I don't know who it is," she said, "but maybe they are calling us. I think I'll run and see. Nobody that we know goes by at ten o'clock in the morning."

So she left the pony pouting on the edge of the red racer wagon and flew through the orchard. But in a minute she was back again, calling: "Danny, we're going fishing for the whole day. It's Mr. Green and he said another man took his tomatoes in today to the market, so he could have a holiday all day. And we're going to the river, and he's got dinner for us in a basket, and he says he knows we'll catch ten fishes."

After they had told mother all about it, they started off in a nice little buggy that Danny and Louise had never seen before. They had a gentle horse, Velvet, that Mr. Green said they might try to drive sometime. And then he said: "I almost went without you today. I looked all along the orchard and the places that you usually play. And I called too. I thought perhaps you had gone away and that I couldn't take you to the river after all. Where were you two playing?"

"Oh, we were just over by the Linden trees," Louise said. "We hadn't come out to the orchard to play yet this morning." She didn't want to tell him that Danny had just been pouting and wouldn't let the wagon move toward the orchard at all.

But Danny said: "It was my fault, Mr. Green. I was cross. I wouldn't be Bob, and I didn't want to play auto or anything. But now I know that boys who pout just spoil everybody's fun; so I won't do it again."

And he never did.—Christian Advocate, St. Paul, Minnesota.

It is not enough to say that "God is love"; this is a creed to be worked out in all our intercourse with others. The children of the Great Father must also be loving and kind.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NATIONAL CONFERENCE CREDENTIALS

The National Conference Secretary has forwarded Credential Blanks to the various churches. If for any reason any pastor or church failed to receive theirs or lack enough, the Secretary will gladly forward more upon request.

J. L. GINGRICH, Secretary.

STATISTICAL REPORTS

Yes, we should have them this year. These are as important this year as they have ever been, perhaps more important to the various Church Boards in their work. District Statisticians, in some cases, are complaining that the churches do not respond. If the blanks have come into the hands of a Secretary that has been replaced with a new one, common courtesy to your church and successor would demand you turn the blanks over to the proper one. Certainly there is no church in the brotherhood which needs to be ASHAMED of your church and its standing. PLEASE send your District Statistician that report at once. He can not report to your District Conference if you do not, and your National Statistician can not report to National Conference unless you report. The expense to National Conference and District Conference will have to be paid and we should have your reports so YOU with the other churches will be justly represented. DO IT NOW AND IT WILL BE DONE.

The Stranger on the Shore

A lazy sail on a summer sea,
And common fishermen—one, two, three.

One was Peter, and one was James,
And one was John—most common names!

They caught their fish, and they came to shore,
Where they met a stranger—nothing more.

But around the world the fishermen three
Cast their nets for you and me.

Ard around the world their names became Like words of magic written in flame.

Come, meet the Stranger! For still he stands
And beckons to men on the shining sands.

And if you listen and hear his call,
He will change your earth, and heaven, and all.

Beer 3.2--The Nine-Day Wonder

Men shall be . . . lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God.—11 Tim. 3:2, 4.

The coming of beer was "Nine-day Wonder," of which the newspapers made too much. There seems to be little excitement about it now. The New York State Police are now inspecting 4000 applications for permits to sell the stuff and are finding that many of them are in the hands of bootleggers. Even the legitimate brewers are howling for protection from the racketeers. Are not they the bunch who told us, that with the coming of real beer the bootleggers' trade and stranglehold on the nation would be broken? You men of the liquor ilk—you always were deceptive, and we suppose you always will be. Liquor makes men see more than strange women; it makes men see phantoms of the mind, strange illusions. One of the strange illusions of the day is the idea that 3.2 beer is more harmless than the real stuff. It might be good to consult the old alcoholic schedule, and compare. Here is the Popular Schedule of Pre-prohibition Days; Pabst Blue Ribbon, 2.9; Toxsetti Bohemian, 2.5; Schlitz Pale, 3.1; Cream City Pilsner, 3.3; Blotz, 3.5. Note the hypocrisy—nonintoxicating but to be taxed. Nonintoxicating, but requiring special control. How about a liquor board now for the control of pop, lemonade? No wonder some of the Wets fear that the Beer Bill may defeat the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. Well, they have invited their own deluge. Let them now seek to ride the storm—drunkards, bootleggers, racketeers, and all.

"When the Brewers Had the Stranglehold"

It will not be amiss, from the standpoint of informational data to include the review of the book, "When the Brewers had the Stranglehold" by I. J. Irvin:

"Out of thine own mouth-will I judge thee thou wicked servant." These words might well adorn the title page of the book which has recently come from the press entitled "When the Brewers Had the Stranglehold." Its author is Ernest Gordon and it is sponsored by "The Alcohol Information Committee", 150 Fifth Avenue, New York.

The book is strongly documented. It is little more than a compilation especially arranged of sworn testimony from brewers' agents, their records, their correspondence and their press. There is no declamation, no violent language, no denunciation. Once in a while a bit of fine sarcasm slips in. The records are made to tell their own story, yet the book is one of the most damaging indictments of the beer trade that language could present.

The material is mostly from the Overman Report of the United States Senate Judiciary Hearings, 1919, and from the United States Senate Judiciary Hearings, 1930, from the document known as "The Breweries and Texas Politics," and from the Brewers' Journal and other periodicals. At the end of each chapter is found a long list of sources giving "chapter and verse" for every citation.

Reveal Intrigue, Conspiracy and Tyranny

Its ten chapters reveal an intrigue a conspiracy and a tyranny beyond conception. A tax of 3c per barrel on the output of every brewery in the Association, supplemented by contributions from 50,000 allied firms, furnished the sinews of war.

In every state were not only the liquor dealers organized but also their wives; likewise the allied trades. An inquisitorial system listed the leading men in many cities and towns, giving their name, address, whether married or single, their club, their political organization, and financial standing, their banker and his temperance attitude, their religion their fraternal orders, their recreation, the names of their closest associates and the influence of the wife in their business or their politics.

Because of unfriendly utterances toward the brewers' interests, men of might were humbled, sometimes by pressure through their bank withdrawing loans, or by boycotting their trade. The black list was lengthy, including such names as Proctor and Gamble, the Maryland Casualty, the Macey Co., the Horton Ice Cream Co., the Heinz Co., railway companies, telegraph companies, etc.

A business man of continental reputation became President of a Sabbath School Association which passed temperance resolutions. A boycott was instituted, he was put on the defensive and made to declare in writing to the National Retailers Association that "neither I myself, my firm or any member of it has given or promised to give any amount to the Anti-Saloon League or any similar organization."

A great rubber company in its trade paper, published some results of scientific investigation of alcohol. They were boycotted through the users of tires and humiliated. Its president had declined to write: "Prohibition has absolutely broken down, the licensing system is the best and most practical one, compensation out of the public funds should be granted when drink shops are closed." The final terms held out to this company were, "If you declare your opposition to State and National Prohibition, I am in a position to assure you that it will result in an official letter being sent out to all the U. S. B. A. members and affiliations in the United States. . . . The ——— people have completely cleared themselves and now I would like you to take this one more step to wipe out your competitors' argument that you are not friendly to us."

Many firms had to put their renunciation of their principle in black and white.

It worked the Labor Unions and the negro vote, nominated politicians and lobbied powerfully against legislation, supported blind pigs and fostered organize dvce.

Press Bartered and Bull-dozed

Very effectively strategy was exercised through the press. In many instances papers were tempted to accept either news or editorial matter for a price. Some editors were even ready to accept pay for editorials against prohibition written by themselves. In the Nebraska campaign rural "weeklies were paid from $50 to $500," states Mr. Crowell, "but the city daily papers we had to pay up to $4,000." The Indianapolis News, it is stated was offered $50,000 if it would dismiss W. H. Blodgett who had made an investigation of brewery corruption in Indiana.

Articles were paid for by brewers' money and sold to reputable magazines in great variety. The Association directly subscribed or advised the trade to subscribe to friendly journals like Harper's Weekly and Leslie's. The friendly attitude and the financial need of the Outlook and Independent were subjects of comment between Mr. Curran and Mr. Raskob. The Atlantic became the vehicle for articles by John Koren, servant of the Brewers' Association. Agents of the Associated Press were friendly. Herbert S. Stone, son of Mr. McIlvlie Stone, its manager, carried on a campaign for the Brewers' Association among the country newspapers successfully in at least fifteen States of the Union.

The versatility and ingenuity of Mr. Hugh Fox, Secretary of the United States Brewers' Association, to whose ability much of the success of this propaganda has been due, may be gathered from the fact that one of its reports describes him as a "member of all the national societies which have anything to do with public health political science, social science and economics criminology, charities and social hygiene," fifty-three organizations in all. During conference seasons, he even filled Protestant pulpits.

It is doubtful if literature holds a record of a more subtle, persistent, unscrupulous and ruthless effort to coerce business, pervert politics, prostitute the press and defeat the will of the people than is revealed by the facts in this book.—Christian Monitor.

The William H. Nicholls medal of the New York section of the American Chemical Society for 1933 has been awarded to Dr. Wilder D. Bancroft, professor of physical chemistry at Cornell University, for his work on the application of colloid chemistry to physiological problems, particularly insanity. Dr. Bancroft has advanced scientific proof that dementia and drug addiction are curable chemically.

Experiments made over a period of nine years in the Sleep Laboratory at Colgate University show that the old saying that an hour in bed before midnight is worth two hours after is not true to fact. The findings show that although sleep is lighter in the second and succeeding hours after retiring, it is relaxed and more beneficial. "How well you sleep is more important than how deeply or how long."

A Preference for Hot Christians

Our Lord has a decided preference for hot Christians, and we say it reverently. This preference is expressed in numerous instances, but no where more explicitly than in Revelation 3:15, 16, where we read these striking words: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would that thou wert cold or hot. So because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." And he hit against half-heartedness again when he said: "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad" (Matt. 12:30). There are some people who take that attitude toward Christ and his church, they have not enough conviction and zeal to declare for Christ, and yet they do not wish to be counted as against him. But such folks our Lord not only does not own but disowns. He recognizes no neutral ground; a man is either for him or against him. And if a man is for him, he must show it; he must possess some of the characteristics of a disciple; he must manifest something of the spirit and conduct of a Christian. And the more outstanding and pronounced a person is in his allegiance, the more highly does the Lord prize him and the more effective is he in divine service. And great is the need for hot Christians in these days.

There is very good reason why Christ prefers hot Christians,—they are Spirit-filled Christians. That is what makes men hot for God—the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in large measure. It has always been so that when men were in possession of the Spirit, they have had great zeal and power for God. In the days of the Judges, the Spirit came upon men and women and they became mighty, enthusiastic forces in the hands of God for the turning of his people back to him and delivering them from their enemies. The Spirit of God came upon Othniel and he judged Israel and went out to war and delivered his people from the hands of the Mesopotamian king. Gideon and Jephthah were similarly endowed and moved by the Spirit. It was the Spirit that stirred up Samson, empowered him and caused him to burn with rage against the Philistines. In Saul and David the Spirit was greatly manifest. Concerning Saul it is said that the Spirit came mightily upon him and he prophesied. So completely did the Spirit come into control that it is said that Saul was turned into another man, or God gave him another heart. The result of the change was that he was filled with the passion of war and endowed for leadership. And of David it is said, that from the time of his anointing by Samuel, the Spirit of God came mightily upon him from that day forward. The Spirit came upon the prophets and they were changed into flaming messengers of the will of God to the people. The Spirit descended upon Mary and overshadowed her with its creative presence. It inspired Elizabeth, Zacharias and Simeon. Concerning John the Baptist the angel prophesied that he should be filled with the Holy Spirit, with the Spirit and power of Elijah. At Pentecost the Spirit came upon the disciples with such evident empowerment that the people beholding were amazed and it kindled such zeal for witnessing that no threat or persecution could extinguish it. That same Spirit moved Paul and Barnabas with a great passion for carrying the light of the Gospel to those who sat in darkness and the fire in their hearts burned on and on, and only death was able to quench it. The Spirit has continued on down through the centuries empowering men and women, changing their lives and setting them on fire for God. And he is still at it, the transforming, burning, consuming power of the Holy Spirit is still at work, destroying all pride, selfishness and self-seeking, making us forget everything except the love of God and the need of souls and causing us to flame forth with increasing love and Christ-like devotion and power.

No changed characteristic is more certain to be in evidence in the life that the Holy Spirit has set on fire for God than that of utter and complete self-sacrifice. It means the surrender of the whole being to God and for his service. It means laying upon the altar body and soul, time and strength, friends money, talents and ambition—everything, being willing to suffer persecution, ridicule and the loss of all things in order that souls may be won to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. Complete self-sacrifice—that is the aim, the ideal, the goal and we are steadily approaching, but who has reached it? But may we live in that spirit. May we be willing to pray: "Bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar." However much we fail to measure up, we must steadfastly keep our eyes upon the ideal and seek more and more of the spirit of sacrifice, for if that spirit leaves us, our hearts will no longer burn with the fire of God.

That leads to the further emphasis that we need to make, and that is to urge a never-dying spirit of perseverance in effort to keep on fire for God. All too many Christians burn for God after the fashion of the fire on the blacksmith's forge, intermittently high and low, responding with enthusiasm to special effort and then cooling off and taking it easy as soon as the pressure is released. We need more the attitude of the raging prairie fire, leaping forward continually from tuft to tuft until the whole prairie has been burned clean and all the dead grass of indifference and weeds of sin have been consumed. This persevering hotness is necessary in every type of service for the kingdom of God, especially that of winning souls to Christ and the church. There is need of what another calls "a desperate and holy enthusiasm, a dogged war-spirit, which follows after souls like hounds upon a blood-track, holding on like bulldogs to their prey, until the conscience is reached, the will surrendered, the soul saved." We are too afraid of being overenthusiastic and too persistent. We are prone to apologize for our aggressiveness. We shrink from the possibility of being a bore, or a crank, and usually find ourselves having gone to the other extreme of lukewarmness and indifference. We need more people who are not afraid of being cranks in persistence for God, who are willing to keep right on burning with hot heat when everybody else has cooled off.

And be assured that one cannot burn brightly for God without other people knowing it and being influenced by it. You cannot hide a flaming fire without smothering it, and he who is timid about others seeing him in action for God and tries to conceal his efforts will not have much action to hide and no zeal. Furthermore, he who is enthusiastic may be sure he will soon light the flame in other lives; for he will not need to burn alone for God long. Some one must be the first to burn, but if he burns brightly and hotly, he will soon be setting others afire. Every leader who is truly on fire for God, will become a fagot to light the fires of zeal in his fellow Christians. We need more leaders who are hot on the trail of souls to be saved and other spiritual activities. The Lord says, I would that thou wert hot. And his kingdom carries for just such leaders.

It is good to seek success in business or in the professions, and one may not be censured even for striving for first place in his line, if in it all he does not allow himself to become a worshipper of success, but keeps in mind that it is but an entrustment from God, and that "it is required of a steward that a man be found faithful."

Men are anxious to meet with the extraordinary opportunities of life, that they may make a big success, but they show little concern or faithfulness for the little, ordinary duties, though these form the door through which men enter into the larger successes.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Let every minister announce our special Evangelist rates from his pulpit and urge his people to join the Evangelist family. The paper makes its appeal on its merits. No Brethren family can afford to be without it. "7 MONTHS FOR $1.00."

Two training camps for Brethren young people are in session this week—one at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, and one at Loehr's Ranch near Canton, Ohio. Predictions were that both would be well attended.

In our introductory note to Dr. McCartneysmith last week, a slight mistake occurred. Brother Riddle informs us that Mrs. McCartneysmith has not just recently joined our church but "has been a member of the First Brethren church of Waterloo since a girl," and that "while she was in Detroit in connection with her music she always retained her membership here." We are sorry for the error and glad to make the correction.

Dr. Charles A. Bame, by virtue of his being chairman of the Board of Evangelists, is chairman of the new Ohio One-Year Program. He reproduces the program and urges action immediately. We commend him for his prompt move in this direction and pastors and other church leaders in Ohio ought to get busy and seek to carry out the objectives. It is especially important that prompt cooperation be had if the School for Evangelism is to be held during our National Conference.

We hope that all our Christian Endeavorers took time to read that splendid Ohio state convention report by Miss Josephine Garber, last week, even if we did fail to call attention to it at the time. It was abundantly worth your while. We invite other young people to send in reports of state or district conventions, and especially do we urge any Brethren young people going to the International Convention at Milwaukee to report the high points of interest.

Brother George A. Copp, treasurer of the Southeastern District Mission Board, calls upon the churches of that district to make payments on their apportionments. The good name of the district conference as well as the churches concerned is at stake in such a situation and unless payments are made promptly, all must suffer together. And we are inclined to the belief that those who default in their payments suffer more in reality than the mission pastors who are caused embarrassment because their salaries are not forthcoming.

A report from Dr. Florence N. Gribble tells of a conference of missionaries, now over. It was to be an unusual conference in that the natives were to have a conference simultaneous with the American missionaries' conference. Two man-eating leopards were killed near the Yaloke station by visiting missionaries. Brother and Sister J. W. Hathaway were to have left on June 25th for their furlough to the homeland. At an early date we may expect to hear of their arrival. The health of the missionaries was pretty good at the time the letter was written.

President E. E. Jacobs writes of the Summer School commencement exercises held at the close of the first term of school. There were sixty graduates and they showed their school loyalty by making a gift to the school of an electric motor for the mimeograph and a new addressograph. This is a fine expression of school interest, especially from a summer school graduating class. Dr. Jacobs says plans are under way for issuing news bulletins bi-monthly to the college constituency. That will be a step forward in the field of promotion and service. We join the school president in hoping that the churches will come forward with their best Educational Day offering, and that the slogan—"An Offering and a New Student from Every Church" will eventually be realized. We urge that all churches take care of this financial obligation at the earliest opportunity, and that all worthy young people ready for college be directed toward Ashland College.

The church at Washington, D. C. is planning to complete their new church building immediately if they can arrange a loan with some one with funds and in this issue, the chairman of the Building Finance Committee, Brother Guy H. Timkin, is offering 6% interest to those who are willing to invest their funds in a five year loan to the Washington Brethren church. It is not a gift they are asking for, but a loan, and we believe the investment would be as sound as any government bond, because these people not only have the aggressiveness necessary to meet their payments, but also the Christian consecration that makes for faithfulness. That kind of backing has proven to be the safest during these depression days. Many a person can testify that investments in Christian enterprises have proven the safest during these days of uncertainty. This church has done a really remarkable thing in giving during recent years, having contributed $25,000 to their new church building, in addition to having made unusually large offerings to all the various interests of the church, and taking care of their regular church program. A church that knows how to give like that can be trusted to make good. Brother Homer Kent is the aggressive pastor of this church.

Brother L. V. King, the retiring secretary of Ohio Conference, gives us a good coverage of the recent conference held in Dayton, under the moderatorship of Dr. Charles A. Bame, who was ably assisted by Rev. C. A. Stewart of Bryan. We have previously made comment concerning this meeting, but we pause here to say further that the historical note, in view of the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the Brethren church at Dayton, was prominent and was well received. It was also brought out that this is the day of opportunity for the Brethren church, that we still hold to the fundamentals of the faith that make for a strong church,—namely the whole word of God and full obedience to all that is therein set forth. The resolutions passed by this conference are worthy of special notice. We advise our readers to peruse them carefully and give them thoughtful consideration. They deal with some of the most practical elements of Dunker faith and should be kept, or made, outstanding elements in our teaching and preaching. The conference officers are: Moderator, Dr. G. C. Carpenter; Vice Moderator, Conrad Sandy; Secretary-Treasurer and Statistician, Floyd W. Shery. The 1934 conference is to be held at Louisville, where Brother A. E. Whitted is pastor.

An interesting venture in systematic Bible instruction was launched in Whittier, California in March of this year and concluded its first semester on June 30th. The school was conducted in the First Brethren church of that city, but it was not a distinctively Brethren undertaking. It seems to have had its origin simultaneously in the minds of Rev. Charles W. Mayes, pastor of our church at that place, and a Methodist minister by the name of Rev. I. D. Kirkpatrick, both of whom were burdened with the need of giving the people more Bible instruction. As a result of their conferring together about the matter (quoting from a copy of the "Whittier Bible School Bulletin"), "the Whittier Bible School came into existence. The school was to last just sixteen weeks," and its continuance after that was to depend on "the interest manifested and upon the leading of the Spirit." And we read, "So at the close of the 16 weeks we look back and have been happily surprised at the harmony, the interest taken in the studies and the fellowship we had, so we are sure God will bless the continuance of this work." The Rev. Kirkpatrick is president and Brother Mayes is dean of the school and both, together with three others, are teachers. The five teachers represent four denominations, and the student is made up of people from thirteen congregations and ten denominations. It is apparent, therefore, that it is a non-denominational school. It follows "closely the courses and methods used in the Bible Institutes of America," and it "exists for the purpose of teaching the historic Christian faith." It is stated that "every teacher believes in the authenticity, reliability and inspiration of the Word of God." Classes meet "four evenings and two afternoons each week." In addition to the regular instructors, the school has outside speakers for "popular hour meetings." Among these speakers we note the names of Dr. L. S. Bauman, Rev. A. L. Lynn and Rev. A. D. Cashman.

What of the Future?

By Chas. W. Mayes

He who has his eyes open today can see that the conditions in the world are similar to that which the Word of God teaches will be prevalent when the coming of our Lord draws near.

It is the purpose of the writer of this series of articles to discuss this question from the following angles,—International Conditions, Economic Conditions, Social Conditions, Jewish Conditions and Ecclesiastical Conditions.

In this brief article, our attention will center upon International Conditions.

A generation ago, people talked about themselves and their neighbors. Human nature has not changed. We are still talking about ourselves and our neighbors. But now our neighbors are everywhere on the face of the earth.

With the modern newspaper and the radio we get the very latest from all over the world and quite frequently news is delivered before the time it occurs.

But we have lost our independence! There can be no great independent nation on the face of the earth today. Every nation suffers with other nations. Our Lord foretold international conditions when he said, "Upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity" (Luke 21:24). "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28). Other things should be said concerning this wonderful passage, but the affairs of the nations are now under consideration.

I. Distress of Nations

We are living in a day of unprecedented distress of nations. Whatever more and hidden meanings there may be in this word translated "perplexity," it is certain that it means, "with no way out." Such is the feeling in the nations today. They have NO WAY OUT. Are we living in this foretold day of distress? We shall see!

II. Peace Talk

The hypocritical world is today talking peace and preparing for war. The Bible tells us of a time when men shall talk peace, but it shall be in vain. "For you yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say peace and safety then sudden destruction cometh upon them as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape" (1 Thess. 5:23). Blind national leaders promoting world peace and safety will awaken to sudden destruction, but the brethren are not in darkness (if they believe the Word of God) but are the children of light.

This is a day of organized peace propaganda. The World War was fought "to make the world safe for democracy," but where is democracy now? The world war was fought to end war, but today the war cloud is greater and blacker than at the beginning of 1914. Is this day to be overtaken by sudden destruction? We shall see!

III. Northern Powers

The Bible reveals that just before the Lord returns in glory, a great northern military power shall arise. (Read Ezek. 38). This military power is called Rosh and is so translated in the Revised Version. This beyond any doubt is Russia. Although Russia was supposed to have gone home defeated even before the close of the World War, today Russia is a military power which the world dare not ignore. Is this present military power in Russia THE military machine revealed in the Word of God? We shall see!

IV. A League of Nations

In the Word of God we have the forecast concerning the course of Gentile dominion. From Daniel 2, we learn that the gentile world powers are identified in history as Babylon, Medio-Persia, Greece, Rome, and Rome revived. When Rome is revived, we discover that it is to be as a beast with ten horns. "And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings" (Rev. 17:12). These ten kings form a league of nations over which one shall sit as chief dictator. History has not yet progressed far enough to identify these ten kings. Whether Mussolini is prominent enough to find a place in Biblical prophecy is a matter of little importance. But the FACT remains that Mussolini has told the world that he is planning to make Italy surpass her former glory under Caesar. Is the revived Roman Empire under Mussolini, the revived empire of Daniel 2? We shall see!

V. Dictators

The spirit of dictatorship is in the air. Our own great nation is not excepted. Arthur Brisbane writes, "The President, off for a well deserved vacation, leaves Washington the most powerful ruler in the world, Mussolini, Kemal, Stalin, Hitler not excepted.

"He has absolute control over all industry.

"He can establish 'Government licenses,' to be withheld at his pleasure, no man to do business without such a license.

"He controls the spending of three billion, three hundred million dollars for public works, and $500,000,000 for destitution relief.

"He controls the country's money, can reduce, with a stroke of the pen, salaries of all Government employees, reorganize the pension system, repeal taxes, publish income tax returns, inflate the currency, regulate the railroads under one 'coordinator,' and do many other things." Can this great nation be helping to set the stage for the coming of more dictators? We shall see!

VI. Italy and Palestine

According to a recent article in the "Chosen People", the Vatican is now openly advocating that Palestine be taken under the protecting care of some Roman Catholic country. The desire seems to be that Italy be that nation.

Those who study carefully the prophetic forecast known as "Daniel's Seventy Weeks" (Dan. 9:24-27), know that there will come a time when the head of this league of ten kings will make a covenant with a revived Jewish nation. If Mussolini could get Palestine under his control would this help again to set the stage for coming great events? We shall see!

VII. War Spirit in the East

In Rev. 16:12-16, we find that the kings of the east are to have a part in the military maneuvers of the end of the age just previous to Armageddon. What about the powers of the east today? Who would have dreamed of Japan talking back to the world forty years ago as she does today? Is this military revival in the east significant in preparation for events which are foretold? We shall see!

VIII. The Jewish Nation

Apparently the only blessing which came from the World War was the opening up of Palestine for the Jews. "Behold the fig tree and all the trees," said our Lord in the parable in Luke 21. The fig tree as all Bible students know, represents the Jewish nation. When the figtree shoots forth we are to know that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Certainly the blindest of the blind can see the fulfillment of prophecy today when we read, "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they have gone and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land."

This has been happening for several years. The present day persecutions of the Jews, although wrong as such, are serving the purpose to get more Jews back to Palestine.

Recently a little Jewish boy in one of the schools of Los Angeles, told his teacher, who is a friend of the writer, "I won't be in school any more." When asked the reason by the teacher, he replied,

"I'm going to Palestine with dady and mother."

Then the passage in Ezekiel continues, "And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel and one king shall be king of them all." This will be realized when our blessed Lord returns to earth as King of Kings. Then the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the only person in all the Universe who has a right to the throne of David shall sit upon that throne. (Luke 1:31-33). He will then be king over ALL the earth (Zech. 14:9).

IX. Conclusion

Thus far we have shown that there are many conditions in the world which are strikingly similar to the conditions which according to the Word of God will exist on the earth just previous to the return of Christ. But some honest questioner may ask, "Might not world conditions change in the course of time without the coming of the Lord?" An honest questioner deserves an honest answer.

Although the conditions of the Gentile nations might change so that a few years hence would see the stage of the nations less set for Armageddon than at the present time, THERE IS ONE CONDITION WHICH ACTS AS A KEY TO ALL THE OTHERS. The Bible states plainly of the Jewish nation being revived, that when we "see these things come to pass, KNOW YE THAT THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS NIGH." This is the way we can HONESTLY KNOW. The Jewish nation is THE SIGN. The Jewish nation is the final evidence among the nations.

But some honest questioner may again ask, "How do we know but that the return of the Jews to Palestine may not be but a minor incident and that after all Zionism may fail? This answer is that it matters not whether Zionism fails or does not fail. The return of 200,000 Jews to Palestine from the nations of the earth is a stubborn fact. And God says that when they go back, "they and their children and their children's children shall go back forever (See Ezek. 37:21-28). We are thus compelled to admit that the return of the Jews to Palestine is a part of the program of the God of the Ages. Their return must be the return which takes place previous to the coming of the King. "Behold the fig tree, and all the trees . . . When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand" (Luke 21:29-31).

"This generation (race, family or nation—the Jewish nation) shall not pass away till all be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away" (Luke 21:32-33).

THE FORMER PRIME MINISTER OF GREAT BRITAIN ON THE BIBLE

The Bible penetrated the life and thought of our people in the seventeenth century and transformed their daily experience; and it effected this not only because of the supreme quality of the literature, but because "the Spirit breathes upon the Word." . . . It is a high explosive . . . but it works in strange ways, and no living man can tell or know how that book, in its journeyings throughout the world, has started the individual soul in ten thousand different places into a new life, a new belief, a new conception, a new faith. Those things are hidden until some man, some people, is touched beyond all others by the divine fire, and the result is one of those great revivals of religion which repeatedly through the centuries have startled the world and stimulated mankind; and which, as surely as we are meeting in this hall, will recur again. . . .

I would say for myself, before I close, that, if I did not feel that our work and the work of all of us who hold the same faith and ideals, whether in politics or in civic work, wherever it may be, was done in the faith and the hope that at some day the kingdom of God would spread over the whole world, I could have no hope, I could do no work, and I would give my office over this morning to anyone who would take it.—From an address by the Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, at the Annual Meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society, Queen's Hall, London, May 2, 1928.

GOD IN CHRIST

Christians since the first day when the reality behind them became a fact in the experience of men and women who found their way to the Father through the medium of Christ. This phrase does not describe merely an aspect of the personal character of Jesus; it goes swiftly and surely to the fact that when any person makes the choice of Christ as the Master of life he comes into immediate and sustained union with God. As the Father found expression through the human life of Jesus, so he becomes real to all those who fuse their motives with those of Jesus in the good way of life that the Master defined and realized.

We seek for God in many ways and by difficult techniques. There is one sure and blessed way to find the Father. It is by living in actual comradeship with Christ. To think about him, to enthrone his motives in the center of our own choices and decisions, to yield and obey—this is to the unseen and actual mastery of Jesus in daily living. It is like a friendship. There must be understanding and mutual surrender of selfish interest in order to make it lasting and beautiful. This is the way of fellowship with Christ. We have much to learn and give in its happy progress toward perfection. When it is complete, it is the great experience of the Christian religion. We have found God in Christ.—Zion's Herald.

For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ.—1 Corinthians 2:11.

The Young People and the Christian Attitude on Peace.

By Alma Baker

What is the attitude of most young people toward peace? Are they interested in peace? There are two classes of young people, the non-Christians and the Christians. Those who belong in the first class naturally aren't interested in peace because they aren't concerned with the sufferings of their fellowmen. A youth in this class has too many other things to occupy his mind. If he isn't a Christian then he is only concerned mostly with the affairs of the world and spends his time finding ways to amuse himself. After all this is a selfish world and one of us spend the time that we should helping our fellowmen. Everyone seems to be interested in gaining the most for himself, and it matters not if we take advantage of others less fortunate than ourselves. Why then shouldn't we conquer some other country, if we can profit by it? This is the attitude generally of the non-Christian mind, and the majority are in this class.

In the second class we have the Christian, the serious minded youth, who takes war seriously and makes a study of it because it will injure his fellowmen. Does this youth want war? No, there is no true Christian that wants war. He realizes the horror and terribleness of warfare. He understands the disaster it causes in every nation and home on the earth. Each nation and each home is affected in some way by other nations and other homes. Does the Christian, old or young, want to kill someone he doesn't know and has never seen? Can he hate a man that he has never heard of in some other nation, so much that he wants to take his life? Of course not, he hasn't this feeling and has no cause to have it. You may say then, that he doesn't love his country. Don't you think that wanting peace and security in your country shows greater love than wanting your country in chaos and destruction? Let us love our neighbors as we would have them love us, and in that way we will be loving our country as well as all humanity.

What attitude has been instilled in our young people in regard to war, and what attitude can we expect them to take? The youth today should realize the disaster caused by the World War since going through this period of depression, but instead of that some say, "What has peace given to us?" They then answer, "Only sorrow and suffering." Now just before and during war times we had years of prosperity, and wouldn't war bring them back to us again? Many of them don't consider the fact that before each war there seems to be a period of prosperity, then afterwards a serious depression. They don't realize that this depression is due to the World War, because so many people have been giving other causes for the depression and refuse to say that the war is the direct cause. The youth as well as the older person in every nation is suffering today from the World War. In Germany we have no youth in mind or spirit, only in age. The war was something real to them. It has ruined their lives, and they will never have the freedom and pleasure that every youth should enjoy. Are they responsible? Did they have a grudge against the young people of other nations? Certainly not, but they must suffer due to the selfishness of a few individuals. It isn't quite as real to us because we didn't witness the conflict, but we should see that every boy and girl in America doesn't get the wrong attitude in regard to it.

In all of our newspapers and books, we praise those who have led their country successfully through some campaign. We build costly monuments to all of our war heroes. They have their place in history, but we often stress their work too much and spend too much money on these monuments that could be used in gaining peace.

What boy doesn't want to be famous, and certainly one way to gain fame and renown is to be a leader in some revolution. Most boys would rather be a Napoleon, Alexander, or Hannibal than a leader of some peace movement. Why? Because we never see pages of newspapers covered with the exploits of some great peace leader, or costly monuments built in his honor. How then can we expect a worldly minded youth to be interested in peace?

As one veteran has said, "Fifteen years ago the boys who were going to war were treated like a group of deities. Today they are back, a few of them. Some are disabled for life, and others are without enough money to support themselves." The youth as well as the older person should think of this, but instead they see themselves dressed in uniform and parading before a crowd. This is the attitude that has been created so what can we expect?

How can we change this attitude about war? Bruce Barton has said in one of his articles, "War is hell," and let's advertise it as such. We could advertise peace often and write more articles showing that war means destruction and in that way get more followers of the peace movement. We advertise everything else, even war. Why not advertise peace?

We say we want peace, but all the time we are spending more money preparing for war. You may say we must be prepared for war in case it comes. We should prepare our hearts and minds instead with love and friendship for others, then we wouldn't need to do so much preparing for war.

Besides advertising through magazines and newspapers, we can teach peace or hate of warfare in the homes, Sunday schools, and public schools. When we learn to hate war, we will have peace. Teach the terribleness of warfare, prove to the people that there is nothing gained by war and everything to lose. No country is better off today because the World War has been fought, and everyone is in a worse condition. "Oh, but the World War was necessary," some will say, especially America's part. We should have revenged the lives that were lost by the sinking of the Lusitania." They don't even stop to think of the lives lost in attaining that revenge. Did we attain it after all? Then again you may say that the war was fought to end all wars. Shall we say then that the boys who died in the war died in vain? Practically every day in the newspapers you see an account of some warfare. Teach against war, and also a better understanding of people of other nations. We should help other nations to understand us, and the best way to do that is to spend more money for the purpose of missions.

Whatever is the attitude of the youth today, whether he is in sympathy with war or peace; it is all due to those who have gone before. It's our duty as Christians to gain a love for peace, and it wouldn't take long if we would instill it into the heart or mind of each girl and boy living today. In a few generations there would be no lust for blood. We can't do it without effort, time, and money, and it should be begun at once. Let's each resolve now to work for peace, for as Apostle Paul has said, "Follow peace with all men and holiness without which no man shall see the Lord."

VOICE OF THE CHURCHES

SO MANY YOUNG PREACHERS

When a crisis impends God calls special servants to lead his people out of the wilderness. Moses was called just in time to save God's chosen race. Elijah, suddenly—like a meteor newly kindled in the heavens or like a thunderbolt hurled from the clouds by the hand of the Almighty—burst upon the scene, and the revellers trembled and the king grew pale. Jeremiah, Ezra and Nehemiah, Luther and Mack, all came to the front just as crises were breaking.

There has been a question asked many times during the last few years: "What are we going to do with all the young preachers being turned out at our Seminary in Ashland?" Is it not true that ministerial training was to be had at Ashland for years back? Why were there not so many ministers being "turned out"? (Or were there as many, but we have forgotten?) The Ashland Theological Seminary is not a mill which "turns out" young preachers perforce. Is it perchance true that a crisis is at hand and God has called young men to prepare for that crisis? We are all agreed that the world is restless, but what about our own brotherhood? Yes, it seems to the writer that there is unrest a plenty in the Brethren Church. For the past two or three years some of our Church leaders have gone to some pains to express their pleasure in the harmony and brotherly-love manifested at General Conference. Why the pains? Were they afraid before Conference?

We hardly need be anxious about so many young preachers springing up in our brotherhood. If they were called of God, he will use them. If not, we shall not hear much of them after graduation.

EXALTATION

While spending my days in the hospital, among many callers was a man of God who offered to help me in any way possible. I asked him to read and pray. He did, and what a beautiful touching petition! It did me so much good. I thought, "My, what a difference there is in folks." Across the aisle was a man who came to see another and the first words he said were about "beer" and "booze". I was glad I was not listed in that class, but I wished that he might know the joys of being exalted in the Lord.

Though I knew how little my own soul merited the heavenly things, I did feel my absolute dependence upon Christ. To love him and to esteem him more than self; to lose my life in his, was my privilege.

To feel the joy of living the righteous life; to know the contentment of a day well spent in the Master's vineyard; to be esteemed as a Christian citizen; to be trusted by one's fellowmen; to be a contributor to the general uplift of humanity; to be a builder of character; to shine undimmed in dark and lowly places, all in his Name—that seemed to me the greatest joy and the highest exaltation. And what a comfort it was in such an hour, yes, and ever is!

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

STILL DESCENDING

Pari-mutuel betting on horse races became legal in Ohio today (June 29), for the first time in the state's history. Governor George White signed the Emmons racing bill and appointed the commission of four members to supervise racing meets."

Thus reads a news item in the daily press. During the state's entire history there has been enough moral sentiment in the legislature to prevent such degenerate legislation. But with the scrapping of moral considerations and a generally confessed moral collapse throughout the Country, nothing is to be regarded as sacred—so it seems. The underworld is having a free hand in much of the legislative actions of State and Nation.

The legislative excuse for passing this bill is the revenue it will make possible. And so the state of Ohio, one of the richest in the Union, must sell its soul and further corrupt its citizenry—for revenue! Is there anything so vile that it would not be justified for revenue?

Of course, those who were pushing this bill outside the membership of the assembly also were interested in revenue—for themselves—the same motive that actuated Judas when he made that deal with the enemies of Christ. O Revenue! What crimes are being committed in thy name!—Religious Telescope.

THE CHAINS OF SUPERSTITION

We are shocked at times to read of the crude superstitious rites practised by the heathen to ward off disasters and to save themselves. But sometimes our Western complacency receives a shock, and we begin to realize that even in a supposed enlightened country there are still multitudes not far behind the heathen in their superstitions. Consider the following which is taken from the Toronto press of May 27:

What has become an annual public religious function will take place tomorrow, when Rev. Father Stephen Auad, pastor of Mount Carmel Church, St. Patrick Street, will bless motor cars and other conveyances after the 11 o'clock Mass. The vehicles will thus be placed under the patronage of St. Christopher, patron saint of travellers. The feast day of the saint is not until July, but Father Auad always gives the blessing before the holiday season is fully under way.

This is a "religious" function all right. So are the rites practised by the heathen to ward off the evil eye and offset the machinations of Mumbo Jumbo. But they are not Christian. How men and women who profess to know even the elements of Christian truth can tolerate this mummary that is carried on each year in Toronto is incomprehensible. Surely the first thing that the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to a soul accomplishes is to set it free from the bondage of such trumpery as this, and we are all commanded to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free. In some ways there is little to choose between the bondage of Rome and the chains of the heathen.—The Evangelical Christian.

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Luke

It is Doctor Luke, physician, historian, and pen-painter, who writes the most beautiful narrative which Christendom possesses of the "Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (2:11). Being a lover of women, children, and good men, the famous physician presents our Lord to us as the perfectly ideal Son of Man who came "to seek and to save that which was lost" (19:10).

Little perhaps did Bishop Heber realize how well he understood Luke's Christ when he penned:

"Brightest and best of the sons of the morning,
Dawn on our darkness and lend us thine aid!

Star of the East, the horizon adorning Guide where our infant Redeemer is laid!

"Cold on his cradle the dew-drops are shining;
Low lies his bed with the beasts of the stall;
Angels adore him in slumber reclining—
Maker and Monarch, and Saviour of all.

"Say, shall we yield him, in costly devotion,
Odors of Edom, and offerings divine—
Gems of the mountain, and pearls of the ocean—
Myrrh from the forest, and gold from the mine?"

"Vainly we offer each ample oblation,
Vainly, with gold, would his favor secure;
Richer, by far, is the heart's adoration,
Dearer to God are the prayers of the poor."

Dr. Luke

Judging from the Gospel which he has written—Irenaeus and Jerome affording abundant witness—Dr. Luke must have been a man of wide observation, greatly learned, marvelously tolerant, benign, gracious, lovable. He knew the historic and medical arts thoroughly, as his famous classical preface and technical medical terms indicate. The famous work of Dr. Ramsay has proven the high trustworthiness of Dr. Luke as a historian, and the researches of Dr. Hobart have confirmed the fact of his wide medical knowledge. Curiously enough, however, Luke's name is only mentioned in three places in the New Testament. See Philemon 24; Col. 4:14; II Tim. 4:11. The famous "we" and "they" sections of Luke and The Acts establish his identity as a writer.

Friendship with Paul

The history of the Christian Church is replete with noteworthy and beautiful friendships. Early we have Peter and Mark; then Luke and Paul; others, like those of Ambrose and Augustine, Luther and Melancthon, Zwingli and Oecolampadius, Calvin and Beza, the two Wesleys and Whitefield, Moody and Wanamaker, follow in historic succession. Of one thing the writer is most certain: Paul and Luke must have had great fellowship together. Never were they bored with each other—their culture, refinement, and religious taste afforded them much pleasure. What Franklin said in substance of visitors, namely, "fish and visitors smell after three days," hardly can be applied to the worthy physician and the great apostle.

Legend and Tradition

Legend and tradition have vied with each other to drape the most attractive garments around the figure of St. Luke. As the real portrait precedes the caricature, as the genuine coin the counterfeit, so does the flesh and blood Luke take precedence over the fictional Luke. Some have made him a painter; others a freedman; still others refer to his martyrdom by crucifixion at Elea on an olive tree in the Peloponnesus, etc. To those who love "the shiftless quagmire of baseless traditions" we will leave these speculations. However, one thing may be of interest to the careful student. On the door of San Paolo at the Vatican city, the famous doctor is represented as dying in peace. Rossetti therefore sings:

"Give honor unto Luke Evangelist,
For he it was, the ancient legends sang,
Who first taught Art to fold her hands and pray."

Today, when every babbler babbles more loudly than he has ever babbled before, it behooves, not only Art, but every field of learning to seek the quiet and sweetly safe haven of prayer. If Luke and Paul could pray, and get results, why can't we?

Jerome avers, in referring to Luke, "He died when he was eighty years of age, and was never married." Perhaps we have in this fact an explanation why they were traveling companions? Were they lonely without wives? Paul once advised: "Husbands love your own wives." Did Doctor Luke smile at that particularistic advice?

The Gospel Itself

About 60 A. D. the Third Gospel was completed. It was the purpose of the writer to draw up an accurate narrative based upon first hand facts of the life and death of the Saviour. It was done to convince Theophilus, a friend of God, a worthy gentleman no doubt, of "the certainty" of the things which had been already in his mind and heart. The Acts of the Apostles is addressed to this relatively unknown Greek character. Dr. Luke's words must have borne great weight with him, for only first class evidence was introduced into the parchments of the physician.

Upon further investigation, the subject matter is found to consist of sketches; it records the motives of its actors; its key is 19:10; it is Grecian in its background and viewpoint; its theme is salvation through the Second Adam; its main topic is love; its arrangement is biographical in places; its character is very artistic and of surpassing beauty; its outlook is intellectual; its quality is sympathy; its style is copious; its classification is history; its time element is somewhat futuristic; its key-word is "compassion"; it is the gospel of womanhood; its Christ is a Healer; his office is that of Son; he is the perfectly good Man; he is perfectly human; he is the Redeemer-Kinsman of the Race. The quotations from the Old Testament number 24; the allusions are 34; the record covers 72 pages—the longest gospel; the peculiarities are 59, the coincidences are 41, and the words in the Revised Version are 25,654.

Characteristics Summarized

By various writers at various times and in various places the Third Gospel has been characterized thusly:

- 1. St. Luke is the first Christian hymnologist, poet and psalm writer.
The songs of Luke are Psalms of a late date.
- 2. The Third Gospel is noted for the special prominence which it gives to prayer.
- 3. It is characterized by universal and gratuitous salvation.
- 4. It is the Gospel of childhood, a story with vivid pictures and beautiful scenes.
- 5. It is meant for Gentiles as well as Jews.
- 6. St. Luke's is the Gospel of womanhood. It is tender and sympathetic in tone and quiet in persuasiveness.
- 7. It is the Gospel for the poor and humble people; for sinners and outcasts, etc.
- 8. The Lukan narrative is full of contrast and human interest.
- 9. It is a work stressing such words as "grace," "favor," "mercy," and "faith." It is Pauline.
- 10. Luke's is the Gospel of progressive Christianity with the Second Adam as its Leader. He heads the New Race and the New Brotherhood.

Conclusion

Hear the saintly Jerome: "He was a physician; and so, to all, his words are medicines to the drooping soul."

For St. Luke's Day the pious Keble sings:

"Thou hast an ear for angel songs,
A breath the Gospel trump to fill,
And taught by thee the Church belongs
Her hymns of high thanksgiving still."

And through the history of the Church there has run that selfish and unchristian thought of being saved from something rather than being saved for something. The rich young ruler wanted to be saved from death by somehow earning eternal life, while Jesus showed him that his salvation depended on giving up rather than on selfishly seeking to do some stunt which would insure his safety and satisfaction.

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

Its very name ceased to be spoken by the living, and when Xenophon passed by with his immortal "Ten Thousand" they saw some shapeless ruins, but knew not the name. "It had already passed into the region of myth and fable" (Layard).

Know you not, that God is the God of the Resurrection of vanished empires and buried cities, no less than of dead and buried bodies? And has he not written it imperishably upon the pages of his infallible Word, Psalm 85:11: "Truth shall spring out of the earth?" And he had ready at hand his three chosen grave diggers, if you will permit me reverently to coin the phrase, in the resurrection of the dead and buried Assyrian capital. Rich, Botta, Layard.

The Savior tells the story of a man who by accident stumbled upon a treasure deposit hidden in a field. A thousand times more thrilling yet than the discovery of mere gold and jewels in the "find" of the buried ruins of a splendid and historic city that had faded out completely from the memory and knowledge of man.

For a number of years, an Englishman by the name of Rich, had been the political resident of the British East India Company at Bagdad. In the pursuit of restoration to health from a nervous breakdown, he made a run up the Tigris several hundred miles and stopped over at a large Turkish city named Mosul, situated on the western side of the river. Mosul or Mossul, as it is sometimes written, is associated, as you might know, with Bagdad, in the "Arabian Nights."

This incidental drop in at Mosul was in 1820. Facing the city on the eastern side of the Tigris and connected by a bridge of boats, was an extensive plain, broken here and there with numerous irregular hills or mounds. Crossing over to this plain one day, to see what was to be seen, he found it covered here and there with numerous fragments of stone and terracotta inscribed and engraved with quaint figures and mysterious lettering. On the top of an elevation he saw an old, mosque-like building that was called Neby Yunas. "Neby Yunas," what does that mean? Neby, tomb, and Yunas Jonah. The Tomb of Jonah. Putting all these observations together, the wide, extensive plain, the Tomb of Jonah, the splintered fragments denotive of a community life of some sort, suggested the startling query, "May not this be the very and unknown spot where the Bible Nineveh stood?"

Think of it! A packing case, hardly three feet square, containing some of these broken "finds" sent on to the British Museum, and put on exhibition, was, up to that date, the sum total of the visible remains of "Nineveh, the Magnificent."

The next discoverer to come along was Monsieur Botta, a French consul sent out to Mosul about twenty years later. The main base of his operations was at a mound village, a dozen or so miles distant, called Korsabad, which proved to be the ruins of an ancient Assyrian city, Dur Sargina, the city of Sargon. To Botta is accredited the distinctive honor of having brought to the light of modern times the first Assyrian city thus far exhumed.

The discoveries of Rich and Botta, valuable and interesting as they are, were but the prelude to that of the Prince of Explorers and Excavators, Sir Henry Layard, an Englishman. With tireless energy and radiant enthusiasm, he projected his campaign for nine years, with but slight interruptions from 1845-54.

In early after years following Rassam an assistant to Layard, Loftus, George Smith and Wallis Budge, in the recovery of huge graven deities, bas-reliefs, basalt paneling, cornerstone barrel-shaped cylinders, inscribed tablets, and such like miscellany of incredible value. For one thing, in the unquestioned confirmation of the Scripture predictions relative to the utter ruin of Nineveh: "And he will make Nineveh a desolation" (Nahum 2:3). The scene that confronts the human eye is a spectacle of stark devastation, as far as its vision can reach. Another prediction of the same prophet, Nahum 2:13 is that its site would be a place where "flocks and herds shall lie down." The modern name of the plain is Kouyenjik, "Sheep Pasturage." The ruins of the palaces of its kings, associated with the Biblical mention of their campaigns waged against the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah, were laid bare, with the record of these events cut deep upon the black basalt that paneled their palace walls. Some of these slabs picture the luxurious court life of the monarchs, others deal with military operations in the attack and capture of besieged cities, and the torture of its hapless captives and inhabitants.

One of the most noted "finds" is that of a solid shaft of black basalt, or marble, about seven feet high, two feet wide, slightly narrowing to the top called "The Black Obelisk," treasured in the British Museum.

A stone of triumph upon which Shalmaneser II makes a laudatory record of his long reign of thirty-five years, 860-825 B. C.; especially valuable in confirmation of a Biblical statement that reads, "In those days—the days of Jehu—the Lord began to cut Israel short" (II Kings 10:32). The Bible does not tell us how, but the Black Obelisk does, as we see paneled Jehu himself, or one of his ambassadors in prostration at the footstool of the haughty Assyrian king, and as we read the inscribed legend, "Tribute of Jehu, Son of Omri."

The clay tablets dug up are also valuable, particularly those known as

as they bear upon the contents of the early chapters of Genesis. They give us the legendary notions held by the prehistoric dwellers of the Tigris-Euphrates valley concerning the creation of the world, the race of mankind the institution of the Sabbath, calling it, "The day of rest for the heart." They seem to have no idea of the fall of man, but they do picture a sacred tree with a serpent, the seducing "serpent of night and darkness," standing behind the woman. Also a sacred tree called "the life of the forest," guarded by angelic beings.

One of the tablets deals with an epic story in which a mighty hero, Gilgames, or Ishdubar, comes to the shores of the River of Death, in his wide extended travels, where he strikes up with an illustrious saint, Sisuthrus, the Babylonian Biblical Noah, who, by reason of his piety, escaped a flood, while all the rest of the world was drowned on account of their wickedness.

The agreements with the Mosaic account are remarkable; the causes of the flood by reason of the wickedness of mankind; the forewarning of the impending calamity; the directions for the building of an ark; the great destruction of life; the sending forth of a dove and of a raven; the offering of sacrifice; the rainbow.

The differences lie in its gross polytheism, in contrast to the true monotheism of the sacred narrative. A natural inquiry is, how was it possible to get the clue to the decipherment of these curiously written and mystifying cuneiform writings in stone and clay? It all lay in the purpose of God. And as he raised up archaeological "Grave Diggers" to command, "Nineveh, come forth!" thus did he call into service erudite "key men" to open up the cryptogramic cuneiform character locks of these ages-long hidden records.

It started in by what was a successful guess by a young German scholar, Grotefend, in 1801, as he was engaged in boring into an inscription in three different forms of cuneiform script, known to be Persian, Susanian and Babylonian versions of the same text, on a ruined monument in Persia. Noting the frequent recurrence of a certain character sign, and knowing also that some of these monuments had been erected by Darius he made the tentative conjecture that the oft recurring lettering stood for the name of that kind—a process of decipherment employed by Edgar Allan Poe in his "Gold Bug." It proved to be a successful hit, and by it he thus secured six cuneiform letters which led on to others, until he came into the possession of a creditable, though small, valuable working apparatus of cuneiform syllabic characters. Doubtless taking expert advantage of what Grotefend had secured, Sir Henry Rawlinson, in 1837, entered upon the successful decipherment of the trilingual inscription of Darius cut upon the face of the cliffs of Behistun, Persia.

So that now, so it is said, scholars are able to read the cuneiform with as much comparative ease as the Hebrew and Sanscript writings. And thus through the labors of cuneiform scholarship, you and I can read in our own mother tongue the marvelous and fascinating story of "Nineveh, the Magnificent."

afraid; and the Lord said there are too many any way, let any who are getting "cold feet" go home. And to their everlasting shame twenty-two thousand returned to their homes.

Still there were too many to answer God's purpose for them. They would be inclined to claim a victory as being only the result of their great valor, and God would have been robbed of his glory, so they were tested as they came to a refreshing brook, and but three hundred were found to be qualified for their task.

FRIDAY

Gideon's Conquest. Judges 7:13-23

One hundred and thirty-five thousand men must be overthrown by a paltry three hundred men under the leadership of a humble farmer. Impossible we hear many exclaim. Of course it was impossible from every human standpoint; but this was not done according to human methods in common use. Of course Gideon used great and cunning strategy, but it was done under the direct leadership of God. This was to be no human victory. The people were to learn that it was a victory of God, a victory of faith.

SATURDAY

Gideon's Faith. Hebrews 11:32-40

Gideon had no thought of personal glory when he laid aside his threshing instruments to take up such simple instruments of war as a torch and a ram's horn. He was not anticipating any national honors, and he did not teach his soldiers to play "Yankee Doodle" on their ram's horns to inspire them to greater deeds of military valor. Theirs was to be a valor of faith, although Gideon had no thought that his name should be enrolled among the immortal heroes of faith such as are described in this eleventh chapter of Hebrews.

The world's heroic leaders are not inspired and strengthened by thoughts of personal glory. but by a passionate desire to see a great task faithfully done.

SUNDAY

A Song of Praise. Psalm 98:1-9

The Psalmist says "Sing unto Jehovah a NEW song." Many old songs had been sung unto him just as though nothing more was being done by him to merit new praise. But the Psalmist says "He hath done marvellous things."

It was indeed a marvellous thing that he should cause an army of one hundred thirty-five thousand men to be overthrown by three hundred.

Not only on that occasion, but on multitudes of other occasions Jehovah showed "his loving kindness and his faithfulness toward the house of Israel."

He deserved then and he deserves now all the praise mankind can bestow upon him.

GIDEON

(Lesson for July 30)

Lesson Text: Judges, 6, 7, 8; Golden Text: Psalm 27:1

MONDAY

Gideon Commissioned. Judges 6:11-14

Israel had a rest for a period of about forty years, and then, because of her sins, she was again delivered into the hands of the Midianites.

After about seven years of this oppression God sought a man to be an instrument in his hands to bring about its deliverance. Really brave men were rather scarce in Israel just at that time. Where could one be found? Not among the "idle rich", if there were such, but in a family that belonged to the "poorest in Israel." Gideon was found faithfully performing his task when the angel of the Lord appeared to him under the oak and told him that he was the chosen one to deliver Israel.

TUESDAY

Gideon's Humility and Caution. Judges 6:15-24

Gideon was not unduly set up because an angel of the Lord had visited him and had given him this "high commission." In fact he was made very humble as the great task was set before him. He could not understand why God had chosen him, a man of so little prominence, for so great a task.

He had not yet realized that while "man judgeth the outward appearance God judgeth the heart." And it was a "stout heart and a faithful one that beat in the breast of this common "dirt farmer", and this is what was needed then and is needed now in effective leadership.

WEDNESDAY

Gideon Attacks Idolatry. Judges 6:25-32

Gideon had an unpleasant task to perform before he could go forth to meet the great army of their oppressors. The real enemy was within rather than without. The enemy was idolatry. This must be rooted out before God could be expected to give them victory over their worldly enemies.

Gideon was instructed how to proceed in the task of destroying their idolatry. No other method would succeed. He must use God's plan and acknowledge his leadership. While Gideon was brave he was not foolhardy, and he took no undue risk. He did his work under cover of the darkness, and the result was great consternation among his brethren, and they determined to kill him. But his work had scarcely begun, and it was not for him to die as yet. So his life was preserved.

THURSDAY

Gideon's Army Sifted. Judges 7:4-8

At Gideon's call thirty-two thousand men rallied to his banner, but when their task was understood many of them became

Consecration Hymn

The following hymn by Paul McKnight is used by the Christian Endeavor society of the Media. Pennsylvania, Presbyterian church. It may be sung to the tune "Siloam."

Dear Saviour, hear the pledge we make
To serve thy church and thee.
Help us to do this for thy sake
In loving ministry.

Help us to serve thee day by day
In thought and word and deed;
Help us to read Thy word, and pray,
And all thy precepts heed.

O Saviour, hear the prayer we make
In deep humility.
Rededicated lives now take,
Our offering unto thee.

Success Through Organization

By D. Roland Potter

Successful union work does not just happen. It can be obtained only through careful planning and detailed organization. As a basic principle for a successful union I believe that at the beginning of each year a detailed program should be worked out and submitted to the people who will be responsible for the carrying out of the program. After thorough study that part of the program which does not meet with the approval of the majority should be eliminated so that complete unity may be obtained in the union activities.

After the program is worked out and approved, each section of the program should be turned over to the person who is responsible for that activity, and they should be encouraged to make their own contacts, line up the society leaders who will work with them, and in this way obtain the backing of the member societies in that particular branch of the work.

In my judgment any union activity, if it is to be successful, must be basically democratic so that in the planning, and in the carrying out of the plans, the voice of all may be heard. For this reason I do not believe that the executive committee of the union should undertake to put a program into effect until it has received at least two-thirds of the votes of the people who will be responsible for its success.

Through careful planning, detailed organization, and democratic action in obtaining the support of the membership there is no program which may not be successfully put over by a union.—Selected.

Better Publicity

An effective agent of the successful publicity committee is the poster. Posters should be attention-compelling, and significant of the most important thing in the meeting. For instance, the pageant, "The Challenge of the Cross", was given at one union meeting. A picture (made by tearing various colored papers to shape, and then pasting them together) of the Mount of the Holy Cross decorated the top of the poster. Striking cartoons, as used in modern advertising, can be copied, and command instant attention and usually draw favorable comment. Sometimes, for a change, just use bold printing, neatly done.

Postal cards and other similar forms of notices can be used to jog the recipients' memory. They are usually follow-ups from some previous announcement in another manner. They are sometimes a welcome change from other types of advertising.

Any society or union will find it exceedingly worth while and helpful to promote in an efficient manner.

For the union, a flying squadron, well organized, will be just the thing for some special occasions. Nothing else is so effective, or generates so much enthusiasm, as the personal touch. This method gets old quickly, and in consequence should be used sparingly.—Selected.

FOUR-SIDED CONTEST

For Lookout Committees

The Young People's society of a north-west church of another denomination, recently conducted a four-sided contest. The four major committees made up the contesting teams.

Points are awarded for attendance, participation, signing the Christian Endeavor pledge, and signing the Quiet Hour and Tenth Legion pledge-cards.

Christian Endeavor pins were awarded to members of the winning team.

the privilege of taking up, at least temporarily, until other arrangements can be made.

Miss Tyson continues busy with her multitudinous duties, and Miss Emmert with the large school. We shall be able shortly, we trust, to give you another letter telling of our Conference fellowship and of changes which must necessarily be decided upon because of the departure of our missionaries on furlough.

We know that God is faithful and that he will continue to undertake for us through all the changing vicissitudes of our missionary careers.

We are asking God for more workers. We expect him to answer prayer!

Faithfully yours,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

The Coolie's Blood

What could Hsu want, coming into my room unannounced before breakfast time on a Monday morning? He was a man of few words and little knowledge, whom I had known as a famine refugee, then an inquirer, and now a church member. The church leaders had said: "We may as well baptize old Hsu. Doubtless he is a Christian at heart, but he'll never understand much."

Each Sunday morning he came early, said, "Peace," to the pastor and, "Peace," again to some of those he knew, and then seated himself in the back seat of the chapel, sitting silently an hour or more till service time. His daily work was among sewage, and we rarely saw him during the week. Now here he stood by my breakfast table, and had something on his mind.

"Pastor, I understand your sermon."

That was an encouraging opening. I thought, "I am glad to know that. Do you remember the text?"

"The blood of Jesus Christ."

"Quite right!"

"You said that sometimes the foreign doctors can take a healthy man's blood to help a dying patient. I think I understand."

"Yes that was an illustration I used, to show how precious blood might be used to save human life."

"And you are going back again this week to our dear 'teacher lady' away there in Peking, suffering all these many weeks from that terrible cart accident?"

"Yes, I only left her to attend this conference."

"Well, I want to send her my blood that she may get better soon. I am a strong man. The doctors may take all they need for her. I'll get over it, and you'll take the bottles with you, and tell 'teacher lady' it's all I can do."

I was speechless for a moment. There seemed a halo of glory around the poor little ragged coolie. One seemed to hear a distinct whisper of the Master's "Inasmuch. . ."

His wistful eyes searched me: "Pastor, I really do mean it; I do indeed."

"I would not give a penny to missions in China," says a rich critic; "they only cause dissatisfaction among the people, and create trouble and anti-foreign feeling."

I read the daily paper with such statements, and think of Hsu and others; and I sigh in sorrow for the cynic when he and Hsu are weighed in the balance.

Progress of God's Kingdom in Africa

Yaloke, par Boali, par Bangui,
Afrique Equatoriale Francaise,
May 22, 1933.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Six weeks and more have elapsed since last writing you. The time has been filled with various interests and multiplied calls for service.

Mr. Jobson, who was with us at Yaloke for a brief time at last writing returned to Bassai shortly after. We expect to see him again soon, however, as all our missionaries are due to arrive at Yaloke one week from today for our periodical united session of prayer and conference. We shall be, God willing, the largest conference in the history of our Mission, as we are expecting to aggregate 17 missionaries, as well as the two dear children of Brother and Sister Sheldon.

We have had the privilege of entertaining, during part of the time since last writing, three very dear missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Bayson, members of the Africa Inland Mission (with which Mr. Gribble and I were associated during the early days of our missionary calling) and the Bayson's friend, Miss Nettie Birdsall.

We have greatly enjoyed their company and their sweet serene faith in a Saviour's love.

Through their instrumentality and that of the Sergeant at Bossembali two large man-eating leopards were killed early in May. The guests presented one of the skins, an enormous one, to Mrs. Hathaway.

We have all suffered much because of the long affliction of one of our precious Christian boys, Caleb. We finally decided early in May to take him to Bangui for treatment. He was operated on at the native hospital there on May 13th. His convalescence is proving to be very slow, and we regret that his return will yet be delayed for several weeks. His devoted father, our assistant pastor at Yaloke, is remaining with him in Bangui. We are sorry not to have the prospect of his presence with us for the Conference.

Mr. and Mrs. Bayson and Miss Birdsall departed for Carnot on May 8th. From there they had contracted with the owner of a private automobile to take them to the Coast. They will return to America via France and probably by French boat.

Mr. Hathaway also recently made a trip to Bangui adjusting business concerning our chapels enroute, as well as caring for Bangui business and bringing us news of Caleb. He returned on Wednesday night after an absence of three days, and on Saturday departed by "pousse" for chapel visitation along one of our bush roads.

Their departure is to take place soon after Conference. They are planning to leave Yaloke on June 15th, and to sail on June 25th or 26th.

We are hoping that David Remy, one of our graduate nurses from the Camerouns may also arrange to accompany them on the trip. He is engaged to a sweet little girl in the Camerouns and hopes to return in due time with his bride.

Andre Bernard, our other Cameroun nurse, is still with us. Both have united with our church at Yaloke and Argi, Andre's little wife, is soon to be baptized. Both Andre and David are preaching at the dispensary, aiding in this way the regularly appointed evangelist.

I hope myself to go to Youunde, either with the Hathaways or as soon thereafter as possible to have my car repaired. For this as for all the promises we wait upon the Lord to supply our need.

One of the features of our Conference to which we look forward with pleasure and anticipation is the "Native Christian Conference" which will be held simultaneously with our own. There are to be twenty-four native sessions, eight of which will be conducted by Yaloke Christians, eight by Bellevue Christians, and eight by Bassai Christians. Special sessions in the early mornings will be conducted by various missionaries.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Just a little news from the District of Columbia in regards to our Building program. As you know, we have had our basement unit of our church completed a little over six years, which cost us $26,000, and all paid for more than two years ago. We now have $13,500 cash on hand. We have been busy since last fall with our architect making final plans to complete the building and have had fifteen bids on the work (seven from Baltimore). The best bid was $38,000, some as much as $50,000. So you see we still need $25,000 loan which we have not been able to get. We have prayed much and have decided to go ahead if we can possibly get the $25,000 loan. We thought maybe we had some good Brethren in our church over the country who could and would be glad to make us that loan for 5 years at 6% interest semi-annually. Or if no one could make the entire amount maybe we could get $5,000 loans.

To give you some idea as to what we have done in the past five years, our Building Fund offering has been a few dollars less than $25,000.

I might give you the names of some of our leading pastors who have been here and have worked with Brother Kent. They will vouch for our need, I am sure, and any one interested may write them about us and our proposition. They are: E. L. Miller, Maurertown, Virginia; L. S. Bauman, Long Beach, California; Charles H. Ashman, Johnstown, Pennsylvania; W. C. Benshoff, Waynesboro, Pennsylvania; and R. Paul Miller, Berne, Indiana.

We need more room so badly that we cannot expect our Sunday school to grow unless in some way we can provide for the completion of our building. If all the members we have on our Sunday school roll would come at one time, we could not seat them by at least 25 per cent. If only the brotherhood could see our need, I feel sure they would give us the loan. We are not asking for charity.

And furthermore, if we are not able to build now, we fear there will likely be a falling off in our offerings and a decline in interest, as we have been talking of building so long that naturally most of our members want action.

I don't know where any one with money could make a better loan for we have the fighting spirit here, and we will jump right in and pay for our long-wanted church building.

$25,000 at 6% for five years, interest payable semi-annually.

Building Finance Committee.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The commencement exercises for the mid-summer were held last Friday before Redwood stadium, at 3:30 P. M. Rev. Harry Trust, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Mansfield, and president-elect of the Bangor (Maine) Theological Seminary, gave the address. There were 60 in the graduating class.

The class was regularly organized, electing a president vice-president, and secretary. They voluntarily raised sufficient money to put an electric motor on the mimeograph which the spring class had given the school, and also bought a new addressograph. With this new and up-to-date equipment, the College expects to do more publicity work next year.

Already I have applied at the local post office for entry rates for a bi-monthly bulletin. With this new equipment, we expect to reach our friends,—alumni, trustees, pastors, prospective students, and others,—at least once every two months. It has been complained ever since I have known the school that we never send any printed matter to our alumni. This will now be changed.

Moreover, we have set up two new partitions in the Library building, thus making room for this improvement. One of the rooms is to be a rest room for the girls of the school. The Sisterhood of Mary and Martha has in mind furnishing this room. As it is, there has never been a lounge room for the girls of the school. This room will be beautiful with the new furnishings.

On the whole, the summer school has been satisfactory, although smaller than last year. We have been able to meet our bills and are all set, or nearly so, for the fall opening. It is hoped that the very strenuous efforts put forth by the College for a good enrollment, the school will be large next year.

The enrollment for the last summer term can not be determined at this writing but it looks as if we would have a satisfactory number. One good thing about the enrollment is that we have many new students, showing that our sphere of influence is widening.

It was a pleasure to have Dr. and Mrs. Porte as visitors here recently.

Miss Maude Edwards, graduate of the Arts college, gave a most acceptable junior recital last evening in the Chapel. She is a student of Mrs. Cole-Steele in dramatics.

Dr. Raymond Bixler, of the department of History, has had an article accepted by The Journal of Modern History, entitled, Anglo-Portuguese Rivalry for Delagoa Bay.

The Educational Day offerings have been coming in rather well and I earnestly hope that every congregation may respond no matter how little.

Ord Gehman, seminary student, has just received the Ira C. Wilcox Seminary Award, given by Mr. Ira C. Wilcox, of our Pittsburgh congregation.

ONE YEAR PROGRAM FOR OHIO CHURCHES FOR 1933-1934

The Ohio Conference of Brethren Churches commissioned a committee to formulate a program of some sort for the promotion of our Cause in Ohio. At the Dayton Conference, it was offered and adopted as follows:

I—Loyalties.

Our program shall stress the Vitalizing and Co-ordination of all the work of the Church in loyalties to:

- 1—Fundamental Beliefs and Practices.
- 2—The Brethren Spirit as exemplified in Simplicity, Honesty, Purity of life and in the keeping of the Ordinances.
- 3—All approved Brethren Institutions and Interests, namely,
 - a—Ashland College.
 - b—Benevolences — Brethren Home and Superannuated Ministers.
 - c—Publishing Interests—The Brethren Evangelist and Sunday School Literature.
 - d—The National Sunday School Association.
 - e—Home Missions.
 - f—Foreign Missions.

(Note—We believe each and all of these institutions are essential to denominational progress and urge the sincere and whole-hearted support of the Ohio Brotherhood to each of them).

11—This program shall give chief prominence to promote aggressively the winning of men to the church through New Testament Evangelism by fostering:

- 1—An Evangelistic Meeting in each congregation this year.
- 2—A Bible Institute in each church or group of churches properly situated.
- 3—A Lay-Visitation Campaign. (To be done by the Deacons or a group like the Seventy).
- 4—A School for Evangelism for all pastors and others who desire to carry forward a successful campaign.
- 5—Definite efforts to establish preaching places or Bible Study Classes in at least TEN new Communities in Ohio.
- 6—All the churches of Ohio supporting loyally and faithfully, the program of the Ohio Mission Board.
- 7—Promotion Day in each congregation; setting forth the program and receiving an offering to promote the work herein offered.
- 8—The Board of Evangelists shall be charged with the formulations of plans they shall make for the execution of this program.

Note: The above outline was worked out somewhat hurriedly at the Dayton Conference. Its intent is plain and centers around two words: Loyalty and Evangelism. It means action and action at once. For this reason, because the undersigned was chosen Chairman of the Board of Evangelists, that this program is published at this time. We believe a big aggressive attack can and will be made during the year if pastors and Official Boards will immediately busy themselves with an attempt to carry out its simple recommendations. Friends of an aggressive year in Ohio are URGED to write the writer AT ONCE making suggestions and invitations for such evangelism and Bible Study efforts in THEIR OWN CONGREGATION or near it, as they believe are necessary and possible.

He would also like to have the reaction of OHIO PASTORS and other preachers of the Brotherhood as to the possibility of a SCHOOL FOR EVANGELISM at our National Conference THIS YEAR. Ohio pastors might have their first effort during the off-hours of this conference. I believe we should at least have some meetings. What do you think? How can I tell unless they write me? CHARLES A. BAME, N. E. Ohio pastors, will please clip this article, keep it in their Bibles and pray over it. Ashland, Ohio.

MINUTES OHIO CONFERENCE

Dayton, Ohio, June 20-23, 1933

The 50th Anniversary of the Ohio Brethren Conference met in session June 20 to 23, 1933, in the historic First Brethren church, Dayton, Ohio, with Dr. Charles A. Bame, Moderator, presiding. Mr. Donald Bame Cleveland, led the congregational singing, while Mr. Robert Kline played the organ. The Welcome Keynote of the Conference was given by the local pastor, Rev. R. D. Barnard with a challenging Response Keynote by the Vice Moderator, Rev. C. A. Stewart, pastor of the Bryan church.

The Conference was blessed with an abundance of wonderful music furnished by the Dayton church and Miss Dorcas Bame, daughter of the Moderator. The Primary, Junior, High School and Adult Choirs of the Dayton church, all appeared during the evening sessions. Miss Susie Snyder, with other members of the local church, rendered special numbers.

This being a historic Conference the messages were of high order, looking back to the history of the past yet challenging the Ohio churches to heroic, sacrificing efforts for the future. Dr. Martin Shively spoke on "Brethren History Made in Dayton," followed by the Moderator's address on the theme: "Ohio Brethren in 1932-1933." The following Brethren, leaders in Ohio's Semi-Centennial Program of Progress spoke in their respective fields, Rev. R. D. Barnard, Chairman; Brethren Beal, Whitted, Baer and Crick.

The Bible Lecture Hours were led by Brethren Beachler and Beal on the following themes: "The Lordship of Jesus" and "The Program of Christ in the Present World."

Under the theme: "Our Stewardship in Literature" the following Brethren presented messages:

"Some Outstanding Brethren Books," Dr. Bame and Dr. Jacobs.

"Some Outstanding Brethren Editors," Dr. Teeter.

"Some Outstanding Publishing Problems," Prof. Mason.

At the Educational session Mr. George Kem of the local church spoke on the theme, "Financing Modern Education" followed by a message from Dr. E. E. Jacobs, President of Ashland College, on the theme: "Present Status of Education in America." Dr. J. Allen Miller represented Missions, speaking on the theme, "Present Outlook in Brethren Missions."

Under the theme: "Stewardship and Youth," Christian Endeavor was presented by Rev. Dyoll Belote while two of the younger men, Rev. D. R. Murray, pastor of the Columbus Cooperative church and Rev. Norman Uphouse, student pastor of the churches at Middlebranch and Glenford, presented the theme: "The Church Meeting the Problems of Our Youth."

In addition to the simultaneous sessions held by the S. M. M. and the W. M. S., the women presented a splendid program before the general sessions of conference. Mrs. H. E. Eavey of Zenia, Ohio spoke on "The Most Important Thing in All the World."

In the Ministerial meetings, 3 splendid messages were brought as follows:

"If I Were a Preacher," Dr. E. E. Jacobs.

"The Biblical Doctrine of Marriage and Divorce," Dr. J. Allen Miller.

"The Brethren Preacher's Message in the Light of Present Day Events," Prof. K. M. Monroe.

The two closing messages were brought by Dr. George Carpenter on the theme: "Our Denominational Outlook" and Prof. K. M. Monroe, "The Foible and Forte of Brethrenism."

Thus was brought to a close a harmonious, inspirational and challenging Conference to meet a year hence in the Louisville Brethren church on June 19-22, 1934.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter, Moderator; Rev. Conard Sandy, Vice Moderator; and Conference Secretary-Treasurer, Rev. Floyd Shirey. A motion was made and then tabled after discussion that until further action be taken the Conference elections shall be held at the second business session, if there are 3 sessions and at the first if there are but two such sessions. It was then voted to hold next year's Conference from June 19-22, 1934.

The Resolutions Committee brought the following report which was accepted by Conference:

Resolutions

Whereas: in the midst of the prevalent and uncertainty of our present day civilization, God's hand has been evident in the plans and the work of the churches of our district during the past conference year; and

Whereas: in this conference we are ob-erving the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of our beloved fraternity in this city;

Be it therefore resolved:

1. That our heartfelt thanks be offered unto the great Triune God for his wise guidance and providential care in the work of the denomination in this district during the past year.

2. That we express sincere gratitude for the privilege of having part in the activities and successes of our beloved fraternity during the past fifty years, and that we hereby pledge continued and increasing loyalty and more earnest devotion to her aims and interests through all the institutions of the church, during the years to come.

3. That we hereby express our appreciation for the kind hospitality of the entertaining church and for the faithful and efficient services of officers, speakers, musicians and singers of this conference.

4. That we reaffirm the time-honored position of our fraternity on non-resistance, non-swearing, and non-conformity.

5. That Brethren maintain their opposition to war and armaments. Our opposition is historic, honorable and notable. We reaffirm our belief that war is wrong socially, morally, and religiously, and we advocate continued and determined opposition. We further declare our conviction, by a reaffirmation of the historic position of the Brethren, that as Christians we can not engage in carnal warfare.

6. That we reaffirm our stand of two hundred years against all forms of alcoholic liquors, whether of 3.2 or light wines, and that we oppose the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, also that we urge Brethren everywhere to advocate and practice the "buy-dry" principle, thus avoiding an appearance of evil.

7. That this is a propitious time for a vigorous heralding of our message and for launching a vigorous program of evangelism.

8. That we commend the Home Mission efforts of our district and that we urge loyal support by all congregations of our district to the plans of our Mission Board for the coming year.

9. That we urge on the part of both ministry and laity the teaching and practice of the principle of stewardship of money, making the tithe the minimum of Christian giving.

Respectfully submitted,
DYOLL BELOTE,
G. C. CARPENTER,
CONARD SANDY.

The appropriations of the Mission Board to the mission churches was then made and accepted. It follows: Ellet, $300; Mansfield, $100; Rittman, $200; Fremont, $300; Columbus $150.

The Finance Board reported the approval of the following bills: $16 for programs and $1.50 for printing of Home Mission Report to the Brethren Publishing Co.; Secretary Fee, $10. Postage used by Secretary, $1.50. The Treasurer's books were audited and found to be correct. This report was approved.

The Committee for Ohio's New One-Year Program then presented, through Dr. Miller, the following report which was accepted by Conference.

Ohio's One-Year Program For Brethren Churches, 1933-1934

We, your Committee, appointed by the Ohio Conference to formulate a definite program for the churches of Ohio for the ensuing year, respectfully submit the following:

We believe that as a group of Brethren churches we may better achieve the ideals of our Church by having a definitely formulated goal or goals and by an earnest effort to inspire all our people to have a share in the joys of realization of such goals. Further we believe that all the Institutions and interests of the Church as a whole and as authorized by General Conference should be properly coordinated and supported. It is in this way we believe the interests of churches in Ohio can be conserved, promoted and made more fruitful.

Accordingly we make the following recommendations to this Conference for its approval:

- I Our Program shall stress the VITALIZING and COORDINATING of the work of the Church in LOYALTIES to,
 1. Fundamental Brethren Beliefs and Practices;
 2. The Brethren Spirit as exemplified in Simplicity, Honesty, Purity of Life and in the keeping of the Ordinances;
 3. All approved Brethren Institutions and Interests, namely,
 - a. Ashland College.
 - b. Benevolences—Brethren Home and Superannuated Ministers.
 - c. Publishing Interests—Brethren Evangelist, Sunday School Literature.
 - d. The National Sunday School Association.
 - e. Home Missions.
 - f. Foreign Missions.

(Note—We believe that each and all of these institutions named essential to denominational progress and strongly urge the sincere and whole-hearted support of the whole Ohio brotherhood of each of them.)

- II Our Program shall give chief prominence to and promote aggressively the WINNING OF MEN AND WOMEN to the Church through effective NEW TESTAMENT EVANGELISM, by having,
 1. An Evangelistic Meeting in each congregation during the year.
 2. A Bible Institute in each church or group of churches properly situated.
 3. A Lay Visitation Campaign (It is suggested that this may be done through the Board of Deacons or a group like the "Seventy").
 4. A school of Evangelism for all pastors teaching how to set up and carry through a successful evangelizing program.
 5. An effort made to establish preaching places, or Bible study classes in at least ten new communities in Ohio.
 6. All the churches of Ohio support loyally and fully the Program of the Ohio Mission Board
 7. "Promotion Day" in each congregation when an offering for the carrying out of this program shall be taken.

III The Board of Evangelists shall be charged with the execution of this program. The working out of all details essential to the realization of the ends suggested in this program shall be left to this Board.

Conference appropriated $100 of her funds to the carrying out of this program. Thus ended the business sessions of the 50th Conference.

L. V. KING, Conference Secretary.

IN THE SHADOW

SIFE—Joseph Lewis Sife, son of John Henry and Yolara Frank Sife, was born March 11, 1878, in Adams County, Indiana, and departed this life June 23, 1933, at the Adams County Memorial Hospital, at Decatur, Indiana, where he had undergone a major operation. He spent his entire life in or near his home county of Mercer, Indiana, with the exception of six years spent in Michigan. He leaves to mourn his departure a companion, two sons, two daughters. He was the father of Clark Sife, who for a number of years was the efficient superintendent of the Public Sunday school at Berne and one of the staunchest supporters of the Brethren faith with which one could come in contact. Mr. Sife leaves a fine family of children, all but one faithful in all things of their Lord. Funeral services by the writer.

W. F. JOHNSON.

RAWLY—Margaret Elizabeth Rawly was born near Decatur, Indiana, in 1853, and departed this life at her home near Berne, Indiana, July 1, 1933, where she had spent more than sixty years. Her husband had passed to his reward thirty-nine years before. She was the mother of five children, one boy and four girls. She is the mother-in-law of our esteemed Dr. D. D. Jones of Berne, in whom the Berne church has more faith as a doctor than any other living man. She leaves a noble heritage in a noble Sunday, all members of the church and servants of God. Funeral services by the writer.

W. F. JOHNSON.

MEYERS—Mrs. M. C. Meyers, devoted and worthy wife of our esteemed Elder Meyers, passed from earth to be with her Lord. Death came rather suddenly last Sunday morning. Funeral services by the pastor from the family home in Catoonsburg, Pennsylvania; interment at Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania. "The History of the Brethren and the Brethren Church" has this biography—"Miss Lovina Eileen Young, born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, united with the German Baptist church at 10 years, charter member of the Jones Mill Brethren, became Mrs. M. C. Meyers in 1831, in 1832 was chosen member of the national executive committee of S. S. C. E., elected national secretary of the organization, organized the state society in Pennsylvania, and for several years was field secretary, solicited funds to build the church in National Capitol, was very active in W. C. T. U." All the strength and talent that God gave her she literally and joyfully gave to others, in the home and in extensive ministry in teaching the Bible at every available opportunity. She was a great witness by word and life to the sweet gospel of Christ. The Blessed Hope of the return of Jesus Christ to this earth was especially dear to her heart and she was indeed a faithful witness to others. This church appreciates her life and ministry and extends to Rev. Meyers most sincere sympathy in this hour of his great loss, also to all the bereaved.

CLAUDE STUDEBAKER.

SNOW—Mrs. Kittie Snow, formerly of Lindsborg, Kansas, who has lived at the Strong Home, in Fort Scott, Kansas, for the last 8 years, departed this life at the Home, on the evening of July 4, 1933, at the age of 89 years.

She is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Winifred L. Franham, of Minneapolis, Minn., and Mrs. C. J. Allen, of Merrifield, Minnesota. Funeral was conducted by the writer, from the Chener's Parlors, on July 6, 1933.

The body was laid to rest in the Oak Grove Cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

HELMLINGER—Oscar L. Helmlinger was born at Nevada, Missouri, February 4, 1927 and departed this life at the Fort Scott Hospital, the morning of July 5, 1933, at the age of 6 years, 5 months and 1 day.

Oscar Junior was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Helmlinger, and had lived in Fort Scott, Kansas for two years. THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

Jesus not only dignifies obscurity, but the light of his Truth breaks in upon the world's dark despair, makes the sky bright with promise and reveals the infinite worth of even the most obscure soul.

Dignifying Obscurity

THE early life of Jesus dignifies obscurity. He lived in an insignificant town, one in which Nathanael thought no important person could dwell. Even in Nazareth his family was a humble one—"the carpenter's son" was his designation. In his own family he had no prominence. His own brothers saw nothing remarkable in him; nor when he began his ministry did they believe in him. His supernatural birth was unknown to the world. Those to whom it had been revealed had almost departed from the earth. Of course, Simeon and Anna were dead, as were also Zacharias and Elisabeth. Probably Joseph was dead. Mary was perhaps the only one who knew his high character and destiny. He was willing to be looked upon as an ordinary young villager until the time came for the beginning of his ministry. He lived obscure, unnoticed, and unknown. The highest form of greatness has no desire for display. Conscious of its excellence, it is not anxious to have the world informed regarding it. And as the great Master lived in obscurity, so may we lead sublime lives though we be unknown to the world. Indeed, the spotlight of publicity often spoils character. Too often it causes men to yearn for the plaudits of the multitude. It emphasizes seeming instead of being.—The Watchman-Examiner.

The New Religion of Humanism an Unchristian Farce

Unto Cain and his offering he (God) had not respect.—Gen. 4:5.

The Convention of Humanists—the New Religion, which met in Chicago recently was attended by 34 men, all rated as men of "first-rate minds." These educators and ministers took upon themselves the task of stating and formulating what is meant by the new religion—Humanism. Among the signers are the following:

Prof. J. A. C. Fagginger Auer, Parkman professor of church history and theology at Harvard University and professor of church history at Tufts College; Dr. John Dewey, professor of philosophy at Columbia University; Prof. Robert Morss Lovett, University of Chicago; Charles Francis Potter, founder of "The First Humanist Society of New York, Inc."; Rabbi Jacob J. Weinstein, rabbi and adviser to Jewish students at Columbia University; Prof. Edwin Arthur Burt, professor of philosophy in the Sage School of Philosophy, Cornell University; Prof. F. H. Hawkins, professor of economics and sociology at Smith College; Prof. A. Eustace Haydon, professor of history of religions, University of Chicago; Prof. Oliver L. Reiser, University of Pittsburgh, and Prof. Roy Wood Sellars, University of Michigan.

The tenets of the supposed new cult are given out as the following:

Religious humanists regard the universe as self-existing and not created.

Religion must formulate its hopes and plans in the light of the scientific spirit and method.

The distinction between the sacred and the secular can no longer be maintained.

Religious humanism considers the complete realization of human personality to be the end of a man's life, and seeks its development and fulfillment in the here and now.

In place of the old attitudes involved in worship and prayer, the humanist finds his religious emotions expressed in a heightened sense of personal life and in a cooperating effort to promote social well-being.

There will be no uniquely religious emotions and attitudes of the kind hitherto associated with belief in the supernatural. Man will learn to face the crises of life in terms of his knowledge of their naturalness and probability. Reasonable and manly attitudes will be fostered by education and supported custom.

We assume that humanism will take the path of social and mental hygiene, and discourage sentimental and unreal hopes and wishful thinking.

The goal of humanism is a free and universal society in which people voluntarily and intelligently cooperate for the common good.

The time has come for widespread recognition of the radical changes in religious thoughts throughout the modern world. Science and economic change has disrupted the old beliefs.

Religions the world over are under the necessity of coming to terms with new conditions created by a vastly increased knowledge and experience.

Least some reader be awed by the high-sounding list of names and the nicety of their writing (their feigned words), we want to say that their new religion is not new—but very OLD, as old as the human race, as old as Cain, as old as his religion. Humanism is nothing more than "Cain come back to town again." It is atheistic. It has no place for redemption. It has no "Old rugged cross, stained with blood so divine." It is all man, the work of man, man at his best or worst, presenting himself to himself, for to present himself as such to the God of heaven is impossible, "without the shedding of blood." There is no access to God apart from atonement. According to the report of these gentlemen, when men adopt their religion they certainly will be self-made men—and such usually worship their maker, themselves. This is exactly what Cain did, but the Lord had no respect to the man, or his sacrifice. No; these religious bankrupts did not bring into being a new religion by their combined intellects, but listened to a sinister figure (Satan) whom they refuse to believe in, who ever and anon seeks to get men to ignore God, reject the revelation of his Word, refuse allegiance to Christ, and deny the efficacy of the atonement of his Son. It must be confessed that too often we let our dogmas and doctrines stick out like protruding bones in the flesh, yet we cannot do without bones. These carry the body and give it the power of locomotion. With our doctrines we must strive for soundness of life. But these men want soundness of life without the antiquated doctrines of the Bible. Impossible. As well expect a beautiful body to walk without the skeleton to carry it.

The effect of the OLD ATHEISM and MODERNISTIC LIBERALISM is clearly evident from the following experience of Dr. Spencer, the Editor of the Christian Advocate:

While visiting New York (he) dropped into the "Humanist" services in Steinway Hall. He found an audience of 170, of whom 22 were men. There was of course no prayer and no hymns, but selections from Chopin and Tschaiowsky and a reading from a review of an Aldous Huxley novel. Charles Francis Potter, who is the leader of this enterprise, was trained in Newton Theological Seminary and passed from the Baptist ministry through Unitarianism into atheism. Dr. Spencer's reflection is to the point:

"The Methodist Church is making a mistake in presenting something else, by-products or substitutes for the Gospel that Jesus Christ, Son of God, came into the world to save sinners. Every substitution has dwindled our congregations, weakened our message, deadened the conscience, brought barrenness, alienated the people, headed our churches for such sized congregations as the First Humanist Society of New York."

Dr. John Haynes Holmes also a "Humanist-atheist" has celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ministry at the Community Church, New York. The exercises were in the Jewish Temple Beth-El. In his sermon on that occasion Dr. Holmes said he no longer had the bright hope of the future he once had. He sees ahead of us "dark days and at the worst the complete collapse of the civilization of our age, a collapse that will be followed by a thousand years of darkness." Such are the blessed hopes of the social Gospel.—Christian Monitor (Mennonite).

Tea Garden Bests Beer Garden

A Short-Short Story in Which Clever Youth Fights Repeal

By Oren Root Brown

The President of the Merleville National Bank glared down at the young man who sat facing him across the desk in his private office. "Why your place would not last a month," he snapped.

"We would like to try, Mr. Spencer."

"Humph!"

"Besides, we have enough people in our church to make it pay, not to mention hundreds of others who would come in."

"There is no need for your type of 'garden' in this town."

"There is more of a need for our type of garden. than there is for that new beer garden on Main Street or any other beer garden or speak-easy."

Mr. Spencer left the office for a minute and returned with the money. "Here is the loan, Hunter, but don't forget that yours' is a new idea around this town, and you will have to work hard to make it pay."

Dick Hunter drew a Bible out of his pocket and opened it to the 8th chapter of Romans. "Mr. Spencer," he said, "look what the good book has to say about it." So saying he read aloud the 31st verse, "If God is for us, who is against us?"

"Well, you have the will to win, I see," said the bank president holding out the document for Dick to sign it.

On his way home from the bank, Dick Hunter met a friend who had been out of town on business.

"Hello Hunter!" the friend said, "say, what is this new tea garden idea of yours, my sister has mentioned?"

"It's this way Bill. In two months Merleville, and the rest of the state, vote on the question of Repeal. Just a week or so ago, when beer was made legal, the liquor interests opened up a new beer garden on Main Street.

"Yes! I noticed it this morning as I

Let the Sacrifice be Mutual

Churches are everywhere finding it difficult to finance their local programs. So extreme is this difficulty that drastic economies are being found necessary on the part of practically every church. In the midst of such a situation there are two temptations to which churches are frequently subjected that ought to be resisted very strongly. It is difficult to see how either can be justified in the light of Christian principles. The first is to discharge the pastor and do without preaching. The second is to drive a sharp bargain with the minister.

Regarding the first, the biggest difficulty arises from the fact that the church that decides to do without a preacher is failing in fulfilling the chief function of the church, namely, the preaching of the Word. How shall the people hear the Word without a preacher? How shall the preachers preach unless they be sent by the laity into the pulpits of the churches? How shall a church give forth a message without a messenger? And what shall become of a church whose pulpit is closed, whose voice is silent? It is really a serious thing for a church to take such action when another course is possible.

It is also unfair to the preacher to be turned out of a pulpit merely as a matter of economy. He who has heeded the call of God to preach, has faithfully prepared himself for the task, and is capable and worthy of his calling, has a claim upon the church for the opportunity of preaching. And the church is under obligation to provide for the preacher as he pursues his calling of preaching. Let us bear in mind that "the laborer is worthy of his hire", and that "the Lord hath ordained that they which preach the gospel shall live of the gospel" (1 Cor. 9:14). Also "Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things" (Gal. 6:6).

Regarding the second temptation, let it be said that sharp bargaining on the part of the church or minister is wholly out of keeping with the Christian spirit and teaching. Such bargaining over salaries is common enough among worldly institutions, but the church must never look to the world for its standards. The Christian standard is to give "not grudgingly nor of necessity, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver," but the charge is, "Freely ye have received, freely give." Nor are Christian people to attempt to deceive one another into thinking they are more generous than they really are, nor more hard-pressed than they really are, in order to induce the other to agree to a better bargain—neither on the part of the ministry, nor on the part of the laity. And to the shame of both, examples of both sides in such bargaining have been known to occur. But in these times when financial hardship and fear everywhere abound, the temptation to bargain is primarily on the part of the church, and there is evidence in various directions of the need of warning against such a spirit.

Assuredly we must recognize the necessity of economy. Church budgets must be trimmed, because unemployment and greatly reduced income abound among church members. But rather than dismiss the pastor and go without preaching, let the membership share with the pastor that he too may live and that they may have his spiritual ministry continued among them. And let not the depression be made an excuse for cutting the church budget and reducing the pastor's salary beyond what actual necessity demands. And with every necessary cut in the pastor's salary, let the church membership recognize the duty of making cuts in their personal expenditures also. It has been found necessary to reduce the pastor's salary in some instances to the point where it involved hardship and real sacrifice. And some pastors have voluntarily reduced their own salaries to that point, seeing that the financial situation required it. And such reductions to the point of sacrifice may yet be necessary in still more instances. But if so, the laity ought to feel the obligation laid upon them of entering upon a program of sacrifice also. There are inspiring examples of that sort of devotion. We have met with them and have thanked God for them.

The trouble is that they are not numerous enough. All too many church members make no real sacrifice, but rather insist on having a considerable portion of their luxuries continued without interruption, though their contributions to the church must suffer cut after cut. That is not being fair with the church and pastor, nor honest with God. The most they are able to do, is the least they ought to do. We are not making a plea against the necessity of sacrifice on the part of the minister; that has always gone along with his profession in large measure. But we are saying that the spirit of sacrifice ought to be entered into on the part of the laity also. It ought to be a mutual experience.

Can We Share Without Prose- lyting?

That is what the new missionary slogan turns out to be—sharing without proselyting. That is what the new critics of foreign missions think ought to be the policy governing the missionary activities of the Christian church. The church—that noble institution founded by Christ, who declared himself very definitely and positively to be the only way to salvation and to the Father, is no longer to be an aggressive messenger of the Truth, calling men and women to repentance and to a new life in Christ, but is to adopt a sort of fraternal attitude toward other religions and a mutual sharing of good qualities. These would-be revisers of the missionary program would have Christ sit down with Buddha or with Confucius, or with Mohammed, and say to him, "If I have anything in my religion that you do not have, I shall be pleased to share it with you, and if you have anything in your religion that I do not have, I will gratefully adopt it. However, be assured that I am not come to displace you or to steal your sheep. I recognize the great good that you have done, and I propose that we be friends. Some of my followers have been over-zealous in my behalf in years past; I apologize for them and assure you that the policy of my church shall be different henceforth. I, of course, think I have a pretty good system and possibly the higher social and moral standards, but I acknowledge that my religion is not the only religion, rather that it is but one of the great religions of the world. I propose that we share with one another."

Is that harsh and shocking to your ears? Yet that is not an unfair representation of what this new missionary attitude amounts to. The church is no longer to stress the uniqueness and absoluteness of Christianity and the falseness and insufficiency of other faiths. No doubt it has something of value that none of the other faiths have, but so also they have something of value that Christianity does not have. Therefore the Christian church is henceforth to share, but not to proselyte.

If these missionary critics had confined themselves to new proposals of methods (though at this point they were not original), missionary executives and missionaries themselves might have heard them with profit, but it is primarily a new attitude they propose,—a "re-thinking" of the missionary task and purpose; old objectives and aims no longer suffice. But such a change can never be, for our religion is intolerant of other faiths. If Christianity is not the only true religion, it is not worth all the sacrifice that the church is asking men to make in order to propagate it. But if it is the true and only way of salvation, it must be proclaimed, and every possible effort must be made to win disciples to Christ and to teach them to observe all things whatsoever he has commanded. It is not a task of mere sharing that the church has on its hands, but one of taking the field for Christ. His way is the only way, or it is no way at all. And if it is the way, then with all the seriousness of its being the Christian church must seek to win adherents to its cause; win them from the false religions of the world to the only true religion. Take away the proselyting spirit of Christianity, and you have taken away its life.

A Bit of History in Thirty Words

There are some events in recent history that will continue to bob up as unpleasant memories in the minds of those who have conscience against war. Examples of such are brought vividly to our attention by the following energetic statement of Dr. Dan. B. Brummitt, editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate:

Several times it has been gently hinted that this paper made far too much about the denial of citizenship to avowed pacifists. Editors may need such hints, but events are not so responsive to pressure, and here is a bit of history which says more in thirty words, quoted below, than has been said in all the religious and secular press in the whole matter.

Madame Rosika Schwimmer, as will be recalled, applied for naturalization a few years ago, and it was refused her, for the sole reason that, when asked, she declared her conscience would not permit her to take part in war. The incident attracted no little public attention, and many well-intentioned patriots spoke up and said it served her right. This was no country for slackers. Now, Madame Schwimmer is a woman of brains, courage and ideals, as everybody agrees. Except for her unfortunate unwillingness to bear arms—remember she is a woman, and past military age—it is admitted that she would have made a useful citizen of the United States. Very well; listen to her thirty words:

"On the same day the court denied my citizenship, the same court granted citizenship to Zangara, because he said he would bear arms—and look what he did with them!"

Such a plaintive thrust will not soon be forgotten, and we could well wish it might stab the indifferent and unconcerned awake to the steadily encroaching spirit of militarism that sets up such incongruous and unrighteous standards.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother Frank Gehman, pastor of the church at Osceola, Indiana, reports 29 to take a stand for Christ and the church by conversion, letter and reconsecration, as a result of the tent meeting held at that place under the evangelistic leadership of Brother R. Paul Miller. The extremely hot weather hindered greatly, and other things interfered, but God gave the victory through his Holy Spirit and by the faithfulness of his ministering servants. It is suggested that the changed spirit of the membership and their increased richness of fellowship in Christ rank as important from the standpoint of results as the number of souls to take a stand for Christ.

A letter from the LaVerne, California, church informs us that the work there continues to be prospered under the blessing of God and the pastoral leadership of Brother A. L. Lynn. Two souls were added to the church during the past quarter and twenty-seven were added to the church during the past quarter and twenty-seven by letter. The young people are said to be responding in a splendid way to calls for definite Christian service. Brother Lynn's program setting forth ideals for church activity are worthy to be a challenge to any church, in fact, it is comprehensive enough to be made the program for an entire district, or for the brotherhood. Brother Lynn has been retained by unanimous vote for another year of pastoral service at this place.

We are in receipt of another interesting letter from Dr. Florence N. Griddle, who tells of the missionary conference, a two-fold conference, in fact—a conference of American missionaries and one of native Christians. These were busy days for all, and deeply spiritual were the sessions. We dare say that many a Christian in the homeland would have enjoyed sitting in at that conference, sharing the inspiration of the messages and the exaltation of their united prayers. The one social event of the conference centered around Master Kenneth Sheldon, whose sixth birthday anniversary occurred on June 4th. Due to the departure on furlough of three missionaries—Brother and Sister Hathaway and Sister Bickel, a relocation of some of the missionaries on the several fields was necessary.

Brother R. E. Gingrich writes that the Lord has been blessing the work of the Fair Haven church, near West Salem, Ohio, where he is pastor. The church and Sunday school attendance have been realizing a steady increase and the spiritual pulse of the people is being raised by faithful Bible instruction, prayer and visitation, especially in anticipation of their summer evangelistic campaign, when the pastor will act as his own evangelist. This splendid rural congregation has a record of fifty years of service in their present house of worship, and on August 6th they are to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of its dedication. We extend greetings to pastor and people on this occasion, and also congratulate the church on the more than sixty years of service since their organization as a congregation.

LET US COOPERATE

This is the time to think seriously of doing that very thing. Conditions are beginning to improve. At least one of our prominent pastors recently told us that the financial situation was on the upgrade in his community. We hope it is, or will soon be, improving in many sections of the country. At such a time we wish to bring to your attention the advisability of each and every one sharing faithfully with the Lord as he makes possible the return of prosperity. Remember your obligation to your church, both locally and generally. Your Publishing House and your church paper particularly appeal for your cooperation, that you shall share with this department of the Lord's work as he prospers you.

We must all work together, if we are to succeed as a church. We just listened to the President of the United States speaking over the radio a few moments before writing these lines. He was appealing to the people of the nation for cooperation to make the industrial recovery act a success. Whether his program is mapped out along right lines or not we offer no opinion, but we are convinced that he is right when he says that the success of the program, if it has merit, depends on the cooperation of the people. Employers and workers alike must do their part. The same principle holds also with regard to the program of The Brethren Evangelist for recovery of much of its former circulation and wider field of service—and we have a program. It will not work itself. We are strongly purposing to do our part, and we ask the faithful members of our brotherhood to do their part. Pastors and laity both have a responsibility, something they can do, and which they alone can do, to bring about success. We are asking them to present the claims of their church paper to those Brethren homes which are not now taking it. We cannot reach those homes through these columns. Our readers can. So we are hoping you will all, after having made sure that your own subscription is renewed, present our special rates to some who will not be reading these lines.

We are well aware of the fact that prosperity has not returned—yet. But we are told that it is on its way, and there are some indications that it is. It may help some if we have faith and work to that end. We know, however, that as yet, vast numbers of our people do not have much ready cash. We are therefore endeavoring to make it as easy as possible for those who are yet being hard pressed to continue in the Evangelist family. One dollar is a lot easier raised in the average home now than two dollars. So we are offering to take subscriptions for seven months for one dollar, thus giving our friends an extra month, in addition to the extra work that short time subscriptions involve. If money is scarce with you, as it is with us, just send in one dollar for yourself and urge your friends to do the same. After seven months perhaps we shall all be in better shape and you can with less difficulty subscribe for an entire year at one time.

Now, just remember that we are all in the same boat. And we must work together if we are to get out of this situation. The plan calls for cooperation, and the welfare of all demands it. We lay it upon your heart. Let it be said of everyone: "He did his part."

The Influence of the Arts College in the Training of Ministers

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

As is known to most of the readers of this paper, the institution known as Ashland College, consists of two departments, viz., the arts college and the theological seminary, this latter department having recently been reorganized with the express purpose of offering to ministerial students greater opportunity to prepare for their life calling.

A study of the history of the institution will reveal the fact that it was organized as an arts college and was so administered up until some twenty-five years ago, when special courses were organized under the name of Seminary. For many years there was no sharp distinction between these courses and the arts courses, some of them being what we called "combination" courses. This brought, or rather kept, the two departments close together with the result that teachers in the arts college were in close contact with students in the theological courses. However with the above-noted change, these two departments are now less closely related but this does not at all release the college teacher from certain obligations to the divinity student, nor does it, in my opinion, reduce his influence.

I maintain that the arts teacher holds a place second to none in his influence on the prospective minister. That is the thesis of this short article. It is true that by far the majority of the enrolled students here are not ministerial students, but that by no means makes this smaller group of minor importance. To those who wonder about this disproportion of students, the answer is made that in order to have a college at all, a certain enrollment is essential, the Federal Department, for instance, refusing to recognize an institution as a college, with less than one hundred students. It must be plain that what is regarded as a complete modern college program can not be maintained with too few students. There are the so-called extra-curricular activities,—the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., athletics, debate, Mayday festivities, glee clubs, band, orchestras,—which can not be kept going unless we have a certain number of students, and certainly no one would argue that these are not highly important to modern college training. I note that at the recent meeting of the National Educational Association, it was pointed out that many of the traditional scholastic subjects are being replaced by the above.

Now, it is well known, of course, that a theological seminary is intended to give courses distinct in content and differing widely from those given in an arts college, the latter being pursued by the prospective minister with the end in view of preparing him for further study. In the arts college the student has had an approach to the sciences, the languages, history, mathematics and the humanities, these being the bases upon which later work is built. And it is here where the arts college affects the divinity student profoundly.

In fact, it would seem that, as the theological student in coming on up through the arts courses, influences might be given and biases laid that would never be wholly overcome. Whether a seminary in three short years can undo what eight long years have done (high school and college) seems problematical. Therefore, if a denomination desires to maintain a theological seminary, IT IS IMPERATIVE THAT IT FIRST MAINTAIN AN ARTS COLLEGE. A certain rather backward Christian denomination recently awoke to this fact and established a college, although it already had a theological seminary. And if I may offer any criticism of the interdenominational Bible institute, of which we have many, it is just this,—their students are not, as a rule, previously trained in a Christian denominational college.

A typical Christian arts college, such as Ashland, it would seem, ought to have a Christian faculty, with a high degree of intellectual training, many of whom represent the denomination, although not necessarily all, and none of whom would purposely set spiritual pitfalls in the way of any student, theological or otherwise. Under such conditions both Christian ideals and denominational loyalty would be assured and those students holding to other church creeds would receive no hurt. And the pre-theological student would be well on the way to become a candidate for denominational semi-

YOUR AFTERSELF

An After Commencement Message for All Youth

David Starr Jordan

Your first duty in life is toward your afterself. So live that the man you ought to be may, in his time, be possible, be actual. Far away in the years he is waiting his turn. His body, his brain, his soul, are in your boyish hands. He can not help himself. What will you leave for him? Will it be a brain unspoiled by lust or dissipation; a mind trained to think and act; a nervous system true as a dial in its response to the truth about you? Will you, Boy, let him come as a man among men in his time? Or will you throw away his inheritance before he has had the chance to touch it? Will you turn over to him a brain in distorted, a mind diseased, a will untrained to action, a spinal cord grown through and through with "the devil-grass, wild oats?" Will you let him come and take your place, gaining through your experience, happy in your friendships, hallowed through your joys, building on them his own? Or will you fling it all away, decreasing, wantonlike, that the man you might have been shall never be? This is your problem in life—the problem which is vastly more to you than any or all others. How will you meet it, as a man or as a fool? It comes before you today and every day, and the hour of your choice is the crisis in your destiny!

Signs of Our Lord's Return

II—ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

By Charles W. Mayes

Significant economic conditions prevail the world over, which, viewed in the light of the prophetic Word, make the informed Christian take serious note.

The Word of God enlightens us on many conditions which are to prevail prior to the Lord's return. The newspapers have many things to say about the world economic conditions. Although single events may not indicate so much, they certainly do indicate which way the wind is blowing. The prophetic student needs to have his Bible in one hand and the newspaper in the other these days. We will notice a very few of the economic trends in the world today, as they have a bearing on prophetic truth.

The Rich Man's Peril

Do not envy the rich man. He is having his troubles. Some one has said that it is no disgrace to be poor, but sometimes uncomfortable. But today we discover that the rich man is also uncomfortable. "Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted and your garments are moth eaten. Your silver and gold is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as with fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days" (James 5:1-3). So vivid is this description of our day, that we marvel that it was written nineteen hundred years ago.

Without attempting to give an exposition of this striking passage of Scripture, we may note a few important truths. The path is not always to be rosy for the rich man. His hoarded gold and silver will be rusted and corrupted, turning to his destruction instead of his blessing. Rich men are to be prominent in the LAST DAYS.

Their wealth has been made (at least in many cases) by fraud, and the laborers have labored in the fields owned and controlled by the rich men. The poor man is held down. The rich man is exalted. The laborer is to suffer from mistreatment and poor wages while the rich live on in pleasure.

During the recent depression, (and wasn't the depression awful!) thousands of farms passed from the hands of the poor man to the rich man. Foreclosures everywhere! Yes, that was the story. The rich became richer and the poor became poorer. But just at the time when the rich man feels secure, God says, "Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you." The last fifty years of United States history has seen the multiplication of the number of rich men, while the history of some European countries has followed "James five" in detail. A better description of the present system of wealth in the world could not be written in an equal number of words.

But now the important statement in the passage follows, "BE PATIENT THEREFORE BRETHREN UNTO THE COMING OF THE LORD. . . BE YE ALSO PATIENT STABLISH YOUR HEARTS, FOR THE COMING OF THE LORD DRAWETH NIGH" (James 5:7-8).

Technocracy

A few months ago the world was stirred with the announcement of a new word and a larger volume of staggering statements about the perils of the economic conditions. We were told that the machine had conquered the maker. The world was sick with an overdose of production of goods. If one tenth of what the technocrats said is true, the world is in a perilous stage economically. Of course, we are not to forget that the depression is now over! But nevertheless it is a serious question even in the minds of statesmen (supposing that we have such today) as to whether we can borrow of Peter to Pay Paul and still keep Peter satisfied. Whatever may be our opinion about economic conditions, the fact remains that we are in possession of a Divine Book which forecasts without error the things which shall come to pass.

In Zechariah 8:10 we are introduced to what the Prophet saw centuries ago. He wrote, "For before these days there was no hire for man, nor any hire for beast, neither was there peace to him that went out or came in, because of the affliction, for I set all men every one against his neighbor." If we take into account the meaning of the term, "these days," as compared with the context of this passage, we discover that the eighth of Zechariah gives us a number of glimpses of the millennial blessing. Whatever applications there may be to the past, we are compelled to admit a future aspect as well. This becomes very significant when we consider that verse nine indicates that these things take place in the day when the temple is to be built. There have been several temples already. One or more are still future. In this day, we see about us not only unemployment for men but for beasts as well. And a recent magazine carries an article in which it is stated that the Jews have already petitioned the League of Nations for a temple site.

World Economic Conference

As this is being written the World Economic Conference is on. What will be the outcome we do not need to know. One newspaper editor has said that unless we pull out of the depression by September it will be impossible ever to get out. Another writer says that if the World Economic Conference fails, the result will be nothing but chaos for civilization. Whether the nations admit it or not, there is great distress of nations, with perplexity (Luke 21:25-28). What the immediate economic outcome will be, is not so important for us as Christians, but this we know, there is coming a world ruler who will find the world in chaos. In that day of chaos, "a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences shall stand up. And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power; and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper, and practice and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people, AND THROUGH HIS POLICY HE SHALL CAUSE CRAFT TO PROSPER IN HIS HAND; he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many; he shall also stand against the Prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hand" (Dan. 8:23-25).

The above is the prophetic picture of the coming world dictator. He will doubtless have "a new deal." How the nations will be united and divided on the basis of gold or other policies we cannot yet see, but we know there will come a powerful potentate who can temporarily or apparently settle every problem of man. His end shall be with the coming again of the Lord Jesus Christ as King of Kings. He shall be broken without hand, and that with the brightness of the coming of Jesus Christ to earth. (See 2 Thess. 2:7-8).

The Great Trinity in Education

By J. Paul Dowdy

Bachelor's Oration at the June Commencement of Ashland College

Dr. Jacobs; Ladies and Gentlemen; Fellow-students, and Friends:

Thirty million of children throng the schools of the United States! Picture to yourselves this vast concourse of young Americans. If these children were placed four abreast and three feet apart, the line would stretch from New York across the Appalachians, the expansive prairies, and the widespread Rockies to the Golden Gate at San Francisco, with enough left over to trail down the Mississippi valley from Chicago to New Orleans. What an opportunity! What a possibility! What an OBLIGATION! In a recent normal year the United States spent over two billions of dollars for public education, but at the same time two billions of dollars were poured out lavishly and wastefully to pay our national bill for crime. If the nation's crime is to be reduced, it must be done by means of proper education.

Ladies and gentlemen, consider those elements which make up an education of the proper type.

The first of this great trinity is knowledge. To impart knowledge to students is unquestionably an important and worthy purpose of our educational system. It has been true in the past, it is true today, it will be true in the future that those men who accomplish great things are men who know facts. But what kind of knowledge should these young Americans acquire? They should be taught only those things that are worth knowing. In general, boys and girls should know those facts of the history of man which will help them to understand how that measure of liberty and equality which we now possess has been gained. They should know the means by which modern people live together, communicate, and transact the world's business. They should know something of the achievements in the realm of the sciences. Boys and girls should know the truth about our politics, about our economic system, about our social injustices, and our wars. Above all, boys and girls should not be allowed to remain in ignorance about God. To be able to correctly judge between the fleeting temporal values and the values of eternity is incalculably important. Such knowledge in its highest degree comes only to those who build life on the foundation Christ Jesus. In every field, boys and girls should be taught those things that are worth knowing.

Moreover, there should be developed in the young people of our nation those skills which will enable them to properly use such knowledge as they have acquired. There are many people whose knowledge is extensive, but they lack the skill to make their knowledge profitable to themselves or to the community in which they live. The hypotheses and theories advanced by scientists in every field, would be worthless without the technical skill to experiment and prove their worth. We owe a debt of gratitude to those men who have by the superb development of skill, achieved the great advancement in medical science, in chemistry, in biology, in physics, in mathematics, and in all other branches of science. These great souls have brought within the reach of the common man many of the best things of life. In short, children should not only know things, they must know how to DO things.

Simply to know is not enough. The GOOD must not be allowed to blind our eyes to the BETTER. A good school, a good home, a good church, is one which constantly sets up situations in which DOING the right thing is a delight and a joy to the child.

Of greater importance than skill in working with the hands is skill in the ART OF CORRECT THINKING. There is a decidedly noticeable lack of ability in this art among the great mass of men, and among college students as well. It is true that in childhood and youth we must depend on those who know better than we. But this does not in any case justify failure on the part of parents and teachers to develop in boys and girls some measure of skill in CORRECT THINKING. They must learn to think for themselves if they would push back and enlarge the frontiers of human achievement.

Another decidedly noticeable lack of skill among men and women everywhere, in college and out, is skill in the fine ART OF CONVERSATION. There are few other things which contribute so much of personal satisfaction, and of pleasure to one's circle of friends as the ability to converse fluently and sensibly on many subjects.

Lastly, Ladies and Gentlemen, the greatest of the great trinity of education is FEELING eventuating in proper attitudes and sentiments. It is often said that it makes no difference how one feels about a situation, but rather how one thinks. While there can be no doubt as to the value of sane thinking, there can be no sane thinking apart from sane feeling. What we know does not make us what we are. What we do is an infallible index of our real selves. But what we FEEL, that we are. Nothing great was ever thought or done which was not first GREATLY FELT. In this realm of feeling falls the whole category of things good and bad, such as tolerance, kindness, fairness, loyalty, affection, dependability, persistence, love, and their opposites. The importance of these characteristics as compared with much of the knowledge which we acquire in our schools is unquestionable. It may be worth something to be able to name the capitol cities of the states of our Union, but it is far more important to possess a spirit of TOLERANCE. It may be interesting to the theory of atomic structure, or to be able to calculate the distance to the countless stars scattered throughout the infinite reaches of space, but how do these things compare in value to boys and girls, with the ideals of HONESTY and FAIR PLAY? Furthermore, to be able to love, to understand, and to respond to the great masterpieces of Art, Literature, Music, depends upon a genuine and finely developed sense of inner feeling.

What will the youth of today do with that vast volume of power which will be placed in their hands when they step out into the life of tomorrow? In the Old Stone Age a man with his club could injure or destroy that which was within easy reach. The ancient Greek with sword and javelin was more dangerous. With the coming of gunpowder, man's power to destroy was greatly increased. But today, with automatic pistols, with machine guns, with poison gases, with armored tanks, with airplanes, with submarines, with huge battleships, and by ingenious strategy, and disgraceful propaganda, modern man may become a veritable DEMON OF DESTRUCTION. It is therefore, increasingly important that children shall grow up with the right kind of FEELINGS toward home, toward friends, toward community, and toward the nations of the world. For, as a man FEELS towards life, and toward his neighbors throughout the world, so will he use the almost limitless power at his command, to build up, or to destroy,—to broaden life and spread happiness, or to spread sorrow, disease, and death.

To be at home in all lands and all ages; to count nature a familiar acquaintance and art an intimate friend; to make hosts of friends among the men of one's own age who are leaders in all walks of life; to lose one's self in generous enthusiasm, and to cooperate with others for common ends; to learn manners from students who are gentlemen, and to form character under professors who are Christians—these are the fruits of KNOWLEDGE, SKILL, and FEELING, as developed in a Christian school such as our own Ashland College.

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

"WORLD FELLOWSHIP OF FAITHS"

It is interesting as an item of news, that there will be a display of the various religious faiths of the world at the World's Fair now on display in Chicago, and there may be some profit derived from a first-hand study of these pagan faiths, but a "fellowship" with these faiths on the part of Christian people is about as impossible as is the pronunciation of some of the foreign names in the following news item which we are re-publishing from The Presbyterian. Can Christ have fellowship with Belial? Can God have fellowship with idols? Christ brooks no compromise with paganism. "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." There is no other proper attitude for Christians to take than that Christianity is the only true religion. Therefore, we are not surprised that our esteemed contemporary heads this bit of news with the interrogation: "Can Two Walk Together, Except They Be Agreed?"

For the first time in eleven hundred years, the head of an orthodox Hindu sect is leaving India. He is coming to Chicago this summer to address the World Fellowship of Faiths. His name is Jagadguru Shri Shankaracharya, and he is bringing twenty Hindu priests in their picturesque robes to assist in his daily obligatory religious ceremonies.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of New York City, national chairman of the World Fellowship of Faiths, has issued the first public report of the speakers who have accepted invitations to address the Chicago sessions, which will continue, during the Century of Progress, the great traditions of the World Parliament of Religions which was held at the time of Chicago's first World's Fair in 1893. His Highness Maharaja Gaekuar of Baroda. Sadhu Vaswami (liberal Hindu), Raja Jai Prithvi Bahadur Singh (Humanist), K. Natarajan (Bramo Samaj), Sir Zakir Husain (Moslem), Dr. Par-damen Singh Grewal (Sikh), Charmat Rai Jain (Jainism), Bra-machari Devapriya Walisinha (Buddhist), are also among the one hundred and two eminent speakers who have accepted the invitation to address the World Fellowship of Faiths. Senator Arthur Capper, Governor Gifford Pinchot, Prof. John Dewey, Bishop James E. Freeman, Edward Howard Griggs, John Haynes Holmes, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker, Justice Florence Allen, Ambassador Sao-ke Sze, Bishop Frederick B. Fisher, Roscoe Pound, and Rufus Jones are among the many distinguished men and women who are coming from various parts of America to take part in this gathering.

The movie interests are trying every conceivable way of allaying the rising public sentiment against the indecency and unwholesomeness that all too generally pervades their shows. Sometimes they try a pretention at conforming to popular ideals; sometimes they try directing attention away from some harmful features of major proportions by emphasizing some minor saving qualities; sometimes they try to disarm criticism by calling it puritanic and sneering at its standards. Recently we heard a defender of the movie trying to undermine the courage of an effective critic and talk him out of countenance by saying something like this: "To the pure all things are pure. He who is always seeing the impurity in society, the movies, the papers, magazines, etc., has impurity in their mind and heart. His complaints are a reflection on the character of his own imagination." By the same process of reasoning one might say that he who complains of impurity in bad water, in adulterated food, or polluted air, has the impurity in his own tastes, the poison in his own imagination, or the foulness in his own system. Yet some people are misled thereby. It is strange how half-truths can be so twisted and over-emphasized as to wholly conceal a false or untenable position.

STATES AUTHORIZE RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION ON SCHOOL TIME

Four states have recently passed legislation making it legal for the public school authorities to release children during the public school day for purposes of religious instruction. Minnesota has made it possible to excuse children for this purpose as many as three hours a week during the school year. In the great majority of states, while there is no specific legislation, successful weekday schools are being conducted on public school time.—The Evangelical Messenger.

GRAND AND GREAT-GRANDCHILDREN

In the press reports of John D. Rockefeller's ninety-fourth birthday celebration, prominence was given to one asset of the venerable multi-millionaire that some other nonegenarians can match as well as appreciate and esteem. We refer to the grandchildren and great-grandchildren who gathered about him for his anniversary dinner. There can be jealousies and even hatreds resting on the possession or lack of wealth, but none when we contemplate the ties of love that bind parents and children together. It is significant of the deeper values cherished by the common people and discerned by their spokesmen, the journalists, that the family affection of the Rockefellers rather than their enormous wealth receives public esteem. Domestic happiness is not bought, manufactured or pumped from the earth. It rests on respect, on love and on habitual bearing and forbearance. Next to the hopes of heaven it is the supreme human treasure. And it is not attained by the children or those who rate marriage as a sensual convenience.—The Lutheran.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

John

"Bird of God, with boundless flight,
Soaring far beyond the height
Of bard and prophet old;
Truth fulfilled, and truth to be,— Never purer mystery
Did a purer tongue unfold."

Adam of St. Victor.

"Above all do I like to read the Gospel of John. There is something truly wonderful in it: twilight and night; and athwart flashes the vivid lightning. A soft evening sky, and behind the sky, in bodily form, the large full moon! Something so sad, so sublime, so full of presage that one can never weary of it. Every time I read John, it seems as if I could see him before me reclining on the bosom of his Master at the last supper—as if his angel were standing by my side with a lamp in his hand, and, when I come to particular passages, would clasp me in his arms and whisper a word in my ear. There is a great deal I do not understand when I read; but I often feel as if John's meaning were floating before me at a distance, even when my eye lights on a dark place, I have, nevertheless, a presentiment of a grand and glorious sense that I shall some day understand. On this account I grasp eagerly at every new exposition of John's Gospel. But alas! the most of them only ruffle the evening clouds, and the bright moon behind them is left in peace."

With Claudius, the quiet and pensive German poet, and Adam of St. Victor, the writer joins hands. Why ruffle the clouds?

Introduction

The last shall be first, and the first shall be last. Of John's Gospel no truer words could be uttered. He has given us the valedictory of the New Testament. Without doubt he understood Jesus far better than did any of the other disciples or the writing Evangelists. Being more judicious, thoughtful, modest, humble, than his contemporaries, made him a peculiar favorite of the Lord. As a pupil he led the class.

The Fourth Gospel is the last Gospel. It is the First Gospel in point of height and depth, length and breadth. It possesses the finest teaching and choicest revelation of all the gospels combined. No wonder it has been referred to as "Christ's love-letter to the Church"; as "God's love-letter to the world"; as "the heart of Christ"; as "the unique, tender, genuine Gospel," or as a story "written by the hand of an angel."

It is the greatest and best loved book in the Bible and perhaps in the world. If we lost the Synoptic Gospels and the Epistles in their entirety, there would still be enough truth in this gospel to save a world, afflicted unto death, from the prisonhouse of hell. We should have a Divine Christ who is the "Bread," the "Light," the "Shepherd," the "Door," the "Way," the "Truth," the "Vine," and the "Life." No man needs more than that on his earthly journey to the Upper Sanctuary. "Wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

Authorship

Dr. Augustus H. Strong once asked his child how she knew the apostle John in the pictures. "Oh," she said, "I always know John because he has long hair and looks like a woman." Well, that is very childlike, but should we not also remember that James and John were "Sons of Thunder," redeemed and mellowed by the truth and grace of Christ? Let us not forget the boy John, neither the man, nor the octogenarian. Being sons of Zebedee and Salome, they no doubt had, as fisherman, good schooling in that trade and excellent instruction in the ways of Jewish education and life. If John was like his mother, whose name means "peaceful," or even like his father whose name connotes "gift of God," it was not until the adventuresome and stormy period of youth had passed. But Christ can still the "Sons of Thunder" as well as the roaring men.

After much painstaking personal investigation over recent years, the writer fully agrees with the appended statement of the moderate and scholarly Dr. Farrar:

"The Johannine literature of this century alone would fill a library; but the objections urged against the genuineness of the Gospel have been met point by point, and nothing can invalidate the mass of external and internal evidence in its favor from early, varied, and unanimous testimony, from the proof that in the second century it was not only widely known, but various readings had already risen in the text; from the style, the knowledge of Palestine, the depth of insight displayed, the many subtle indications that we are reading the words of an eye-witness; and from multitudes of conspiring probabilities derived from the most opportune quarters."

Dr. William Lyon Phelps's Comment

In his excellently written monograph "Human Nature and the Gospel," Dr. Phelps, recently retired English professor of an eastern institution of higher learning, comments interestingly:

"When I remember how scholars used to say that the Gospel of John was written by somebody toward the close of the second century, and when today these are first-rate scholars who believe it was written before the year 75, and in Palestine, and by some one who knew personally him whom it describes, I feel like cheering! It confirms me in what I have always maintained: never to give up a spiritual truth because of any alleged discovery of science. Wait, anyhow, until the scientific statement has been verified. Else one may love one's divine birthright and get not even a mess of pottage."

The Fourth Gospel

With John there is no beginning except that beginning which is associated with the Word. To him there are no A. D. or B. C.

distinctions. He recognizes Christ to be the dateless sovereign of heaven and earth. Spacial and temporal limitations never vex him: he sees beyond them continuously.

The last Gospel consists of incidents; it records the highest doctrinal teaching in the Bible; its key is discovered in 20:31; its background is Asia Minor and Palestine; it is unusual in viewpoint and strictly Christian; its theme is deity; its topic is life; it arranges itself into suitable and effective allegories; it is dramatic in character; conversational in form; systematic in outline; its outlook is theistic; its quality is spiritual; its style is colloquial; it is classified as philosophy and qualifies as wisdom; its time is eternal; its key-word is "believe"; it is the Gospel of the teacher, whose Christ is the Shepherd, and whose word is the Word; the eagle and skylark best symbolize the vision of the Christ and the writer; the portrait is that of God and the picture is always life-size. The quotations in number are 15 from the Old Testament, while the allusions are 24. The volume consists of 55 pages, 92 peculiarities, 8 coincidences, and 19,007 words in the Revised Version.

Conclusion

Tradition preserves for the church the picture of the aged John in terms of a highly refined and notably pious saint. As he lived, so he died, in peace, rounding the river bend of life with naught but a halo of glory surrounding his well beloved name.

"Lay me down

Once more upon my couch, and open wide
The eastern window. See! There comes a light
Like that which broke upon my soul at even,
When in the dreary Isle of Patmos, Gabriel came
And touched me on the shoulder. See! it grows
As when we mount toward the pearly gates.
I know the way, I trod it once before.
And Hark! it is the song the ransomed sung,
Of glory to the Lamb! How loud it sounds!
And that unwritten one! Methinks my soul
Can join it now. But who are they that crowd
The shining way? Say, joy! 'tis the Eleven!
With Peter first; how eagerly he looks!
How bright the smiles are beaming on James' face!
To gather round the Pascal feast.

"My place

Is next my Master—Oh! My Lord! My Lord!
How bright thou art, and yet the very same
I loved in Galilee! 'Tis worth the hundred years
To feel this bliss! So lift me up, dear Lord, •Unto thy bosom. There shall I abide."

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

By Rev. Milton Bennett Lambdin

II Babylon, the Golden

There is something august and majestic in the name of Babylon. "The Gate of God." From Babilui; bab, gate, and lil, god. Indulging, however, a racial trait to pun upon resemblance in words, the ancient Hebrews gave it the twist, "Confusion," from bab-bel, confusion. (See "Chaldean Genesis," by George Smith, pages 167-8).

And the startling fact is that when first we hear the name of Babylon, and from all the subsequent light that comes to us from modern discoveries, we see her standing in the very center of a civilization of conspicuous luster, with its high literary culture and governmental fabric, of the which we boastful moderns would have no need to be ashamed.

Simply to refer in passing to what was briefly said in the previous article on Nineveh, the prehistoric dwellers in the valley watered by the Tigris and the Euphrates were a remarkable people in their advanced type of civilization, with their libraries, arts, and sciences and belles-lettres, and hieroglyphic and cuneiform systems of writing, and so on. It was here that Babylon took its rise, at some unknown time, as an apt heir to the culture of these so called primitive peoples, that eventually vanished into racial nullibity. And Babylon, in its turn, impressed its language, its literary culture, and social refinement, not only upon the wide area of adjacent lands, but even upon Assyria, and Syria, and Palestine, and likewise, to an appreciable extent, upon Egypt also.

"It is evident," says George Smith, the eminent archaeologist, in his Assyrian discoveries, page 451, "that in every way the classical nations of antiquity borrowed far more from the valley of the Euphrates than of the Nile. And that Chaldea, rather than Egypt, is the home of even the civilization of Europe."

Classical history tells us that Callisthenes, the friend of Alexander, sent to Aristotle from Babylon a series of stellar observations reaching back 1,903 years before the taking of Babylon by Alexander, thus making their acquaintanceship with astronomy to reach back to a point 2,234 years B. C.—three hundred years before the days of Abraham.

As with the other nations of the earth, Babylon also experienced her national vicissitudes; once when overrun and conquered by the Assyrian king and campaigner, Sennacherib, who leveled the city to the ground and choked the Euphrates with its ruins. Afterwards it was rebuilt by his son and successor, Esarhaddon, who made Babylon the second, or twin city of the Assyrian Empire.

When the whirligig of time brought around its changes, and Nineveh faded away into the shadows of national annihilation,

Babylon glistened out into the radiant light of supremacy, 606 B. C. After a short reign by its king, Nabopolassar, Nebuchadnezzar came to the throne. This is the supreme, the scintillating name in Babylonian history. On the cuneiform records it is written, Nabu-Kudur-uzur, a prayer name, "O Nebu, defend the crown."

Nebuchadnezzar assumed the purple and grasped the scepter of imperial power with a burning ambition flaming in his heart, not simply to make his kingdom dominant among the other nations of the earth, but to make his beloved capital, Babylon, peerless over the whole galaxy of the world-wide cities of that day.

And he achieved his ideal, as in his long reign of something like forty-four years, he raised Babylon to a pinnacle of splendor that has never been eclipsed in all after centuries. Due to his genius in statesmanship, in war, and the constructive arts, Babylon became

Architecturally Renowned

One is prepared to believe that the glowing, pen pictured descriptions of its beauty and pre-eminence, are not due altogether to the artistry of oriental fanciful extravagance and imaginative exaggeration. As with Nineveh it lay four-square, reaching out fourteen miles in its orientation, surrounded by a wall of stupendous proportions, three hundred feet high, so wide at the top that several chariots could race abreast upon it, and pierced by one hundred massive gates of bronze. Through the center of the city flowed the Euphrates, flanked by its own river wall, while a tunnel ran beneath its bed. Interspersed throughout the city were great squares, public parks, and reservations.

As one of the practical features of his numerous military successes, Nebuchadnezzar subsidized the very pick of the artistic and artisan genius and skill of his captives of war in the beautification of his capital city, as the record in II Kings 24:16 is in point: "Nebuchadnezzar carried . . . away all the men of might, even seven thousand, and craftsmen, and smiths a thousand."

In the center of Babylon towered a gigantic temple dedicated to the heathen god, Bel, or Baal. It was a massive zikkurat in eight stages with a winding ascent running from the base to the summit and terminating in a shrine containing the golden image of his god, forty feet high. It is said that many of the public buildings were covered with plates of gold, which shone resplendent under the rays of an oriental sun, and thus served to make the city to look as it was called in Scripture, Isaiah 14:4, "The Golden City."

There was one nation that the king had failed to conquer, Media, but he struck a strategic truce with it by marrying its princess. To relieve the home-sickness of the fair queen, amid all the luxury of her gorgeous palace surroundings, for the high mountains and hills of her native land, the sympathetic king spoke the magic word, and lifting itself three hundred feet into the air, rose the famous "Hanging Gardens of Babylon," justly labeled one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. Constructed upon tiers, or arcades, one above the other, with the whole exposure brilliant and smiling in trees and shrubbery, and flowers from every clime. Brooks murmured through the lofty vales, and birds warbled their sweetest notes, in unison with the music of the water falls.

Babylon was also—

Commercially Great

It was an international mart of trade and distributing center for the varied products of the world. Ezekiel (17:4) calls the country "a land of traffic," and Babylon, "A city of merchants." No position could have been more favorable for the purpose. She stood upon a river that brought to her wharves the products of all the surrounding lands. An extensive system of navigable canals interlaced and connected the Euphrates and the Tigris, two great arteries of commerce, thus providing a wonderful system of irrigation, and making Babylon the granary of the Eastern world, as Egypt and the Nile were of the Western world.

In addition, a network of highroads, and causeways across the desert united Syria and Palestine and Egypt with Babylon. Fortified stations protected the merchant caravans from the wandering tribes of Arabia, walled cities here and there served as resting places, while wells at regular intervals furnished an abundant water supply during the hottest seasons. (Laynard's Nineveh and Babylon).

Her exports and imports were of the most diversified and comprehensive character, in wares that the up-to-date merchants and traders of our own day handle in their commercial enterprises. One of her prized products was the sindones, or flowing garments. You may recall, that it was "a goodly Babylonish garment," along with the "two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold," that proved the fatal undoing of Achan in the capture of Jericho. And it was considered quite the correct thing for the Egyptian queens and ladies of fashion, and the vamps and flappers of that far off day to array themselves in "the latest creations" of Babylon, the Sartorial Paris of the times. But far and beyond all this, Babylon had its notation as—

A Seat of Literary Culture

Here were great institutions of learning, and academic halls that could boast the most erudite savants, and linguists, and astronomers, and poets, et omne genus. And it meant something to sport a list of titles and to flare your scholarly name, from the all-round educational mills of that far famed city.

With a master mind Nebuchadnezzar conceived and planned all this prestige for Babylon, and with an indomitable will and energy he carried it out to a glorious realization. Like a Caesar in after days who could say, "I found Rome a city of mud huts, I have left it a city of marble," thus could Nebuchadnezzar justly boast, I found Babylon limping at the fag end of the grand pageant of renown, I have put her at the forefront."

But the higher the obelisk towers to the zenith, the greater its fall towards the nadir.

And in its onward strides in the sins of pride, and worldliness, and idolatry, and oppression, and cruelty, Babylon, the Golden, was plunging blindly on to the fated pit of its national doom, as we read the unheeded warning voices of the Hebrew prophets. The first, Isaiah, chapters 13 and 14, was 174 years before their fulfillment: "Thou shalt take up this proverb against . . . Babylon and say, How hath . . . the Golden City ceased. I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord."

Jeremiah, also, some half a century later, in two long chapters, 50 and 51 said, "Because of the wrath of the Lord it shall not be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation."

Its destruction was not immediate and sudden, as with Nineveh, but a long drawn out process of slow decadence, as the centuries passed away, like a decrepit old man tottering onward day by day to his grave.

Its very bricks were rifled from its massive walls, and carried off to go into the building of after cities that became famous, as Selucia and Ctesiphon. And the same process is carried on to this very day, as the natives dig into its enormous ruins.

Not an upstanding sign of the great wall that Herodotus said rose to such a prodigious height can now be seen, in drear fulfillment of the prediction by Jeremiah 51:38, "Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken." For miles and miles of extent the blanched and nitrous soil is strewn with fragments of glass and pottery and bricks. Vegetation has ceased to exist, the plain is a wilderness, the ancient canals are choked with debris, the stagnant waters forming vast marshes, and the whole face of the dismal landscape is parched by the scorching heat of an Eastern sun.

Yet, nevertheless, these sterile, sun-blasted, and sun-baked plains have a fascinating interest for us. For here on this spot stood "Babylon, the Golden," and where the haughty monarch in grandiloquent periods voiced the sense of his brilliant success: "Is not this great Babylon that I have built, for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?"

It was here that a trio of young heroes of the faith stood erect and loyal in allegiance to God, though threatened with the flames of a seven times overheated fiery furnace.

Here, too, was staged a sacrilegious banqueting orgy that came to a tragic halt, as awe-inspiring spectral fingers "wrote over against the candlestick, upon the plaster of the wall, the mystic words, "Mene, Mene, tekel upharsin."

And somewhere between where stands these shapeless mounds, Cyrus entered the doomed city in triumph. It was here, too, that Alexander, the so called Great, ended up his vainglorious and morally empty life in a drunken debauch.

Some of the more outstanding mound ruins have been identified with more or less certainty. There is a conspicuous one called by the Arabs "The Mujelib," or the overturned. A massive ruin, said to be 140 feet high and several hundred feet square, accurately oriental. Layard took it to be "The Kasr," or palace of Nebuchadnezzar.

Another is known as Birs Nimrod, the Tower of Nimrod, two hundred feet high, standing solitary in the midst of the plain with nothing to break the view. A solid mass of vitrified brick, it covers a square surface of 49,000 feet. It was said to have been destroyed by Xerxes in 490 B. C., and was but a heap of ruins in the time of Alexander, who attempted its restoration. But when ten thousand workmen failed to remove the rubbish within the two months of their effort, he abandoned the task in despair.

RUTH

(Lesson for August 6th)

Lesson Text: Ruth 1:6-10, 14-19a; Golden Text: I John 4:7

MONDAY

The Home in Moab. Ruth 1:1-10

The prospect of securing a more abundant supply of bread or its equivalent has been a prime factor in directing migration for many centuries. When Elimelech found it too hard to secure bread in Judah he decided to migrate to Moab, east of the Dead sea, where the much needed bread seemed to be more easily secured.

We do not know whether he gave any more thought to the status of religion in that country than many Brethren do when they decide to change the location of their place of residence without considering the church privileges they may be denied in their new home. However, the sons of Elimelech seemed to be fortunate in securing wives of a high type in this strange land, even if they were not members of a Hebrew family, especially was this true of the subject of this lesson, Ruth.

TUESDAY

Ruth's Wise Choice. Ruth 1:14-22

Upon the death of Elimelech and both his sons, Naomi, the impoverished widow, decided she would have a better opportunity to live should she return to her old country, where there seemed to be bread in abundance once again.

The widows of both her sons decided to go with her a part of the way at least, but when the time came to separate, and the farewell kiss had been given, the one daughter-in-law could not be prevailed upon to return to her own mother's household. We call this a wise choice. In this case it was, but we would not say it is always wise for a wife to accept the religion of her husband, because there are too many husbands whose god is not the God of the Hebrews and of the Christian.

WEDNESDAY

A Daughter's Devotion. Ruth 2:17-22

Real devotion is more clearly demonstrated by deeds than by words. Devotion without deeds is like faith without works, it is dead.

Ruth might have professed her devotion to her mother-in-law until the end of time, but had she not been willing to go out into the harvest field in the heat of the day to gain substance for their daily bread her profession would have amounted to naught. We are told that during the last two years of unemployment there have been more girls and women who have sacrificed more of convenience and personal desire to give aid to impoverished relatives than was ever before known. Ruth's was a wholesome example.

THURSDAY

Ruth and Boaz. Ruth 4:7-12

To our modern way of thinking the plan of Naomi and Ruth to secure the attention of Boaz, and to acquaint him with his possible responsibility toward them would seem strange indeed. But, in a very large sense "custom has always made law," and we are told this was entirely within the proprieties of that period of the world's development. Suffice it to say the attention of Boaz was secured, and he proved himself to be a man of high honor and respectability, and ready to do his duty according to the law of Moses. Thus was brought about this romantic wedding that played so important a part in the genealogy of our Lord.

FRIDAY

A Godly Woman. Acts 16:11-15

That it is possible for people to be godly without being Christian is fully demonstrated in the story of Lydia as it is related to us in the passage of Scripture for today. But it is well to add that such a situation can prevail only so long as the godly one, or the worshiper of God has not heard of his Son Jesus Christ.

Lydia is called a godly woman because she worshiped God, and her sincerity of purpose was clearly demonstrated by her accepting Jesus as Savior, and her baptism in his name as soon as she learned from the Apostle about his mission and his ministry in the world.

SATURDAY

A Faithful Mother. Exodus 2:1-10

We presume that to most of us who were reared in Christian homes, and who were nursed and cradled by Christian mothers, the idea of a mother being anything but faithful would seem strange indeed; but yet, we are forced to conclude there must be thousands of unfaithful mothers or there would not be so many more thousands of boys and girls who are, not brought up, but who, like Topsy, "just growed," and thus are a constant menace to the best interests of human society.

If more mothers showed the wisdom and good judgment that the mother of the little Hebrew babe, Moses, did, we are quite sure there would be much less sorrow and distress in the world than there is now.

SUNDAY

A Prayer of Trust. Psalm 41:1-8

Just how a prayer can be real and genuine without being a prayer of trust is more than my mind can grasp. Undoubtedly there must be some who only think they are praying.

In the fifth verse of this psalm the writer says "Offer the sacrifices of righteousness, and put your trust in Jehovah." This is somewhat different from the advice reported to have been given to the soldiers of Cromwell during the Reformation in England, when they were admonished to "trust in God, but keep your powder dry." The Psalmist knew better than that, so exclaimed "In peace will I both lay me down and sleep; For thou, Jehovah, alone makest me dwell in safety."

Report of June Conference at Yaloke

Yaloke, par Boali, par Bangui,
 Afrique Equatoriale Francaise,
 June 8, 1933.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Just a few brief hurried items concerning our June Conference at Yaloke, which was held from May 30 to June 6th, inclusive, May 29th being the day of arrival and June 7th the day of departure of most of our guests. Bright and early on Monday morning delegates were hastening busily about with their preparations for departure from Bassai and Bellevue.

Unfortunately Mrs. Jobson was suffering from fever which made it impossible for three of the delegates to attend the opening days of the Conference. (The hearts of all were rejoiced by the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Jobson and Miss Myers, who had remained to nurse her, in time for lunch on Thursday of Conference week).

Monday morning was fair but the afternoon was hindered by a heavy rain but both the Bellevue truck (with Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon, Kenneth and David, Miss Bickel and Miss Patterson), and Dr. Gribble's automobile (with Mr. and Mrs. Foster, Miss Byron, Mrs. Kennedy, and Miss Crawford) arrived before nightfall in spite of delay.

The two houses with their families aggregating five were now to accommodate fourteen guests. Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway put up cots in their bathroom, leaving their bedroom for Mr. and Mrs. Foster. Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon and two children were lodged in the Hathaway's spare room—and Mr. Hathaway's office was ready for the coming of Mr. and Mrs. Jobson.

At the house just across the court, Dr. Gribble was sharing her room with Miss Byron and Miss Patterson. Miss Tyson's room was ready to receive Mrs. Kennedy and Miss Crawford also; and Miss Emmert rejoiced in having Miss Bickel with her—a place being reserved for Miss Myers to arrive later as we have seen. We were all busy in aiding our guests to settle and this being accomplished, supper was served. The mayor of Bangui was also a guest at the Hathaway's table, and came over later to greet our guests also. It was ten o'clock before the welcome address, necessarily brief, was given, and the tired guests retired about eleven.

Only one social event took place during the Conference—a birthday party for Kenneth Sheldon who attained the somewhat mature age of six years on June 4th.

The party was held on June 3rd, June 4th being Sunday. All the missionaries were present and Kenneth was overjoyed with his gifts—especially with a pair of rabbits given him by Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway.

Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday were spent in prayer—three sessions daily with an additional service in the evening at which one of the missionaries preached. On Tuesday evening Mr. Foster presented the "Good Shepherd"; on Wednesday evening Mr. Sheldon gave a forceful sermon on prayer; on Thursday evening Mr.

Jobson preached on the Holy Spirit, on Friday evening by a strange coincidence, Dr. Gribble gave a message previously prepared on the same subject.

On Monday evening Mrs. Foster gave a message on "The Unique Lord Jesus."

Sunday afternoon Miss Myers' theme was "Sail On"—or "Let us continue to walk by faith." Sunday evening Mr. Jobson gave a message on the ten "I am's" in the Gospel of John. Tuesday evening the message was given by Mr. Hathaway, on "The Shortness of Time and the Increasing Darkness." Each of the prayer sessions were preceded by inspiring, though brief messages.

Many remarked that the blessing received in the prayer services at this Conference was unusual, and the Holy Spirit's presence marked.

Saturday was a busy day as after the morning service the various committees met. Executive, Evangelistic, Educational, Translation, Medical Committees kept the missionaries busy throughout the day and made welcome the relaxation of Kenneth's birthday party in the evening.

Sunday, June 4th was the 10th anniversary of Mr. Gribble's death. It was fitting to commemorate it thus in united conference and prayer.

Monday the business of the Conference was cared for, and Tuesday, with the exception of one or two business items, was again devoted to prayer and devotional services except the afternoon which was left free for preparations for departure on Wednesday.

The native Conference was held simultaneously with the missionary Conference.

At seven each morning one of the missionaries was present with the native Christians. The other services were conducted by evangelists from either Bassai, Bellevue or Yaloke.

The evening services were called "Fire-side Preaching Services," because there being no lighting facilities in the Yaloke church, the services were held outside by village camp-fires. At the close of the Conference the natives spontaneously presented a list of requests to the missionaries desiring mutual prayer. The character of requests showed how deeply the Holy Spirit had been working in their midst.

The going of Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Miss Bickel on furlough at this time necessitated replacements. Mr. and Mrs. Foster will replace Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway at Yaloke—Miss Tyson will replace Miss Bickel at Bellevue—and Miss Patterson will rejoin the Yaloke staff.

On Monday, June 12th the furlough party leave Yaloke, visiting Bellevue and Bassai enroute.

On Monday, June 19th. Mr. Sheldon will come to Yaloke with Miss Patterson from Bellevue, and Mr. and Mrs. Foster from Bassai. He will then return to Bellevue with Miss Tyson.

And so the Conference has come and gone, bringing many changes, but leaving us we trust nearer to our Master.

We ask your prayers for God's continued blessing upon us as we face this new time of change and of course of stress, with numbers depleted, that God's plan may be fulfilled as we continue (in Miss Myers' phrase) to "Sail On."

We are praying that God will richly bless you also as Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway and Miss Bickel shall travel in your midst, and that the needs of the work may become more real to each one of us.

And so we close with this simple word. Let us commit to him our every plan that the name of our Lord Jesus may be glorified in the advance of the Oubangui-Chari Mission during these last days before our Lord shall come.

Sincerely,
 FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

The Great Heart of New Guinea

A quarter of a century ago the life of James Chalmers was snuffed out in the country to which he had given the best that was in him.

He was born in Ardrishaig, Argyllshire, Scotland, August 4, 1841. Religious influences early surrounded him. The schoolmaster held services in the school on Sunday, the only service held in the place. The first money that Chalmers earned was given him by his father for repeating the Twenty-third Psalm. At eleven years of age he joined the United Presbyterian Sunday school at Glenarary.

His father wanted him to be a civil engineer, but he was too poor to help him. When about fifteen he entered a law office, remaining three years. These were reckless years, although he still attended Sunday school occasionally. The decision of his life came when he was fifteen. A minister read a letter from a missionary in Fiji. At the close of the reading he said, "I wonder if there is a boy here this afternoon who will yet become a missionary, and by and by bring the gospel to the cannibals?" The response of his heart was, "Yes, God helping me, I will."

During evangelistic services in 1859 he was converted, and he remembered the vow that he had made to go to the heathen. Being accepted by the London Missionary Society, he prepared for the mission field. In 1865 he married and set sail, and in 1867 landed on the island of Rarotonga, the largest of the Hervey Group in the South Seas, where he remained for ten years, educating the young, warring against the drink traffic, and preaching the gospel to the savages.

Leaving Rarotonga, he moved to New Guinea to live among the cannibals at Suau. There he selected a spot for a home and built a house. One afternoon he went to the beach. Hearing a noise, he discovered that his house was surrounded by an armed, ugly looking mob of painted savages. He rushed to the house and demanded of one evil-looking fellow what he wanted. He said that he wanted tomahawks, knives, and so forth. He threatened to kill Chalmers and the teachers if these things were not forthcoming, but the savages were persuaded to retire. At other times also Chalmers was on the brink of death.

Chalmers became the Livingstone of New Guinea, exploring and looking out for suitable districts in which to station native teachers. In 1881 he paid his first visit to the people of Montumotu, one of the earliest and one of the most famous peace-making errands. "Our boat's crew were considered fools, rushing into the arms of death," he said. Yet with such a leader they went. He wielded a strange power over savages who had never conversed with him before. He was the pathfinder through the New Guinea wilderness, opening innumerable doorways into savage districts through which the white man might go.

God blessed the work to which he was so faithful; many offered themselves for baptism. The great tragedy occurred in 1901, when he and a fellow missionary were enticed inside a house in Dopima on pretense of being given something to eat. Both were knocked on the head from behind with stone clubs. This was the signal for the massacre. Chalmers was stabbed with a dagger and then beheaded. The bodies were eaten the same day.

But this is not the end of the story. James Chalmers has inspired in others a burning enthusiasm for the salvation of savage men, and today the gospel is being preached to them.—Forward.

"OWE NO MAN ANYTHING"

(A Story for Adults in a Time of Depression)

After Henry's Illness, Old Bills Had to Wait but Cash Was Paid for Everything from Then on—And a Tithe Went Regularly to the Lord

By Esther E. Reeks

Marion Weston sat staring into space. What were they to do? For four months Henry Weston had been ill, their income had stopped and their expenses had increased. Now that he was able to be about a little the young wife had hoped that he might soon be earning again. But today the doctor had told her that he could not go back to work for six months at least. Would their credit hold out that long? And if it did, how would they ever be able to pay what they would then be owing?

Henry had always been an easy-going soul who had never taken debt seriously and had always been in the habit of spending his salary before it was earned. Marion had wished to do differently, but her determination had never been strong enough to turn the scale of their spending; and now that a time of need had come they had nothing with which to meet it. This morning, she had read in her Bible Paul's injunction to "Owe no man anything but love." She wished that they might follow it, yet how could they under the present circumstances?

If there was a way out, she knew she would have to be the one to find it. . . for her husband was still too ill to do any serious thinking. "See that he has plenty of fresh air, the right sort of food, cheerful surroundings, and no worry," the doctor had said. "In time, he will be himself again, but it will take time."

How was she to give him all these things and not go in debt? She might get a position of some sort where she could earn the living. But she realized that she had no business training and that all her talents were domestic ones. Besides, how cheerful would the surroundings be for Henry if he were left alone all day?

The clang of the door bell interrupted her reverie.

Harriet Bonnell, a well-to-do neighbor and friend, could hardly wait to be seated before imparting the bit of news she had to tell. Her sister was sailing the next week for a winter in Hawaii and wanted Harriet to accompany her.

"You will go, of course?" ventured Marion, thinking what a delightful time the other would have while she had nothing to look forward to.

"The trouble is my rents," was the reply. "I have always looked after them myself; and this fall one of the houses must be re-decorated."

"An agent would see to all that for you. Have you one in mind?" questioned Marion, a sudden inspiration filling her with eagerness.

"No, I haven't."

"Then why not let Henry and me do it? Henry has had some experience with real estate, and I could help him until he is stronger. I would love to superintend the re-decorating, too, if you think I could do it to please you."

"Would you?" Harriet spoke delightedly. "Of course you could do it to please me. You are so artistic."

Before she left that afternoon, her busi-

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle a Great Correspondent

LA VERNE CHURCH, CALIFORNIA

With an enthusiastic, unanimous vote at the quarterly business meeting of the La Verne church, Brother Lynn was again chosen pastor for the coming year—his sixth year at this place. The pastor was given a six weeks' vacation, hoping that Sister Lynn's health may be improved thereby.

Reports indicate a steady growth and the moving forward of all departments of the church. Young people here are catching the spirit and surrendering themselves for full-time service for their Master. One young man has been appointed to the African Mission field; another has been studying in Ashland College for definite service; others are attending Bible Institute in order to be fully prepared to tell others the "good news"; and still others are faithfully serving the Lord right in their home church by teaching, singing and testifying. We thank God for faithful preaching of the Word, giving conviction and power to push on to greater work.

During the quarter, two have been received into the church. For the conference year, twenty have been received by baptism and seven by letter.

Prayer meetings in La Verne are well attended and spiritually uplifting.

The Sunday School Superintendent reports that the Teachers' Training class, organized recently, is already producing good results, in that substitute teachers may be had from this group. A Sunday school picnic is being planned for some time in August. The picnics have always furnished a good time of fellowship together, and are therefore times looked forward to by all.

"Plans for the Future", as outlined by Brother Lynn, are as follows:

1. Faithful preaching of the Word.
2. Holy Spirit scriptural revival.
3. Every wage earner a tither.
4. Every member with a passion for lost souls.
5. Family worship in every home.
6. Revival in study.
7. A deeper interest in, and a more intelligent and generous support of all Brethren interests.

Purpose—"That in all things he might have the preeminence."

With such worth-while goals to strive toward, ought not the church at La Verne to press forward, doing a greater piece of work for Christ?

MRS. VERA MINOR Correspondent,
114 East Carlton St., Ontario, California.

THE FAIR HAVEN BRETHERN CHURCH

After having been silent for almost a year, we feel that it might be well to give an account of ourselves. The last time we wrote to the Evangelist was after our great revival last August. Dr. Bauman was with us for a period of two weeks and the Lord greatly blessed our work through him. Since then we have been attempting to continue sowing the seed and building up the work of the Lord in this community. He has blessed us. He has vindicated his name and his Word, and today the Fair Haven church is richer in spiritual fervor than at any time during the present pastor's period of service.

Last Easter we were host to the California Quartette, who gave us a week of splendid Gospel messages and Gospel songs. They did much toward preparing the community and church for our summer revival which will begin July 30. We have been preparing the field for this campaign through the summer months, through prayer and Bible study, and visitation. Our prayer meetings for the summer months has been an inspiration to the pastor and laity. We have been studying The Revelation. Surely the Lord has fulfilled his promise found in The Revelation 1:3 when he said "Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keeps those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand." We claim that blessing for ourselves.

Sunday, August 6, we will celebrate in a fitting way the fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of our church. We will have the regular morning service, remain at the church for a picnic dinner, and then in the afternoon will present the program prepared for the occasion. We invite all former members and friends back for this joyous occasion. If the Lord tarry in his coming we trust he will give us greater success, greater blessing, and a greater harvest of souls in the next fifty years than in the last fifty.

ness affairs were in the hands of Marion and her husband. This would mean a commission of $20 a month with something extra for the special work which the former was to superintend, ten dollars of which, Mrs. Bonnell insisted on paying in advance. For the moment, this seemed like a fortune to Marion. How far towards keeping them out of debt, she wondered, could twenty dollars a month be made to go? They owned the home, which she had inherited from her father, and they could get along without new clothes for the coming winter. The money ought at least to provide them food—perhaps it could be made to do even more. Marion determined that there would be no more haphazard spending for her. She would budget the tiny income carefully and "Owe no man anything" should be her motto. A tenth should go to the work of the Lord—she would be honest with him as well as with man; then, with careful planning, she might be able to make twelve dollars a month cover the grocery bill, which would leave six for incidentals.

Henry's tired eyes widened with surprise when she told him of her plan. He doubted the possibility of making it work, but was willing she should try. Marion, watching him anxiously, thought she could see a slight gleam of new hope and courage brighten his countenance. She knew that of late, he, too, had been worrying about the future.

Early the next morning, she went to her grocer and asked for their bill, informing him that while she could not pay up at present, she would as soon as possible and that hereafter she was buying for cash.

"Have you come into a fortune?" he questioned, looking at her quizzically. He had known her since childhood.

"Not a very big one," she answered smiling, "but I've found a new text in the Bible which says, 'Owe no man anything,' and I'm starting out on faith to try to live up to it."

"When you set your mind on anything with the Word of God back of you, I have faith enough in you and in the Giver of that Word to believe you will succeed," he returned encouragingly.

"Thank you," she flashed back at him. "But hereafter don't expect to get rich off of the benefits of my trade. Every penny I spend will have to do its full duty in getting actual value; and I don't know how long you may have to wait for the payment of the old bill."

"Don't worry about that," he reassured her. "I'm not suffering now and I don't doubt you'll have the money for me before I'm ready for the poorhouse."

In the days that followed, the planning of menus that would combine the proper food elements, variety, and attractiveness with little cost had all the fascination of a game to the young wife. She was astonished to discover how far brains could be made to go in place of money in securing these things.

But cold weather was fast approaching and she knew that she soon must find some way of paying for fuel or fail to live up to her new rule. The house was large, much larger than their needs, and to warm it all was costly; yet she hated the thought of cold, shut-up rooms. It was while she was considering this that she had a second inspiration. Why not rent part of it?

In the neighborhood in which they lived, the renting of a part of one's dwelling was a thing almost unheard of. Nevertheless, with Henry's consent, she determined to make the venture. The upstairs could be made into a comfortable apartment for themselves, while the downstairs would no doubt be the easier to rent. At once, she set about putting things in shape, meeting the expense of the few necessary changes by the sale of some odds bits of furniture that had long been stored in the attic.

When all was in readiness, an advertisement was inserted in the "For Rent" column of the leading newspaper and answers were eagerly awaited. What if no one should respond? Marion thought a little fearfully.

But someone did respond. The following morning there was a caller. She was not a prepossessing person, and at once the young mistress of the place recalled what the neighbors had said about disagreeable people in one's own house. But when the price—which Marion suddenly decided to double—was named, the possible tenant refused to consider it.

The next day a second enquirer came. A pleasant woman whom the owner tried to tempt with a much lower rent, but who, for some reason, was not suited.

Then followed several days without response, and Marion's faith began to waver, for already that small ad had made something of a hole in her tiny reserve. But at last just the right people came and took the place, agreeing to pay $25 a month and to run the furnace.

"Now what is my little financier going to do with all her newly acquired wealth?" teased Henry.

"Budget it, of course," was the prompt rejoinder. "First of all, a tithe goes to the Lord. Then a fifth shall be used to start an emergency fund, and the remainder we'll divide into small payments among our creditors. Won't it be grand to be actually paying something, be it ever so little, on those old debts?"

"I wonder what you'll be thinking of next," queried the husband.

"I've already thought of it," laughed Marion. "You know the pretty little hand-painted gifts I've always made for my friends at Christmas. Well, I'm going to take orders for that sort of thing, now that the holiday season will soon be here. And when that is over, I can help some of my acquaintances with their sewing. Mrs. Hamilton has often said she wished I'd teach her how to make over things to look like new, as I often do; and I know there must be others who would like that sort of help, too."

"You make me green with envy of your ability to be earning," rejoined her spouse. "I shall have to hurry and gain strength so as not to be outdone by you any longer than I can help."

And he did hurry, for spring had not yet fully arrived when he was able once more to take his old position. A few months later, an opportunity offered to exchange the old home for a small modern bungalow, with money enough in addition to wipe out the remaining debts and leave $200 in cash.

"That would make a first payment on a new car," suggested Henry.

For a moment, Marion wavered. Then she remembered the motto. "No," she said. "we'll still 'owe no man anything.' But I'll tell you what let's do. Let's put the money in a savings account and add to it as fast as we can until we have enough to pay cash for that car."

"What you say goes," smiled her husband, taking her in his arms. "After the way you've pulled this family out of the old slough of debt, I take off my hat to you as a financier."

"That was only because God showed me his will and I resolved to do my best to live in accord with it," she returned happily.—The Presbyterian Advance.

SOME WHO STILL STAND FOR PROHIBITION

The daily newspapers would give one the impression that every citizen of prominence has gone wet. The following statements by men of light and leading indicate that there are strong minds still unchanged on this great question.

Dr. Thomas Nixon Carver, Professor of Political Economy, Harvard University

We are fighting a business which makes money every time a non-drinker is made into a drinker and a moderate drinker into a hard drinker. So long as powerful financial interests are in a position thus to make money by extending the drink habit, they will use every resource at their command to accomplish that purpose. They will employ the most skillful salesmen and advertisers, they will adopt every lure and every device known to modern psychology to popularize drink and increase drinking. They will organize a campaign of education for intemperance.

They who are in favor of that business will, of course, vote wet. They who are opposed to that business should think twice before voting to license it to start its campaign of education for intemperance.

Dr. Joy Elmer Morgan, Editor of the Journal of the National Education Association

The repeal of the eighteenth amendment would prolong the economic and financial collapse of America. It would divert into channels of dissipation and frivolity the money which should be spent to maintain homes, schools, parks, churches, and legitimate industries. More money would be spent for liquor than schools. Great sums would be spent through advertising to promote the use of whiskey, champagne, wines, and gin. This huge advertising budget would serve as a corrupting influence in every phase of American life. The work of the honest parent, the sincere teacher, and the devoted preacher would be hindered.

Jane Addams, Founder and Director of Hull House, Chicago

In spite of the activities of the bootleggers, the Hull-House neighborhood, which I imagine is typical of many others, has been enormously improved since the period of prohibition. It would be nothing short of a calamity if the amendment is repealed and we are thrown back into the wretched conditions which formerly prevailed.

Dr. Irving Fisher, Professor of Political Economy, Yale University

Repeal of the eighteenth amendment, if it is accomplished, will have been due to two principal causes: (1) the wet propaganda, which has greatly exaggerated the failures of prohibition and minimized its successes; (2) the depression.

During a depression "whatever is is wrong." That is, the public is ready to change anything on the chance that it may help us out of the depression. Countries having free trade have introduced tariffs; countries having tariffs are talking of putting them down. Countries having prohibition have been giving it up; countries where liquor flows freely are talking of halting the traffic.

It is a time not to be swept off one's feet by these unreasoning spasms of public opinion, based on discontent and a frantic, desperate desire to "do something."

The idea of letting people drink in order to tax them is more fallacious than lifting oneself by one's bootstraps. Every nickel spent for beer is a nickel taken from milk or other legitimate business, and reduces the productivity of the drinker by more than five cents' worth. There must be a net reduction in the net income, the source of all taxation, directly or indirectly. From the economic point of view, repeal will not help but retard recovery from the depression.

What is most needed is a spread of the facts. Prohibition has reduced drinking by 80 per cent or 90 per cent. It has vastly helped the poor and made for prosperity. To give it up will cost us dearly. If the public cannot be made to see this before it is too late, the honest wets will soon afterward find cause for regretting their ill-considered step.

Sergeant Alvin C. York, The Outstanding Hero of the World War

It is truly to be deplored that there are those Americans who find no more intelligent reason to offer for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment than that it should increase the revenue of the U. S. A., patently ignoring recognition of the incalculable harm, misery, and the economic ruin and havoc it will release in countless homes, but more particularly in the lives of the boys and girls of our great country.

That the brewers and alcoholics welcome repeal is not in the least hard to understand; but that those controlling the destiny of our people should be sponsoring a thing as manifestly evil as alcohol, historically a wrecker of homes and of happiness, and breeder of violences too numerous to catalogue, is indeed incomprehensible, if not woefully tragic.

Louis J. Taber, Master of the National Grange

The eighteenth amendment has been invaluable to agriculture because of the increased consumption of farm products. We have time for but a single example. In 1917 our average consumption of milk was 754.8 pounds. Ten years later the per capita consumption was 967.3 pounds, indicating that milk was taking the place of beer throughout the land and that children were enjoying the health and life-giving materials with which the dairy cow—the foster-mother of mankind—blesses society. To produce the increased milk consumed would require more grain than was used by all the brewers and all the distillers before prohibition.

Agriculture has suffered serious depression, but prohibition has not been the cause. This depression would have been more grievous had wet conditions prevailed.

Our greatest gains are social and moral. The health of the individual has improved; the number of children graduating from the eighth grade has increased; high-school graduates have multiplied; and college graduates are increasing. The general level of all that measures rich and satisfying life has moved forward.

As master of the National Grange, speaking for its million members, located in farm homesteads from the pine trees of Maine to the orange groves of California, from the lakes of Minnesota to the wheat fields of Oklahoma, I say without hesitation or qualification that the Grange stands unflinchingly upon its long-established policy for sobriety and prohibition. To us the eighteenth amendment is a part of the Constitution. We believe in its value. We are ready to defend it against those who would seek to destroy its civic, moral, spiritual, patriotic, and economic benefits.

Let us not forget the picture of the open saloon! Let us not forget blue Mondays in the home and in the factory! Let us not forget a staggering drink bill! And then let us remember that the evils of the saloon, were it to return, would be multiplied in accordance with the speed, the expansion, the development that has taken place.

TEA GARDEN BESTS BEER GARDEN

drove into town," Bill Towers interrupted.

"Well, the young people of First Church plan to open up a tea and coffee garden as near to it as possible and show the people of Merleville which is the better place for their sons and daughters to frequent."

"A fine idea, but who is backing your enterprise?"

"The Merleville National his given us a loan and Mr. Smith, Alice Smith's father, owns the next building to the beer garden. She had me invited to the house for supper tonight. I think he will let us have that large empty store of his."

"Well, I wish you luck and let me know if I can help," said Bill Towers as they parted.

That night, at the supper table, Dick explained the idea to Mr. Smith, who not only agreed, but let them have two months' rent free.

A few days later the young people had a business meeting and plans were made to open their "garden" the following week. This meant hard work for all of them but no one complained, for they were proud of their town and wanted to keep it "a clean place to live in."

The Tea and Coffee Garden opened to the public at last and hundreds of people came in the first day. It was a success from the very beginning and not only paid its way, but brought in a profit which was used to help the unemployed of the town.

Needless to say, Merleville defeated repeal at the election by 120 votes. "This place of yours is the center of the town now," said Mr. Smith one day as he came in to look the "garden" over. "What does that sign say over the door?"

"That's our motto," and Dick read aloud, —IF GOD IS FOR US, WHO IS AGAINST US?—Romans 8:31.

The Influence of the Arts College in the Training of Ministers

nary work.

The purpose of this article, as before stated, is to set forth the importance of the arts college at Ashland in the training of Brethren ministers. I could name here on the arts college faculty men whose influence on the prospective minister dare not be overlooked nor can it be underestimated, men who are devout, scholarly, Christian in their every relation thoroughly imbued with the denominational spirit and loyal to denominational interests, men who are worthy ideals for any ministerial student to admire. I count it a distinct advantage and privilege for our pre-seminary men to come under the influence of such men!

Moreover, it can not be otherwise than, that as the student is coming on up through the arts college, he will have great respect for the learning and upright character of his arts teachers. In fact, it is these teachers who have the first chance at him after he has left the high school with its naive philosophies and its juvenile reasoning and the learning and culture of the college teacher are bound to be thrown into sharp relief against this earlier background. To be reflective for a moment, my Freshman teachers have had an influence above all other things,—they were so different from those I formerly had.

I am writing this article both as a matter of fact and also to remind the brotherhood what a large part the arts college has in the preparation of the denominational minister, so that when you think of the training of our ministers here, you will think of both the seminary and the college. This is certainly one reason why the Brethren church does and should sustain a college of liberal arts, for it ministers not only to the layman, but very effectively to the education, preparation, and consecration of the minister. In fact, I doubt very much whether an educated Brethren ministry could be maintained apart from our own denominational arts college,—that is how important I regard the arts college to be.

Buying and Selling

The things which are revealed concerning economic conditions of the future are now beginning to be brought to our attention on many sides. In Revelation 13:16 we read of this coming world dictator that "He causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand and in their foreheads and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark of the name of the beast, or the number of his name."

Today's paper tells of a plan for our country by which "a colorful seal" may be placed on manufactured products which conform to law. There is also talk that he who makes the least of sales of food products must have a license. The newspapers carried the news some time ago that now in some parts of Russia, those who would get bread must have the ticket, and that, with the proper seal. Seals, tickets, permits and licenses under government control are becoming more and more prevalent. Such government control may for the present bring relief and appear a great help in correcting economic conditions, but it is a plain indication that the world is rapidly moving toward the place of central control. Of this the coming world dictator will surely take advantage.

We rejoice in the day when, "OUT OF ZION SHALL GO FORTH THE LAW AND THE WORD OF THE LORD FROM JERUSALEM" (Isa. 2:3).

"Even so, come, Lord Jesus" (Rev. 22:20).

OUR LITTLE READERS

THE STRANGE BEDFELLOW

In the night Dana had a bad dream. He dreamed that he was sleeping with an iceberg and that he shivered and shook as his feet touched the cold wet ice. He did not wake but only snuggled down closer under the warm bed-clothes and tried to sneak away from the iceberg, but it seemed to keep coming closer and closer. Then he fell sound asleep again and did not wake until the sun shone in his window bright and clear.

"Why—What—Who are you?" he said as he saw a bundle of gray clothes with a dark head sticking out of the bundle. "How did you get here?"

"I don't know," said a little voice from the bundle. "Who are you?"

"I'm Dana Blake, and I went to bed alone last night. In the night I had a bad dream and thought an iceberg was sleeping with me."

"I'm Richard Limes and I live in the big house down the street—the home where boys and girls live who have no fathers and mothers," said the stranger. "I don't know how I came to be here."

"I'm going to get up and dress and ask Mamma all about it," said Dana climbing out of bed.

"I'd get up too, but I don't see my clothes," said Richard.

"Come on! You can have some of mine. I'll put on my old shoes and you can have my new ones."

So they ran down stairs and found Mrs. Blake just coming in the door looking tired and sad. "O children, the big home for orphan children was damaged by fire last night, and we've all been working hard so that no one would be chilled and fall ill. Papa brought this little boy home all cold with his feet wet from pattering in the water and tucked him in with you, Dana. The other orphans are scattered all around the neighborhood. Nobody was injured, but it will be a long time before the big building is ready to move into again," she said.

"I don't care how long it is," said Dana. "I have a boy to play with now. Mamma, do we have to eat breakfast? I want to show him all my playthings and Spot and the rabbits and everything."

"I don't care either," said Richard. "I like this house and this suit and everything. I'd like to live here always."

But when daylight came and the workers examined the big house looking sullen and dark from the smoke, it was found that people had been more frightened in the night than necessary. There was a great deal of cleaning to be done and new bedding and furniture bought, but with painting and some repairs the Home would be ready in six weeks at the most. Everybody helped and before long it began to look as if the fire had been rather a good thing, as the old things could be thrown away and new paint and repairs helped the building greatly.

"Mamma, you're not going to let Richard leave me, are you?" said Dana one day when Richard had gone over to the home in company with some of the other children to see the new schoolroom. "He doesn't want to go, and I don't want him to. It's the nicest thing in the world to have a bedfellow and we have such good times in the play room. Mrs. Smith has four boys and it seems to me we might have two."

Dana saw something bright in his mother's eyes, and presently a little wet spot was on his cheek as she held him close to her. "Are you sure you can share everything with Richard—take him for your very own brother?" she asked in a voice that trembled a little.

"Why, Mamma, I've done that already," said the little boy. "I'll give him more than half if you'll let him stay."

A little later Richard came soberly up the front walk. "What do you think Miss Helen told us?" he said. "There are six boys and girls who will not come back to the Home at all. They are going to stay in the very homes where folks carried them the night of the fire."

"Not six, but seven," said Dana unable to keep still any longer. "O Richard, you're going to be my bedfellow for always. I's so glad."—Hilda Richmond, in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

A TALK WITH ST. PETER

O Peter, wherefore didst thou doubt?
Indeed, the scud flew fast about,
But he was there whose walking foot
Could make the wandering hills take root;
And he had said, Come down to me,
Else had thy foot not touched the sea.
Christ did not call thee to thy grave—
Was it the boat that made thee brave?

Easy for thee who wast not there,
To think thou more than I couldst dare!
It hardly fits thee, though, to mock,
Scared as thou wast at railway shock!
Who saidst this morn, "Wife, we must go;
The plague will soon be here, I know!"
Who, when thy child slept—not to death—
Saidst, "Life is now not worth a breath!"

Too true, great fisherman! I stand
Rebuked of waves seen from the land!
Even the lashing of the spray,
The buzzing fears of any day,
Rouse anxious doubt lest I should find
God neither in the spray nor wind;
But now and then, as once to thee,
The Master turns and looks at me.

And now to him I turn: My Lord,
Help me to fear nor fire nor sword;
Let not the cross itself appall—
Know I not thee, the Lord of all!
Let reeling brain nor fainting heart
Wipe out the sureness that thou art!
Oh, deeper thou than doubt can go,
May my poor hope cry out, "I know!"

Then when it pleases thee to say,
'Come to my side'—some stormy way,
My feet, atoning to thy will Shall, heaved and tossed, walked toward thee still;
No leaden heart shall sink me where Prudence is crowned with cold despair;
But I shall reach and clasp thy hand,
And on the sea forget the land."

CHRIST AND ST. PETER

Into God's Deep

By C. A. Stewart

(Vice Moderator's Sermon at the Dayton, Ohio Conference, June 20, 1933).

Luke 5:4-10—Launch out into the deep and let down your nets. Henceforth thou shalt catch men.

Jesus was calling his disciples and at the same time was teaching them that they were to carry on his work. As he came nearer to the cross he made it clearer to them that they were to do the work of evangelizing the world after he was gone. When they marvelled at the things that he did he said, "Greater works than these shall ye do." It has always been God's plan for us men to do his work. He has no other way today than to use us. He has no other hands but ours, no other feet but our feet, no other means of spreading the Gospel than through his children. "Henceforth ye shall catch men." Before Jesus cried from the cross, "It is finished," he prayed that wonderful prayer, just before he went to the Garden of Gethsemane, saying, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." There are many passages of Scripture that lay the burden of responsibility upon believers, among which are the following: "Occupy till I come"; "I have chosen you and ordained you that ye should go and bring forth fruit"; "I will make you fishers of men." These and many more passages of Scripture makes it plain that we are called to do service for God, and that he is depending upon us.

An Important Work

This work we are called upon to do is an important work which calls for courage and wisdom. It is important because it dies not with the setting of the sun or with the last fleeting breath, but reaches beyond the confines of time out into the eternities. It is a work that has to deal with the soul of man, which Jesus said was worth more than the whole world. It is a work for which God sacrificed his own Son, and for which Jesus the Son willingly gave himself. It is the work for which Jesus who was rich became poor that we might be made rich. It is so important that we will be judged for rewards according to the way we have taken care of it when we meet the Lord Jesus Christ in the air. It involves our destiny and the destiny of others. The work is important because the founder of it was the most important individual that ever was upon the earth. He was not only a man but God in the flesh and walked among men. He was not only a great teacher, but the source of all wisdom. He was not only righteous, but the fountain of all righteousness. He was not only a king but the King of Kings and Lord of Lords. This work whereunto we are called is the work of God through Jesus Christ. It is the stabilizing power and the ballast for the world. The cross of Christ is an evidence of the importance of the work. Important as it is, it cannot go forward and progress as it should until we, as a church, move out of the shallows of the world and out into God's deep.

Unlimited Power

1. There is unlimited power for the church by moving out into God's deep. Many times the work seems to lag and we become wearry, and we have reached the limits, and in despair like Elijah we cry "It is enough". I wonder if all of our dependance is not upon self and man-made methods. Sometimes it is good for us to come to the end of self where we are made to raise our hands and cry in despair and feel that thrill as the joy of God floods our soul when Jesus reaches down and takes hold of our outstretched hand. We then have something of the feeling that must have thrilled the heart of Peter when Jesus took him by the hand as he began to sink among the waves. Methods are good and we must make use of them, but we must be sure that those methods are in accordance with the will of God. We have no doubt that these fishermen were well versed in all the known methods of fishing in those days, but without results. They had fished all night and were now washing their nets preparing to lay them aside for a while. They were discouraged for they had taken no fish with all their hard labor. They had come to the limit of self. Jesus comes upon the scene and commands them to "launch out into the deep and let down their nets". What these men needed was divine guidance. They evidently had not been fishing in the right place or the right way. The Lord wants us to do all we can do, but he wants us to feel our dependence upon him. He wants us to work in cooperation with him. We are limited in wisdom and power and are fighting against tremendous odds over which no man or set of men can possibly be victorious. It is not a carnal warfare, "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places" (Eph. 6:12). Man has fought against these mighty powers and has been the loser every time. The head of those powers which is Satan has never met his equal among men, but in Jesus Christ he met his Master and was defeated.

Jesus Christ, the Captain of our salvation, is the head of the church, and if we are to be "Fishers of Men", we must listen for his orders, and obey them. There is a time to clash swords with the enemy of the soul, and a time to listen for orders. These men would have been defeated and gone forth with a broken spirit had not Jesus said to them, "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets." The church has unlimited powers, as long as it remembers the purpose of its organization. It is more than an organization of respectability, sauntering in and out of the Lord's house on the Lord's day. It is a soul saving institution that is doing business for the Lord of Glory. With Christ as its head, who has all power she cannot fail as long as she is united to the vine. The branch cannot bear fruit of itself. Jesus said "I am the vine, ye are the branches". We are to bear much fruit which is the result of the life received from the vine. But if the arteries are severed or clogged with foreign matter the vine will die and there will be no fruit. The secret of the power of the church is living in harmony with the will, of God through Christ. Jesus knew where the fish were and how they were to be caught, and he gave the orders and the result was victory.

Launch Out in Faith

2. One way that it is possible to launch out into God's deep is by faith. Do we look forward and see the victory won, and with an unflinching tread, move on believing God can and will do great things through the church, or do we compare our strength with the great task which is before us and see nothing but defeat, darkness and despair? The secret of the great power of the early church was her optimism because of her faith in Christ. Paul was warning and encouraging the Hebrews to go on in the faith and said concerning Jesus, "For he hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee", then adds, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever". If we believed that Jesus meant what he said when he said, "Lo I am with you always, even unto the ends of the world", we would not hesitate and hold back for self that which belongs to him, and would win victories.

"Without faith it is impossible to please God." Men of God in the ages past have moved out upon the promises of God, thereby gaining favor with him and not one of them were disappointed. Noah believed God and "prepared an ark to the saving of his house," yet there was no evidence that there would ever be a flood. When God promised Abraham that he would receive an inheritance he believed God and the result was that he received that inheritance. When Abraham and Sarah were told that they were to have an heir, they could well have doubted God, because it was impossible from a human standpoint. But because she "judged him faithful who had promised" Sarah gave birth to the heir that was promised. These people had invested in the promises of God and "launched out into the deep" by faith, and the result was that they always met God where he promised. We cannot win victories for God with a half-hearted service. That is an evidence of the lack of faith. " whatsoever is not of faith is sin" (Rom. 14:23). The money changers had gathered into, and taken possession of the house of God. Jesus drove

How to Get More True Rest

That is just the thing that is wrong with many people—they don't get enough rest and repose, so a certain distinguished professor declares. He may be right. There is at least some truth in it. There are any number of reasons for this lack of rest. Some prefer to indulge their sense of pleasure when they ought to be sleeping. Some are driven by their greed for gold or by their ambition for position and power to such an extent that they do not give themselves sufficient time for rest and sleep. Some allow themselves to be loaded down with responsibilities in the service of their fellowmen, even in spiritual activities and leadership, that they do not find the time they need for rest and refreshment of body. Others allow themselves to become so mentally disturbed by the trying situations in which they find themselves that restful sleep and mental repose are taken from them. Whatever the reasons for the lack of sleep, men don't get along well without it. The human organism cannot keep on going and engaging in the activities of life without due time given to rest and sleep. God made it that way. Everybody knows that. It is not necessary that we have a scientist tell us that. Yet when one such stressed that fact in Cleveland, Ohio, some time ago, his words were considered important enough to be quoted by the daily press and by at least one religious paper that we noticed. Perhaps after all it is a service to have some one of note tell us what we already know; it does get our attention and sometimes causes us to face up to duty more squarely. That in itself is a service.

It was Dr. Donald A. Laird, director of the psychological laboratory at Colgate University, who said people were not getting enough sleep. He declared that "what Americans need right now is more sleep of a good and restful kind." But the especially interesting thing about his remarks was his suggestion as to how one could enjoy a good night's rest under the present economic pressure. In reply to a question he admitted it was hard, but thought it would help some to make a mental preparation before going to bed. He said: "Fifteen minutes or so should be spent in calming down. Dress in your sleeping clothes and lounge around. If you are especially nervous and excited over current conditions, lie in a tub of water at 98 degrees temperature for about five minutes."

We are frank to say that we are disappointed in the professor's counsel. Any chairman of a Christian Endeavor quiet hour department could have given sounder advice. This intellectual's answer suggests to us that either he does not know the calming and rest-giving power of trust in God and communion with his blessed Person, or else he was talking to people whom he thought would not understand the language of a Christian. It was well that he recognized the need of mental preparation, and perhaps a warm bath would help to induce sleep and might be sufficient, if man were a mere animal. But man is more than an animal, and having a mind and a heart, having memory and conscience, something more than a warm bath and lounging about in sleeping garments is necessary to prepare him for real, satisfying rest and re-creating sleep. Because of failure to take into account that something more that is needed to still the mind and heart of man, many have found their way to hospitals and asylums and some into suicide graves. Yes, indeed,—"preparation" is needed, but preparation of a more far-reaching character than a materialistic psychologist is able to suggest. And "fifteen minutes or so should be spent in calming down," most assuredly, but not in mere lounging around. There is need of time, sufficient time, to become quiet before God, to refresh one's sense of the divine presence, to revive the power of trust in his providence, to reassure the soul with meditation on the promises of the Word, to rejuvenate the lagging spirit with a new serenity of faith. There is need of a "calming down" of that sort, and not only so, but of real rest also.

Jesus anticipated this need of man for rest and made provision for it. There are three kinds of rest that he gives—rest from sin, rest from a disturbed mind and rest for a weary body.

Jesus gives rest to the soul of man by taking away his sin. That was the angel's promise concerning his birth—that he should save his people from their sins, and when Jesus was in the midst of his ministry he declared and exercised his power to forgive sin. His death was to take away sin, for he himself said the Son of man must be lifted up, even as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, that whosoever should believe in him might not perish. And the primary note in Paul's message was that "Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures" (1 Cor. 15:3). That is the rest that Jesus is most concerned about giving—rest to those burdened with sin. Hear him: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls" (Matt. 11:28, 29). That is true rest. It is the rest, the peace, of which Wordsworth sings:

"I knelt before Thy gracious throne
And asked for peace with suppliant knee.
And peace was given; not peace alone,
But love, and joy, and ecstasy."

From Harriet Beecher Stowe's trusting soul also comes the music of such peace and calm:

The Trinity in the Baptismal Formula

Both the Trinity and Baptism are largely overlooked in our teaching and preaching, whereas neither ought to be, for both are important. We seem to shy from consideration of the Trinity as from a gigantic undertaking or from a greatly perplexing and mysterious problem. And we seem to pass Baptism by lightly as if it were a matter of little importance, a "mere form." Now the nature of the God-head is admittedly a great mystery, so far as human understanding is concerned, and yet the Trinity ought to be known and experienced by every Christian. Also, while Baptism carries with it the necessity of form, and correct form, too, yet it is infinitely more than form and no one has any scriptural right to claim membership in the Kingdom without having been "born of water and of the Spirit." Right at the very door of the Christian life, the entrant is required to face both these great doctrines, and he ought to be instructed concerning them.

Regarding the Trinity, we do not advocate attempting to explain the mystery; that would be foolish because impossible. But the people ought to be taught what is revealed in the Scripture concerning the marvelous character of the God-head. There was a day when the Trinity was proclaimed with more positiveness and frequency than is the case now, because it was believed more strongly by the ministry. Today it seems that we only half believe this great doctrine. Perhaps few would be willing to confess to any lack of faith in it, but practically there is a lack, for the doctrine means little or nothing to them. There is very little associated in their thought with it. There are many items of faith that are fading from the minds of the people because they mean very little to them, and the doctrine of the Trinity is one of them. We ought to bring it out of its place of obscurity and seeming insignificance and give it the place of outstanding importance and essentiality that it truly holds.

One way of making the Trinity real and meaningful is by showing how completely triune immersion is dependent upon the full and ready acceptance of this doctrine. The Trinity is in the baptismal formula as set forth in Matthew 28:19, 20, and as universally practiced by Brethren people. It is no mere form of words to us, but a real guide to determine the number of dips the frequentative verb "baptize" shall receive. It is not only a guide to action, but a part of the Commission, and so is a direct command and requires obedience that involves confession of its truthfulness. When we are about to baptize by triune immersion, we might well make more real the Trinity as well as give the rite of baptism added significance by stressing the person and work of each member of the Trinity. A Christian cannot be a consistent member of the Brethren Church without believing in the Godhead of all three members of the Trinity.

All these things are perfectly familiar to any informed Brethren, but we must face the fact that all too many are not informed and need to be instructed. And they are not all young people or new members either. We need to connect up more strongly and vitally the distinctive teachings of the church and those other general teachings that are commonly recognized and accepted by all evangelical Christians, that their value may be more clearly appreciated and strongly held. Baptism, for example, ceases to be a mere church practice when it is seen to be freighted with the fundamental doctrine of the Trinity. It becomes immeasurably richer with meaning and more inescapably binding when this vital connection is kept ever in view and emphasized.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We made editorial comment last week on Brother Frank Gehman's newsletter, which inadvertently failed to get in last week's paper. We regret the omission and inclose it in this week's issue.

Brother Henry Rinehart, Treasurer of the Brethren Home, gives us a detailed report of financial receipts amounting to $274.55. This shows the response to this emergency call which continues with commendable loyalty.

Brother R. I. Humberd, of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, writes us that he is enjoying a speaking engagement of several days' duration at a Bible Conference at Bible Conference Park, two miles from Binghamton, New York.

One preacher asked another the other day, "Why don't more churches write news letters for The Evangelist?" The reply was, "I suppose because they have nothing to write about." Is that the reason your church is not being heard from?

Brother L. A. Hazlett writes of his visit to the church at Canton, Ohio, where Dr. J. C. Beal, the pastor, is demonstrating the importance of intensive Bible instruction and is building up a strong work thereby. We are glad to say that such emphasis on the Bible and Bible instruction is widely recognized by our people and it is our conviction that our ministers stand high, both in their faith in, and knowledge of, the Word of God.

Remember the date of General Conference is August 21 to 27 and the place is Winona Lake, Indiana. If we may judge the probable attendance at this national gathering by the attendance that some of our district conferences and young people's camps had, it will be largely attended and the fellowship will be abundantly worth your while. And the menu of the spiritual feast there to be spread has already been published. It is time for delegations to be formed.

We are asking our readers to cooperate with us in an effort to extend the circulation and enlarge the service of our church paper. Preachers and laymen alike should consider it a duty and a privilege to get others to join the Evangelist family. In these times when money is scarce we are emphasizing short-time subscriptions, offering the special rate of $1.00 for seven months. Any Evangelist agent who wishes sample copies of the paper to use in an effort to secure subscriptions will receive them free by sending us a post card stating the number desired.

The editor recently had the privilege of preaching on a Sunday morning for the good people of the Ellet, Ohio, church, where Brother Grant McDonald is the much loved pastor. There were 222 present at the Sunday school and a goodly attendance for the church service. On every hand we met with words of encouragement and confidence for the church's future, notwithstanding the very difficult times they have experienced financially. With the loyalty and sacrifice which these people display, with their spiritual leadership and the large field that lays before them, we believe the future of this church is bright, and we fully expect them to press forward to realize it. While we were there we took several new subscriptions to The Evangelist. We were accompanied on our trip by Brother J. C. McBride and his Ford coupe.

A personal communication from Brother N. W. Jennings contains this information which we may share with our readers: "I have just been unanimously called to serve the Turlock Brethren church for the seventh year and have accepted the call. I underwent an operation in May and my health is better now, I am glad to say. The members of my flock were kind in bringing in flowers, kind words and other tokens of appreciation, for which I was truly grateful." He also expresses his appreciation of his faithful wife for her efficient care and devotion during his illness, and also his thankfulness to his Heavenly Father for raising him up and caring for his flock in such a splendid way and "supplying all our needs according to his riches in glory." Gratitude is a good note to sound. The sensitive soul is always grateful for the blessings which he receives, but more especially at such a time as that of convalescing from a serious illness or from an operation is one made keenly aware and very appreciative of the great goodness of God and of the kind care of the friends on which he is dependent. Brother Jennings concludes by saying: "No hand can stay his blessings, if we abide in him. 'If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you' (John 15:7)."

One of our good friends from the Pacific Coast writes the following word of appreciation and observation: "To the Editor of The Brethren Evangelist: I just finished reading the last paper, that of July 22. I think it is getting better and more interesting all the time. I look forward to it each Monday like a letter from home. Am sorry that the church members of this country are not standing up for the right. It looks now as though we might lose our Eighteenth Amendment, but God is on his throne and he can overrule." If more church members of all the churches were more faithful readers of their church papers instead of depending on the wet-bought secular press for their information, where most of what they read is mis-information, exaggeration or fiction, there would be larger numbers standing by the Eighteenth Amendment, and every other righteous principle. The demagogues could not prosper without the help of the church members and the beer barons would not be in the saddle today if it were not for the fact that vast numbers of the professed followers of the Lord Jesus Christ were attempting to serve both God and mammon. Would to God that the church were filled with men and women who had the conscience and the concern of our correspondent.

Brother Thoburn C. Lyon of Washington, D. C., wrote us some time ago that he had been impressed with the possibilities of the drama as a means of fighting repeal and impressing the minds of the people with the importance of prohibition. It is indeed being widely used, and with striking effect. Many churches are putting on anti-prohibition programs with short dramas as the main features. There are a number of splendid short dramas being used. One in particular to which Brother Lyon called attention by means of a newspaper clipping, and which we have seen staged with remarkable effectiveness raises the question: "Who Killed Earl Wright?" The drama gradually reveals that John Barleycorn was responsible for the slaying. It is a court room drama showing the closing hours of the trial of a youth charged with the killing of his best friend during an argument over a bottle of liquor. The play was written by a mid-western attorney who participated in a trial upon which it is based. The conclusion of the trial, as voiced by both the prosecution and defense, is that alcohol was to blame for the crime, that it is indeed "the embodiment of all crime." Any persons interested in putting on such a program may find help by writing to their state headquarters of the Anti-Saloon League, or the national headquarters at Westerville, Ohio.

Capturing Youth for God

By George H. Jones

Executive Secretary of Boy Scouts of Greater Johnstown, Pennsylvania

Christian education concerns itself primarily with putting a Christian impulse back of all human conduct, when the education begins. Our forgetfulness of that fact has been responsible for the loss of too many young men in our Church work. The exceptional case is due to the home functioning as it should. We are reminded of the story of a dinner in a minister's home. The family was gathered about the dinner table ready for the evening meal. The table was graced with a large plate of mother's home-made bread. The minister helped the children to bread and a spread, after which he helped himself, but fond as he was of mother's fresh bread, his eyes took on a questioning look. Mother was quickly aware that something was wrong. "What is it? Something I put in?" "It tastes that way, mother." But Mother was tasting the bread herself by this time. "I can hardly think of anything that might have gotten into it," she said hesitatingly. "Oh! sure, I have forgotten to put salt in it." "Well, mother, put it in now," said the minister, with a twinkle in his eye. "That would be foolish," she replied, "It is too late now." "I wonder," said the minister, "if most parents are not depending upon the Sunday school and the church to put the salt of a 'Saving Faith' into their children too late to make a good job of it?"

In a review of the forces creating the men of tomorrow, it is surprising to note the small place the church has in this dynamic field, small compared to the place it might have. The fertile soil is there to produce the crop of wild oats or sober, sane citizenship. Common sense suggests the capture of this field above all others. As youth is captured so the man serves. Here youth is dreaming and planning. Here the imagination is preparing for adult conquest. Here is the future power of the nation, having foundations laid in the heart of the boy. Here the stability of the future is established. Here American ideals are created and the kind determined by training and environment. Here future moral practices are getting their inception. Habits are being established. In this formative period the future type of American manhood is shaped. The content is either spiritual or carnal.

For several seasons our high school football team was coached by a star of almost national fame. He was a local product from a foreign home of absolute ignorance of American ideals. His sole slogan was "Win, Win Fairly,—but Win." Life is a game to youth. Loyalty is cultivated with an intensity that seems extreme sometimes. Every educational institution fosters it. Then seasonable games provide an outlet for a superabundant physical energy. These stormy, noisy and often bitter contests, stir the very center of emotional life. The very language of our young men is the vernacular of the recreation field. The spirit of the game captures the imagination, while the ethics practiced, determine the morals of the participants. The price we are paying now, in the manhood of today, was the price set upon the winning of the game a generation ago. Too much of our character took its content and shape, not from the Sunday school and Church, so irregularly attended, but from the contests and codes of the athletic and recreation fields of the past. Our play in the past generation determined our leadership in this. A nation's play is a sure index of its education and morals.

Youth is having all kinds of instruction today. It is a wise man indeed who is able to discern the respective powers of Church, Home, School, Playground, Movies and Companionship. Moral and religious instruction are in many cases simply incidental, when they should be the source of his greatest aspirations. Yet the Home and the Church are the only institutions charged with the task of educating the boy religiously. Few indeed are the homes where this is done. How short indeed is the time the Church gets to perform the task. Is it surprising then that in an analysis of crime records of recent date the Associated Press discloses that 39% of criminals finger-printed in this country were under twenty-four? Nearly one in five of all persons arrested were between 19-22. The boys of 19 holding the ranking position among lawbreakers of all ages. There were 10,926 youths of 19 years of age arrested, slightly more than 5% of the total number placed under arrest.

A number of welfare agencies having arisen, alarmed by the growing delinquency, and voluntarily assumed the task of assisting in the moral and religious training of the unfortunate youth born to the normal care-less home. The normal home seems to have changed, it has neither the inclination, nor the

Signs of Our Lord's Return

III. SOCIAL CONDITIONS

By Charles W. Mayes

Who has not heard that we are living in a time of a "Changing Social Order?" The newspapers and magazines say so. College and University Professors say so. World prognosticators say so, and surest of all THE BIBLE SAYS SO.

What Educators Say

In June, 1932, Dr. James T. Shotwell of Columbia University gave the Commencement Address at Stanford University honoring a graduating class of more than eleven hundred students.

Dr. Shotwell said, "Unless we learn the lesson taught by antiquity—that we must substitute reason for force, and justice for exploitation,—our scientific age will prove just another interlude like the golden age of Greece and Rome, and the emergence from the ice age will be postponed another 1000 years."

After painting a dark picture of the social life of the present day, Dr. Shotwell offered this final lament of despair, "I have no final advice to give you, young men and women, it is too late for that now!"

Newspaper Editors

An editor of one of America's greatest newspapers has this to say, "When Rome was beginning to topple, they were discussing the following problems: reckless lawlessness of criminal classes, the loose conduct of gilded youth, the free and easy divorces, what to do about the people leaving the farms, and crowding into the cities, how to feed the starving unemployed. Conditions are far too similar for comfort. There are scientists who see signs of our whole white civilization going down to smash."

If a preacher had made the above statement, he would of course be called pessimistic, but since it comes from science it dare not be gaisaid.

On this important subject, even H. G. Wells has a word. "Destruction is not threatening civilization, it is happening to civilization before our very eyes. The ship of civilization is not going to sink in five years, it is sinking now!"

The Pope

Even the Pope thinks it is time to speak forth, "The time is ripe for the intervention of God. History tells us again and again that when men reached the lowest ebb and began to curse and deny God, then was the moment when God manifested himself. . . . Even in Russia where men blaspheme God, this will be the case."

Astrologists

From Llewellyn George, Vice-President of the National Astrological Association, there comes this quotation,

"Looking down the 1933 months, astrologically, I see some interesting things, as indicated by the planets. Outstanding is the fact that 1933 is to be a year of more social, economic and political adjustments than this nation has seen in a long, long time. You go into this New Year with many cherished ideas about government, social relations, your philosophy of living and of religion. The stars indicate that, if you follow the great mass trends in thought, you are going to finish 1933 with nearly all of these pre-conceived and long-cherished ideas upset! . . .

Speaking broadly, we are going to see these idea shifts taking place in our economics on a breath-taking scale."

The Social Gospel

In the March Issue of PROPHECY Magazine, it is stated, "Prof. Hart of Bryn Mawr tells us that a NEW RELIGION will develop as different from traditional Christianity as Christianity is from Judaism. It is the 'Social Gospel' or humanist religion which is sweeping all before it—'open minded religion' as the professor calls it. Its goal is 'fulfilment of personality and achievement of values here on earth.' The message of the modern pulpit has to do with international affairs, social justice, racial problems, education and many phases of individual and social development."

Great Swelling Words! But Prof. Hart made a mistake! The above subjects do not come from MODERN pulpits, but from MODERNIST pulpits. We must insist that the MODERN pulpit, preaches the Gospel of Jesus Christ who is the same yesterday, today and forever. The Bible, proclaimed as meat in due season is always modern, up-to-date and satisfying. In fact, the student of Prophecy is more than modern for he knows what things the Lord is bringing to pass through the ages.

Strange as it may seem, the more the MODERNIST pulpit lends itself to the solution of "international affairs, social justice, and racial problems" the further these very problems are from solution? God tells his ministers, "Preach the Word." A departure from obedience to this command not only means tragedy for the Church, but failure in solving world problems as well.

Prof. Hart spoke significant words when he said, "It is the social gospel or humanist religion which is sweeping all before it. . . ." Humanism identifies God with the soul of humanity. Humanism says there is much that is divine in man. The marvelous attainments of man are therefore evidence of his divinity. One more step is all that is needed. That step is to suggest that since there is so much divinity in man, why not worship man? This seems logical does it not? Great leaders demonstrating great power and great attainments would thus be worthy of worship. All this coming into prominence in the world of religion, is not new to prophetic students. In Revelation 13:15 we read of a powerful personage sometime to appear on this earth who shall "cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed."

Present day happenings startle us. We will look at just one. This is stated of the now famous Hitler.

"He came out of darkness, and none knew him. None knew the path he would take. He turned the torch of God upon the hearts of the Germans. He preached, he believed, he hated, he loved. . . .

"But those about him were his refuge and his protection; he was torch bearer, preacher, evangelist. They followed him. They chose his way . . . even to the cross.

"His followers became an army, the army became the folk. Out of the folk stormed their savior. He came to us unknown. He grew from the temporal to the eternal. He became for Germany symbol and destiny . . . His life is our life.

"Hitler is our longing, our hope, our nation! He is all that we mean in the great word: LEADER!" (Saturday Evening Post, May, 1933).

All this with the "Social Gospel or Humanist Religion" will certainly set the stage for what we read in Revelation 13.

Man Like God in Christ

By A. B. Cover

The lost image is restored in Christ. That God-like ideal must be realized in conduct and character. Man then becomes a revelation of God.

When Felix, Drusilla and others present heard Paul they heard a message, "concerning the faith in Christ Jesus." We use the word "faith" constantly but do we fathom its content? It is rich, meaningful beyond our ordinary conception of its significance. In the final act of redemption lies man's possibility of restoration to that of the "likeness and image of God." Underlying every creation of God is a definite purpose. It is not always easy to trace and the reason therefor is the limitation of human intelligence lost in the fall. The Scriptures teach the purpose of Angelic life to be that of service (Ps. 103: 20; Heb. 1:14). The purpose underlying the creation of man was far sublimer. He was created in the Divine image in a sense Angels were not and in that is revealed a definite purpose; man was intended as a Medium for the Divine manifestation. Because of his likeness to God, man could express to other creatures the purpose of God. Redemption is therefore complete only when man is restored to the perfection of his own being and thus fitted for the fulfillment of the Divine purpose. This is the ultimate issue of the work of Christ in man; and for the accomplishment of this vital restoration is the power, and restoration to knowledge is the process. The life of Christ imparted to man by the Holy Spirit is the constraining, transforming power, and the new vision of God in Christ the pattern toward which the power works, and through which the product, the saint of God, is realized.

In this consideration, we also are brought face to face with these great facts in redemption, viz.: restoration to God was perfected in justification; restoration to the knowledge of God is being perfected in sanctification; and final restoration to God will be perfected in glorification. Redemption is therefore restoration to the fellowship of the Father that was so vitally broken in Eden (1 John 3:2, 3). Christ is the express image of the Father, in perfect likeness to him. Man fulfills the original Divine intention by becoming restored, through Christ, to the image in the likeness of God. In view of this, how insignificant the present life is, in comparison with the life to come. It is like being in school, preparatory for life. School is but a foretaste of life; so the life that now is is preparatory to the life eternal.

Some things that enter into redemption and which we shall but briefly stress are the following: man to become like God must realize the ideal in conduct and character; the realization of himself; and man like God becomes a revelation of God. Let us first examine the relationship of conduct and character. Conduct is always the expression of character, and character is the cause of conduct. Character is the condition of being, while conduct is the expression thereof in doing. In both of these, Christ was the revelation of God, and as man is Christlike, he is like God. Luke 1:75 states the purpose of the Messiah's coming, that men should serve him, serve God, "in holiness and righteousness." These words cover all; for holiness relates to character and righteousness to conduct. If therefore one IS holy, he WILL ACT righteously. Thus Jesus said that by the fruit you would know the tree. It is vitally important that a professed follower of the Lord, Jesus Christ measure himself by this standard. Yet we must remember that both holiness and righteousness are the result of LOVE. By the impartation of the Christ life, man is subdued by love; and obedience to the new nature imparted issues in holiness of character and righteousness of conduct.

What does restoration to God imply? As already stated restoration to God in Christ, makes possible the realization of the purpose of one's own being. This means restoration in human personality, so that intellect, emotion and will, will be Godlike. This will mean the realization of that primal intention of God in the creation of man. Intellect set free from sin sees things in true perspective, and right proportion. In degree, human intelligence now apprehends with the Infinite Intelligence. This sets man at ease. He can walk erect as God intended he should and exercise his high and holy calling, for beyond all things material he knows there exists the One Eternal God. The emotional powers freed from sinful degradation, now will cooperate in conformity with the Divine Love. Affections are set on things above; the upper eternal things and every movement of love brings the object closer to God. The will, in restoration, submits to the governing principle of God. The result of this is that man's essential nature being transformed into perfect conformity to the will of God, his holiness of character will be forever established. This will prepare him for living the true life, or the life that expresses itself in righteousness of conduct. Then he will be in cooperation with God. Some one may say here, But it is impossible to know today along what line the activities of God will be continued tomorrow? We may know that the activity of God is always constructive and not destructive. So in his will, man will follow along the pathway of perpetual, perennial manifestation of that essential Love, which is the fullness of joy and pleasure for evermore. Man's likeness to God is today manifested in his appropriation of the character of holiness, and his cooperation in the work of redemption (John 5:17). And instead of acting in rebellion against the government of God, elects to act under compulsion of the Eternal One, whose essence is Love. Thus by redemption, man becomes a being whose will decides in answer to the impulse of pure affection in the light of unclouded intelligence. A Christian cannot afford to dabble with questionable literature, amusement or any conduct, that reflects upon his profession of Christ. This settles, for the writer, the matter of Atheism, Agnosticism, and all the other isms that deny the Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ. They who follow are "too ignorant" to understand the claims and appeal of Christianity.

Restoration to the true Divine order means that all powers and capacities rightly conditioned can be directed and enjoyed to their highest and fullest value. True beauty expresses itself in music, in art, so dominated by that unswerving holiness, that all discords cease and harmonies are perfected. Knowledge of the future is Divinely limited but in Philippians 4:8, we are assured that nothing Christlike will be lost, but fulfilled in all power and perfection. The measure of man's appropriation of the redemption in Christ, must be realized in what he is

POLING RE-ELECTED

Dr. Daniel A. Poling was re-elected president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor at the convention held recently in Milwaukee. The other officers were also re-elected. Mrs. Harriet Abbot Clark, widow of Dr. Francis E. Clark, founder of the first Christian Endeavor Society in Portland, Maine, in 1881, was one of the speakers at the convention. She is 82 years old. The convention adopted a ringing resolution calling upon the youth of the nation to fight repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. The next convention, in 1935, will be held in Philadelphia.—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

REVERENCE

"Reverence for God," says Judge Kavanaugh, "is the strongest of all influences for the prevention of crime." Religion is not primarily corrective, but preventive. Its pre-eminent business is to lay the rails for life's travel and to set the youthful engine on the track. Spiritually poor homes are mainly responsible for juvenile delinquency. Neither the Church nor the home can replace the Hall of Justice, but together they can greatly reduce the need of it by instilling the grace of God into the hearts of young people.

The summer ministry in vacation Bible schools and church camps offers unique opportunities to willing servants of God—Robert Freeman in Presbyterian Magazine.

WHY NOT GO ALL THE WAY?

To no group of Christian people are we more deeply indebted for preservation of the Scriptures and of the freedom of the church than to the Presbyterian and Reformed group. The fact that, in our zeal for restoration of the Christianity of the New Testament, we have stepped apart from these good people does not blind our eyes to the fact that we inherited from the earlier leaders of this group certain great principles that are basic in church work.

One of those principles is restated in an installment of a contribution appearing serially in the Presbyterian from the pen of P. B. Fraser and entitled "A Brief Statement of the Reformed Faith." Dealing with the relation of church and state, Mr. Fraser makes the following summary:

"We believe in the rightful independence of particular churches, local, provincial or national, under Christ their Head. Even if all the Christians within a realm or nation could be held together in one, the habits of distinct nations and the use of divers languages would still require for each country a separate church. No ground can be adduced from Scripture, or from reason, for squeezing the Christians of a whole continent, much less of all countries and languages, into one huge organization, subject to one central official control far removed from choice of the people. There is no universal bishop but the Lord Jesus Christ, no Holy See with world-wide authority but his throne. Christ is no more Head of a church than he is the Head of every individual within it."

Of course, we subscribe heartily to that principle. Whether it be looked at from the standpoint of defense against ecclesiastical tyranny or from the standpoint of the vital effectiveness of the church, the doctrine that Christ is Head of the church because he is Head of the individual Christian is the only proper doctrine and it points the only way to Christian unity.

What causes us wonder, however, is the fact those who enunciate such a doctrine should be unwilling to follow it all the way. Why, for instance, should a church that takes that position be willing to bind upon its constituents a "form of baptism" that came, not from Jesus Christ, but from the hierarchy of the Roman Church? Why, moreover, should a church that has so heroically defended that platform undertake to impose baptism upon infants not yet capable of accepting the Headship of Christ? And why should a church that has consistently held to the personal relationship of the individual and the Lord as here enunciated undertake to make a human creed the test of fellowship between the Lord's people?

We admire the Presbyterian people, but we confess to an inability to understand what seems to us a basic inconsistency.—Christian Standard.

How to Get More True Rest

"Far, far away, the roar of passion dieth,
And loving thoughts rise calm and peacefully,
And no rude storm, how fierce so e'er it flieeth,
Disturbs the soul that dwells, O Lord, in Thee."

And Jesus provides mental rest. "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me" (John 14:1). They who believe in him need never be disturbed by any trouble or threatening danger. We can trust in him in spite of all the horrible things that may happen. "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's and Christ is God's." If, in the face of such a promise, we are filled with fear, we should hear the Master's reproving voice, "O ye of little faith!" It is such rest, the rest that means peace of mind, that is the great need of this our day when men are troubled, because of fear. It is the rest that comes from absolute confidence in God, a trust that does not waver. That was the spirit that brought rest to the wise man of old and enabled him to admonish others thus: "When thou liest down, thou shalt not be afraid; yea, thou shalt lie down, and thy sleep shall be sweet" (Prov. 3:24). It was such trust that made possible such words from the lips of the Psalmist: "I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, Lord, only makest me to dwell in safety" (Psa. 4:8). Worry and fretting about the future are foolish and sinful for those who profess to put their trust in the Lord. Jesus taught the folly of being anxious about the morrow, of being disturbed about what we shall eat, or be clothed with, or how we shall keep our homes intact. "Your heavenly Father knoweth ye have need of all these things," he reminded them. If men are so filled with worry and fear that they cannot sleep soundly and restfully, they need to give heed to the words of divine truth, and put their trust in the Lord. That was what the Psalmist did. His trust was so implicit that he was able to chide others with these words: "It is vain for you . . . to eat the bread of sorrows; for so he giveth his beloved sleep" (Psa. 127:2).

The Lord Jesus makes provision also for bodily rest. That was the purpose of the creation sabbath—to provide a day of rest for man. So also was the Jewish sabbath ordained for that purpose. Jesus, who himself was with the Father in the creation, declared that the sabbath was made for man. The body was not fashioned for constant activity, for perpetual outflow of energy. There is need of periods of inactivity, or seasons of repose, when the waste places can be rebuilt and the physical being can gather new supply of strength and vigor for new efforts. Jesus called his own disciples on one occasion to come apart and rest awhile. And our Lord himself now and then took time off from his strenuous duties and the heavy demands made of him and sought the quietness of the hills and of the night for rest and meditation. It is a gracious provision that God has made, that after an impetuous rush or steady drain of strength, we may pause and have our physical vigor replenished by sleep and rest. And it becomes all the more sacred and obligatory, when we remember that these bodies are to be kept pure and strong, guarded and cared for as fit temples for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

Studies in the Book of Revelation

By R. I. Humberd

Study Number Twenty-four

The Battle of Armageddon

We saw in our last study, that ALL nations are to gather to fight against Jerusalem (Zech. 14:2 and Joel 3:2). What is there about Jerusalem that can draw such an army when a few aeroplanes ought to be able to destroy the city? We find our clue in Revelation 11:1, 2.

Why the Army Gathers

For three and one-half years, Satan has been killing the godly people. The Antichrist has been able to defeat every army that has been raised against him, and the whole world worships him and says, "who is able to make war with him?" (Rev. 13:4). Anything that can withstand the antichrist will most certainly bring the armies of the entire world against it.

We might think that mortal man would not be so foolish as to fight against their creator but it is a time of abounding demon worship (Rev. 9:20) and the three frog-like demons (Rev. 16:13) will easily convince the world that they can defeat God himself.

The Great Showdown

For some years there will be an open conflict between God and Satan. There must be a showdown and the nations of the entire world, with the old cry "We will not have this man to reign over us" will gather at Armageddon determined to rid the earth of any semblance of God.

God's Reservation

"And there was given me a reed like unto a rod; and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not, for it is given unto the Gentiles, and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months" (Rev. 11:1, 2).

Here we have a certain section in Jerusalem that is measured and kept for "them that worship" in the temple. During this awful time of three and one-half years, the Gentiles will be permitted to tread Jerusalem under foot but no Gentile foot will be able to tread on what God has reserved for himself. Both the temple and the worshippers are measured and kept safe from intruders, by supernatural power.

God will also keep his two witnesses by supernatural power during these three and one-half years, but will permit the beast to kill them at the end of this time. This will serve to encourage him to take the one spot in Jerusalem that God has reserved for himself and the whole world will gather to help him fight against God.

The Holy Place

For some time this passage puzzled me. I knew that the Jewish temple is yet to be built in Jerusalem and that the antichrist is to place himself in the temple as an object of worship "showing himself that he is God" (2 Thess. 2:4). Christ said that this abomination would be placed in the "holy place" and not the "holy of holies". Thus, if the antichrist succeeds in placing his image in the holy place there will yet be room for God to reserve a place where no defiled foot may tread.

The Great Conflict

This is God's method. The conflict of Genesis 3:15 has continued through the ages. God has promised a Redeemer but Satan will do all in his power to keep the Seed of the woman from being born. God often allows Satan to almost win. Satan came so near his purpose at one time that the word went out that Athaliah had destroyed "all the seed royal of the house of Judah" (2 Chron. 22:10). But he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep and, although the whole promise of a Redeemer hung upon the life of a little babe, God saw to it that little Joash was kept safely from all harm.

Satan Almost Victorious

Since Satan is fighting God, he will lead all of his host against God. Thus men will hate God and will seek to drive him from the earth. God will allow them to kill most of his people and attempt to drive his people from the entire world. He will even allow his two witnesses to be killed. But there will be one spot in Jerusalem that will be measured and will be invulnerable. This will so anger the kings of the earth that they will take counsel together against the Lord, saying, "Let us break their bands asunder, and cast their cords from us". But "he that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh" (Ps. 2) and the Battle of Armageddon will end in complete victory for our Lord.

For three and one-half years the antichrist will have things very much his own way. Thousands, showing favor to God will be killed. The two witnesses will be overcome. A company of Jews will escape to the wilderness. Only one thing remains to worry him, defeat that, and his power is supreme.

Haman's Defeat

Haman had the favor of the entire court but he could not rest until every knee would bow. In his blind rage he would destroy a whole nation to get his one man—Mordecai, but his efforts proved his own downfall (Esther 7:10).

Like Haman of old, the beast will have almost the whole world at his feet. Only one small portion in Jerusalem will withstand him. He has almost driven God off the earth but he will not rest until his full purpose is accomplished, and God is driven out. But his efforts, like Haman's, will prove to be his own downfall and the Battle of Armageddon will place him in the Lake of Fire' (Rev. 19:20).

God's Last Act of Mercy

"And I will give power to my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and three score days, clothed in sackcloth" (Rev. 11:3). The speaker here is still the "mighty angel" of chapter 10:1, or our Lord himself in his Old Testament office as The Angel of the Lord. The two witnesses are God's last act of mercy toward a world that crucified his Son. Blaspheming humanity will so hate God that if there is to be any witness at all to the God of heaven, they will have to be kept by supernatural power.

Elijah to Come Again

Just who one of these two men are, we are not told but the last promise of the Old Testament leaves no doubt as to the identity of the other. "Behold I send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord" (Mal. 4:5).

Elijah never died. God still has a purpose for him upon this earth. Only one other man has never died. "Enoch was translated that he should not see death" (Heb. 11:5). If the second man is Enoch, he might represent God to the Gentiles (for he lived before the flood) while Elijah would be the witness to Israel.

Is Moses a Witness?

There is, however, some reason to believe that the other witness is Moses. Moses died but God seemed to have farther use for his mortal body for he himself buried it and Satan, who would ever thwart God, tried to secure it (Jude 9). At the transfiguration, it was Moses and Elijah who appeared in glory. At any rate, Elijah and some other personage will again tread this old earth.

John Baptist and Elijah

But we anticipate an objection. Did not John Baptist fulfill the prophecies concerning Elijah? Let us note that Elijah is to come just before the day of the Lord (Mal. 4:5) which is Christ's second coming.

Some one asked John, "Art thou Elias? and he saith, I am not" (John 1:21). Whatever any other passage may say, none dare contradict this plain statement of John himself.

Matthew 17:12 would present a difficulty, if it were not for verse 11 which assures us that "Elias truly SHALL first come, and restore all things." This places his coming in the future, for John was dead when these words were uttered.

Why God Sent John

The whole question is settled in Matthew 11:14, "If ye will receive it, this is Elias, which was for to come". They were talking of the kingdom that Christ will yet set up on this earth. Elijah is to prepare the way for the Lord's coming at that time. But hidden away in the secret counsels of God, was the foreknowledge of the rejection and crucifixion of the King and also of the church age (Eph. 3:5).

The two comings of Christ presented a puzzle even to Isaiah, Jeremiah and the other prophets who wrote in Old Testament times. They even searched their own writings, to no avail, to reconcile these seeming contradictions (1 Pet. 1:10, 11).

It was necessary for God to keep this a secret so he could give the Jews a real bona-fide offer of the kingdom. However, God, knowing all of his works before (Acts 15:18) made provision for the rejection of the kingdom by sending John in "the spirit and power of Elias" (Luke 1:17). However, Christ assured the Jews that had they received "it" (that is, the kingdom) (Matt. 11:14) Elijah would have come then.

anxiety. Send me news when thou wilt come, that I may rejoice at it. Mayest thou for my sake live forever."

A TEACHER'S PREPARATION

If the task of a physician were simply to give to every one of his patients a certain number of doses of a certain kind of medicine, little or no medical training would be required. But if, as is the case, he is required to diagnose each individual case and prescribe according to the needs of that patient, then he needs a very thorough training. So also with the physician of souls—if he has one standard prescription for all, to be administered regardless of individual differences, he needs only a limited amount of training. To give an explanation of a Scripture verse or a catechism answer, and secure its memorization by the class, requires little skill. But if the teacher's task is to select from the wealth of Biblical and extra-Biblical material, including history, biography, poetry, and drama, that which will best meet the needs, fit the capacities, and appeal to the interests of a particular individual or group, then his preparation must be correspondingly more comprehensive and varied.—Youth and the Church, by Leon C. Palmer.

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

By Rev. Milton Bennett Lambdin

An inscribed slab with a record of the building operations of Nebuchadnezzar has been found with the legend, "Nebuchadnezzar, the King of Babylon, the Gate of God."

Amid the ruins of the Kasr palace there was found by Rassam in 1879 a barrel-shaped cylinder, which proved to be a valuable record inscribed by Cyrus, in the which he tells the story at some length that Babylon fell into his hands, not by prolonged siege and assault, but that its gates were opened by reason of a deep seated religious disaffection among the priesthood and populace that had destroyed the heroic and resistive morale of the besieged.

Various archaeological societies of Europe and America, with their expert, equipped staffs of excavators and decipherers, have been diligently digging into these numerous ruins, not only at Babylon, but at various other points outside of its area, and with encouraging success, that carry our minds back to a period long centuries, if not indeed several thousands of years, before the days of Nebuchadnezzar, and with inscribed and pictured stones of its famous kings.

Here is one of Sargon, a prehistoric king, who is estimated to have lived 3800 B. C. Also one of his son and successor, Naram-Sin, half a century later.

What is called the Law Code of An Ancient King,

Humurabi, of after date, has incited the higher critics to affirm that Moses got his law code from the same source.

At Lagash, Sippara, Telloh, Nippur, where the University of Pennsylvania has been at work for a number of years, and at places elsewhere, brilliant success has attended these efforts in the enrichment of our knowledge of the remote past. They bring us, too, into close touch with the illustrious name of Abraham—a Babylonian name written Aburamu, "Exalted Father."

Abraham was not originally a nomad, but a Babylonian city dweller at "Ur of the Chaldees," a city contiguous to the Persian gulf. In this city, recently excavated, was a great temple dedicated to the worship of Sin, the masculine moon god, from whose cult Sinai is believed to have taken its name. The name of this old moon god city is now known as Mugheir. There are other "finds," here and there, valuable and interesting, too, that for the lack of space we are compelled to pass over.

After all, what is the concrete value of these archaic discoveries, as we read the names of these ruined cities and their rulers? Catch a hazy glimpse of some mighty figure as it flashed its way across the momentary stage of evanescent life in that unchronicled age of the past? What does it really amount to? As Maspero frankly says: "This is not history. This is the mere dust of history."

Even so. But as the vaporous dust of gold makes bullion gold and minted gold, we can mint these nebulous "finds" of prehistoric "dust" into some substantive value for our purpose. We can link them on to that early creation period of which only the chapters of Genesis speak. With invisible fingers they draw aside the portieres of time, of which veritable history is mute, and little by little reconstruct the life of those distant ages, in some fashion at least.

They show us that human life, after all, was cast in the same essential mold as it is with us. It gives us an insight into their methods of business transactions, in the use of documentary evidence, witnesses, oaths, seals. We read of a real estate deal in the sale of a house located on "the broad street of Babylon." So Babylon had its "Broadway" also. A banking firm by the name of "The Egibi Bros." was doing a landoffice business on the basis of a twenty percentum interest in loans.

Here is a tablet that reads very much like a love letter, written in cuneiform script by an ancient swain to a woman with whom he was evidently enamoured: "To Biheya from Gimil Marduk. I write this to inquire after thy health. Let me know how it goes with thee. I am now settled in Babylon, and because I have not seen thee, I am in great

HANNAH

(Lesson for August 13)

Lesson Text: 1 Samuel 1 and 2; Golden Text: Proverbs 31:30

MONDAY

Hannah's Vow. 1 Samuel 1:9-18

Many vows are made in vain. The one who makes a vow may be very sincere at the time the vow is made; but the vow may have been made under stress of some great emotion, either of fear or of adoration; but when the occasion of this emotion has passed the vow is forgotten. It may be a case of "willing spirit, but weak flesh."

In the case of Hannah the vow was not made because of any great passing emotion, but because of a deep-seated sorrow upon which she had pondered and given serious thought and prayer for many years. and she knew that she would be able to keep her vow should the Lord grant her request.

TUESDAY

Hannah's Vow Fulfilled. 1 Samuel 1:21-28

For many years Hannah had been longing for a son as every real Hebrew mother longed, and now as her longing had been gratified as a result of prayer and faith she did not forget her vow. Here is where she showed her superiority over the average run of womankind, for we feel quite sure the average woman would have found some excuse for retaining the child in her own home and perhaps would have justified her action with the excuse that she had made the vow foolishly and that it was all a mistake any way, so the Lord would surely excuse her if she failed to keep this foolishly made vow. But Hannah was not that type of a woman. She had made her vow to the Lord and she would keep it, and in order to keep it she must take her young son to the house of the Lord and leave him there to be his servant so long as he should live.

WEDNESDAY

Hannah's Song. 1 Samuel 2:1-10

When I read this song of Hannah's through this morning I said this is a proof of inspiration, for no common, uneducated Hebrew woman could write such a song unless it was inspired: It is simply a song of thankfulness it is true; but there are many educated people who can not give expression to thankfulness in such exalted language or such perfect imagery as is found in this song. Hannah felt under the deepest obligation to her Lord for his mercies and his loving kindness and she was willing to let others know how she felt.

THURSDAY

A Worthy Woman. Proverbs 31:25-31

Not every woman whose name has been recorded in history can be called worthy. They may have been talented, may have accomplished some really outstanding piece of work, but still that does not make them worthy.

The writer of Proverbs points out in the Scripture lesson for today some of the virtues that make a woman worthy. It may not be easy for a woman to live up to all the requirements of this description, but it surely would be worth striving for by any woman. Hannah must have been a woman of this type.

FRIDAY

Teaching the Children. Deuteronomy 6:1-9

Never before in the history of public education have such efforts been made to raise the standards and the qualifications of the teachers in our public schools as are now being made; and never before has such stress been placed upon the importance of proper training for those who would teach our children in our Bible schools, or Sunday schools as they are most commonly called.

Because of this we are afraid there are altogether too many parents who feel they can shift the responsibility of teaching their children the "way of life" to others who are being paid for that service. This is all a mistake. The things a mother should teach her child can never be delegated to a hired servant.

SATURDAY

An Ideal Household. Ephesians 6:1-9

In altogether too many instances a modern home is simply a place to eat, when convenient, to sleep, sometime after midnight, and to park the car. But this can hardly be called an ideal household. Something more than that is required to measure up to a worthy ideal.

The household described by the apostle is made up of parents, children and servants. But because these three elements are in a home it is not necessarily an ideal. To be ideal the parents, children and servants must all recognize their particular part in making up that household, and each must cheerfully assume their part and give proper recognition to the place and position of each other member of the family.

SUNDAY

The Happy Home. Psalm 128

Some people may think that money, fine buildings, artistic furnishings, and elegant surroundings are all that is necessary to make a happy home.

No greater mistake can be made by any one than to think such thoughts as that. Many of the finest mansions in the world hide some of the most unfortunate family skeletons in their secret closets.

The psalmist says that the head of a home should be one who fears the Lord and walks in his ways, and then he may expect both prosperity and happiness in the home with a wife and children that are both appreciated and appreciative.

"Witnessing Program" Launched at C. E. International Convention

A Summary of the Thirty-fourth International Christian Endeavor Convention, at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, July 8-13, 1933

By Bert H. Davis

Witnessing for Christ was the objective, and in good measure the achievement, of the thirty-fourth International Christian Endeavor Convention, which was held for six days at Milwaukee, with evening attendance of seven thousand or more young persons.

From the convention there has come even now a firm and surging purpose for a nation-wide and perhaps world-wide endeavor of witnessing for Christ "in my own life, and in and through my church, in social justice, in international good will and peace."

In the daytime and evening mass-meetings during the four-day series of conferences (more than 125 separate group meetings in all), in the thirty denominational conferences and rallies, and in the worship and fellowship periods of the convention, a great objective—to re-present Christ's spirit and way in daily life—received inspiring guidance and a practical technic.

The witnessing objective was first proposed by interdenominational local unions of Christian Endeavor societies in Queens and Westchester counties of New York, Allegheny County in Pennsylvania, and elsewhere. The program set before the youth of North American churches and broadened in the conferences of the Milwaukee Convention grows from months of preliminary study and testing in these Eastern areas.

Interpreted for small and large, rural and urban groups alike, and recommended for united organized youth effort, the witnessing program was placed before the convention in the opening meeting by Rev. Daniel A. Poling, D.D., LL.D., president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor and of the World's Christian Endeavor Union. "I Will Be Christian" was the theme and the spirit of Dr. Poling's key-note address, and also of the closing service of the convention, a time of reasoned, whole-hearted decision, which included making known the decision for full-time Christian service by not fewer than eighty young persons.

Walter H. Judd, M.D., came from his present post at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minnesota, to tell simply and most effectively of China's call to him, and what he had tried to do in an inland city of China to carry on a Christian ministry of healing. His personal story, which includes his appreciative comments on Chinese life, is an epic in missions history.

Rev. William Hiram Foulkes, D.D., vice-president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, made a number of vital contributions to the day-by-day program. The union communion service, which he and other officers conducted in fellowship with Milwaukee ministers, was one of the unforgettable experiences of the convention days.

Rev. A. W. Beaven, D.D., president of the Federal Council of Churches, summoned youth to give religious and moral causes a "new deal" in American life. Rev. Merton S. Rice, D.D., a noted Methodist minister of Detroit, outlined clearly and with many instances the task of the Christian church today, to preach and live without compromise the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Rev. James Kelly, D.D., of Glasgow, Scotland, came to America especially to address this convention and to bring as president of the European Christian Endeavor Union a significant message from Hungary. To delegates in mass-meetings and at several luncheon and banquet sessions, and in a most timely address and conference for the one hundred fifty ministers who met daily, Dr. Kelly showed that the spirit of courageous and trusting Christian witness is the spirit of European Christian youth today. It was with deep satisfaction that the executive committee of the World's Christian Endeavor Union began planning for the World's Convention in Budapest, in August, 1934, as the Christian Endeavorers and the Reformed churches of Hungary have strongly urged.

Mrs. Francis E. Clark, Dr. Clark's companion in founding the first young people's society of Christian Endeavor and in his world travels, came at eighty-two to Milwaukee to speak for Christ from her own full and active life. The admiration of the delegates for this tiny and winsome lady could hardly be overstated. Her messages were little gems of Christian witness, usually introduced by stories of the Endeavorers she has known.

At evening sessions several speakers of twenty years or younger added important values to the program. The services of a number of denominational young people's leaders proved almost indispensable to the success of the conference program or "school of the convention." The faculty and conference chairmen met daily for breakfast, and were addressed by Rev. Harry Thomas Stock, D.D., and Dean Albert J. Anthony. They formed a force of approximately seventy persons. Two thousand or more attended daily conferences.

Dr. Poling broadcast each noon a conference for youth through WTMJ of Milwaukee, young members of the International Society's executive committee acting as chairmen for these sessions. Homer Rodeheaver was director of song, aided by a chorus of six hundred, trained and directed by Dr. Daniel Protheroe, Chicago composer and chorus-leader.

Dr. Norman E. Richardson, in both public messages and a daily seminar for teachers, ministers, and parents, ably advanced the cause of Christian education, and answered a host of questions about leadership.

A colorful parade was followed by a public hymn-sing.

The local leadership included as honorary chairman Mr. Frank J. Harwood; as general chairman Mr. Charles E. Houtkamp; and among ministerial leaders and counselors Rev. Howard Agnew Johnston, D.D., Rev. Richard Evans, and Rev. E. Leroy Dakin, D.D.

The next International Convention is scheduled to be held at Philadelphia in the summer of 1935. Three other leading cities gave hearty invitations, including San Francisco, where the Endeavorers convened only two years ago.

President Roosevelt in telegraphing his greetings to the convention particularly welcomed Christian Endeavor's aid as a world-wide movement in increasing understanding and good will among the nations. The convention by resolution declared support for missions, for the cause of temperance education and national prohibition, and for world-wide peace and disarmament, answering the message addressed to them by President Arthur Henderson of the World Disarmament Conference.

A message from Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, who had hoped to be the guest of the convention, but was detained in London, was much appreciated.

Calvary. He has given us his Word as a chart whereby we may find our way to him; but knowing full well how busy the people of the twentieth century would be, and how little time they would find to read; he has also given us the heavens to declare his glory and the firmament to show his handiwork. But alas, how few people of the cities have the time or the opportunity to see even that! The cities are full of the works of man's hands, and little that points to God. Very few of the swarming multitudes of the city ever get their eyes above the street lights to behold the glory of the heavens; and since they do not have the beauties of nature as a fingerboard pointing to God, it places a greater responsibility upon the one who has already found him to lead others to find him too.

The forces of evil are continually active, trying to turn men away from all that is noble and pure and righteous, and these evil forces are more common and prevalent among the masses of the city than in the more isolated rural districts. Man has always failed and come short of the glory of God. He has continually been inventing more and more ways of displeasing him. It is necessary, therefore, that very special effort should be made to counteract the influences of evil, and to save a remnant for the Lord.

Although the need is great and the opportunities are almost without limit in city mission work, it is not to be thought that the work is easy. There are many difficulties connected with bringing the Gospel message to a people whose minds are set more upon pleasure and the sins of the world than upon things which are eternal. We must indeed be wise as serpents and harmless as doves. Paul said, "I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some" (I Cor. 9:22). He was willing to sacrifice himself and adapt his methods to meet the needs of the people, and all for one purpose—that he might save some.

We, too, who are laboring in the cities, should study the field in order to adapt our methods and work to meet the conditions of the people among whom we work; always keeping in mind the one goal of that early city missionary—the salvation of souls. We cannot alter our message or preach something merely for the purpose of satisfying the desires of sinful man, for we have but one message to bring, that is, the message which Paul had for the Corinthian church, yea, for all the churches—the message of Jesus Christ and him crucified. While the message is unalterable, yet, as bearers of the Good News we are in duty bound to bring it to the people in a way which can be understood so that it may work the work of God in the hearts of the people for whom Christ died.

Our city missions are trying to do that work. To what extent they are succeeding will never be fully known until the books are opened and a reckoning is made in heaven.

Various methods are being used to spread the Gospel in the cities. Some may be more effective than others, but each part of the work should support every other phase of activity. There are those who can be reached best in the regular form of church service, where the Gospel is proclaimed in sermon and in song. Many will attend such a service who could not be induced into a more informal type of meeting. While, on the other hand, there are those who will

Witnessing in the Cities

By Harold D. Groh in the Christian Monitor

Many years ago the apostle Paul said to his missionary companion, Barnabas, "Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do" (Acts 15:36). We also have it recorded of Philip that he was called away from a flourishing city mission to preach to an individual on a lonely country road; but it is interesting to note that when that specific task, to which the Holy Spirit had called him, was completed, and he was again free to choose his own course that passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Caesarea. Acts 8:40.

A careful study of the missionary activities of the apostles reveals that their work was, to a large extent, associated with the cities. The commission of our Lord to his apostles was to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. Why, then, did the apostles carry on their work, and establish most of their churches in the cities? For the same reason that the fishermen go out into the places where the fish congregate, to catch the greatest possible number.

The early missionaries took their work seriously (much more so than many of us who live two thousand years later); they felt that it was their duty to accomplish the work which the Master had assigned them, and not to leave it to another generation. Their first thought was to go to those places where they could reach the greatest number of souls in the shortest time.

God's work of salvation is for all people. His love is extended to the ends of the earth. He has revealed himself in the great work of his hands, and particularly in his greatest work which reached its climax on come into an informal group, perhaps in a private home, and hear the Good News, who would not attend a church service. Then, of course, there are always those who will not come at all. This forms the largest group, and the greatest problem in city mission work. The Gospel must be taken to them—right into their homes, as far as that is possible. A survey of local conditions must determine which is the most effective method, or what proportion of effort must be expended on any method which is adopted, to accomplish the best results.

The Sunday school, too, is another means of reaching many who could not be reached in any other way; particularly among the young. Perhaps there is no line of city mission activity at the present time which has met with greater and more universal success than the teaching of the Word to the young in the Sunday schools. The ones who are taught in this way are, mostly, those who are in the plastic years of life and can be easily moulded. Although many leave the Sunday school without showing any definite signs of accepting the truth, the influence of the teachings may remain and produce fruit in after years. Many a person who has wandered so far into sin that one would think the devil already had him in his grasp and had him doomed for eternity, has been brought back to God by the remembrance of a scripture or hymn indelibly written upon his mind in youth. My word . . . shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please," says the Lord in Isaiah 55:11.

Right here is another door of opportunity which should not be neglected. We may not be able to influence a great number of people by personal contact but we can send God's Word forth accompanied by our prayers that the Spirit may direct it to the right place and use it in the work for which it was intended. Portions of Scripture or good Gospel tracts distributed from door to door, or handed out on the street may be the means of turning a sinner from the error of his way and opening his eyes to the light of life.

The opportunities for witnessing in the city are unlimited. The needs are great. The possibilities are wonderful. Let us, therefore, work while it is day, for "the night cometh when no man can work."

AN APPRECIATION OF THE CANTON WORK

It was our good fortune as well as genuine pleasure to worship with the Canton Brethren church, July 22. Having known the pastor, our good friend and brother, J. C. Beal for over two score years, and not having heard him preach for so long a time, —a former classmate as well as our teacher in Ashland College—we have reasons to believe our short visit was mutually beneficial.

We were agreeably surprised to find the church so active in all that we conceive to be a church, with a real, live, practical, sane and Biblical message being delivered to a portion of God's heritage, hungering and thirsting for the true bread of life. Doubtless there are others doing this same noble service, but we wish to stress the importance of it by reporting our impressions of this particular church.

One outstanding feature of this church is the way and manner they make use of the only Book that offers a common sense plan out of the tangled maze into which this world has been plunged, largely, if not wholly, by its neglect and disregard.

I never saw before in all my travels and visitations, the real making use of the Word in such a fashion as is being done in the Canton church. In the Sunday school and in each service each one has his Bible open, pencil in hand, marking the striking verses, bearing on the subject taught by the teachers in the different classes in Sunday school, or their earnest, worthy minister who is able to unfold the great and refreshing truths found only in God's Word.

Many readers of the Evangelist are acquainted with "The Marked Bible," in four different colors. In this church some of the eager listeners bring pencils of red and purple, and other colors so that verses are marked—whole verses in colors—to emphasize and make stand out prominently some vital teaching. We need more intensive Bible study in our churches. These people surely do use, study, mark, and feed on the real book—the Bible.

No wonder he has such a people "with a mind to work," and sacrifice for the spread of the Gospel. I felt like changing my residence to Canton to have the rare treat of having the old Book elucidated and made plain to refresh my soul and inspire me to have a larger part in the evangelization of the world. Perhaps many another Brethren church would do. But truly the world

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

OSCEOLA, INDIANA

The Lord never forgets his own. Accordingly he remembered his people here by bringing Brother R. Paul Miller to us for an evangelistic meeting. The tent was pitched on the church grounds and used for all but two of the services. Its coolness was enjoyed as much as possible and especially so during the first two weeks of scorching weather. The meeting began on the night of June 14 and continued until July 2. Great spiritual battles were fought. Satan came to church as regularly as any and more so than some. And he opposed. But thank God, "greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world." For this reason and by the Grace of God we claim victory.

Attendances were fair for the season, interest good, opposition considerable, victories real. The church has been graciously blessed. We trust the blessings may make it a more profitable servant of the Lord. Of reconsecrations, letters and conversions there were 29. The smallness of the total, however, hardly indicates the good done the church.

Christian fellowship during the services was sweet and a thing long to be remembered. This was my first opportunity to work so personally with Brother Miller. I found it a vastly enriching experience and covet another such opportunity. I thank the Lord for every bit of this time spent together in the service of the Lord. Isolated in our fields all too often we pastors are in grave danger of losing something of our vision. Hence the fellowship and inspiration of such a service may be of as great a value to the pastor as to the people. There can be no doubt that the Lord is using Brother Miller. God's Providence and Grace be with him.

is dying for the want of just such teaching as Brother Beal is giving his people.

Years ago I preached in Canton, when it was a mission. One of the charter members of the Canton church, Sister Eliza Smith, we received into fellowship at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, years ago. We greeted Brother Eikenberry again. He and I were born and reared not far apart,—Flora, Indiana.

I trust all our churches may make a more free use of the study of the Book, not only in the church, but in the homes. "Thy Word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee."

God's blessing, be upon every church that faithfully teaches the Word, and in a very special way upon the Canton Brethren church and her devoted Shepherd. I enjoyed my visit there.

Yours in his Service,

L. A. HAZLETT, Wooster, Ohio.

Into God's Deep

them out and said, "Have faith in God". Where Jesus accomplished his greatest work was where people had the greatest faith, and when his disciples were filled with fear on the storm tossed waves and cried unto Jesus he said, "O ye of little faith." If the Brethren church could fully realize that her work is the work of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that he is the same Christ today, she would not falter and fear in these days when "Men's hearts are failing them for fear" as they are being tossed about." Launch out into the deep and let down your nets".

Obedience to His Will

2. Then we must launch out into God's deep by obedience to his will and commands. Jesus ordered these men to cast their nets out into the deep. They entered a mild protest. They perhaps were expert fishermen in these waters and had tried every method known to fishermen of their day, without results. They felt that they had done all that any one could do and that any more effort was useless. But when they obeyed his orders their nets were filled till they began to break. The result was far beyond their expectation; it was an overwhelming victory. To get that result they had to have Divine guidance. We can boast of our knowledge and wisdom, but with all of the knowledge and wisdom of the world we cannot combat the power of Satan. Jesus Christ is the only individual that has ever been able to successfully match his wits against the arch enemy of the soul of man. So he has the right to command. Man has always gone down in defeat, therefore he should know he has no chance, and that he should obey the orders of the one who has been over the road and has been victorious. Satan had his day, but when the Son of God came forth from the tomb, while Satan, the world and Hell combined their efforts to hold him there, their power was broken, and all those who will come unto him and hear his voice and obey his will, will leave a trail of success that Satan cannot erase.

These men had come to the end of self, their methods had failed. There are times when the best of methods will not work and get the desired results. Sometimes it is good for us to know how frail and weak we are, that we may put more dependence upon God. Jesus said, "I will make you fishers of men." We cannot win men to a higher and holier life without Jesus. We may educate men and give them better surroundings, and teach them to be honest and good citizens and yet they remain sinners without Jesus Christ. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life", Jesus only can save men, but the responsibility of winning them to him, falls upon us. But we cannot win men to that higher and holier life without depending wholly upon Christ.

Into God's Deep Socially

3. We must enter into God's deep socially. The greatest weakness of the church today is her social contacts. This is her greatest opportunity, and yet we are convinced that she has made it a great weakness. If our religion is not a practical religion, it isn't anything. If it has not become part of us, it is worthless. We cannot put it on or lay it aside as we wish. It is something that controls us continually. That is what Paul meant when he said, "For me to live is Christ". Those who are not afraid to launch out into God's deep are interested in everything that Christ is interested in, and his will is their will, his work is their work, and everything they do will reflect the Glory of the Lord. What we do and what we are, cannot be separated, and no one is being fooled. "By their fruits ye shall know them". If our social contacts are not for the church and its Christ, our spiritual life will not be either. Stewardship in fellowship is a great opportunity, but that stewardship must be tempered with stewardship in fellowship with Christ. We cannot be spiritually right and socially wrong.

The privilege of the church is to "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven". The purpose of light is illumination, it reveals everything within its radius, "We are the light of the world." Are we going to let the light shine,

HOLD THOU MY HAND

- J. L. Bowman

*Hold thou my hand, my Saviour dear,
No harm can come if thou art near.
No ills befall, no woes betide,
If in thy presence I abide.*

*Hold thou my hand, my Saviour guide,
I would keep close to thy dear side.
No harm can come, no fears dismay,
If I am with thee all the way.*

*Hold thou my hand, my Saviour friend,
I'll love and serve thee to the end.
A joy or sorrow, night or day,
My friend is with me all the way.*

*Hold thou my hand, Oh Friend of man,
Our journey here is but a span,
But storms will come and tempests blow,
Then I know not which way to go.*

*Hold thou my hand, Saviour divine,
Thy loving mercies round me twine,
At thy dear feet as last I'll fall,
And crown thee Saviour, Lord of all.*

*Hold thou my hand, of Jesus Lord,
I find sweet comfort in thy Word.
Oh rapturous joy when night is past
To meet my Lord in heaven at last.

or are we going to let the darkness put out the light? Get into God's deep, let the light of the glorious gospel of Christ so shine among men that they will be willing to come into the net. While the world is not in sympathy with Christ and his program, yet it does have a certain respect for the man or woman that has the courage to stand for the right in the face of opposition. We cannot stop the tide by going with it. It is an easy thing to drift with the tide, but it takes courage and strength to pull against it, so it is easy to turn from God and go with the world, the flesh and the Devil. But these are the things that we are to oppose because they are against God.

Our social activities may look perfectly innocent on the surface, but anything that takes our attention and draws us away from the church and the program of God is sin, regardless of how innocent it may seem. Sin never reveals its blackness until it is too late. Satan reveals himself as "an angel of light". That is the reason so many Christians will spend so much time in arguing that this or that is right to indulge in. It looks perfectly innocent, and at the same time all of the energy of those who call themselves Christian, is being exhausted in things that are for their own pleasure, and the church has to suffer and souls are being lost. When Jesus commanded to preach the gospel in all the world, it meant in the part of the world where we happen to be as well as anywhere else. These views may seem to be puritanical, but we are convinced that there should be a line drawn between the church and the world, and that this line should be so distinct that all the world can see it. The church has no power to draw with as long as it does the same things the world does. If it does not call men "out from among them," it has no purpose for existence. The life of the church needs to be invested in the social life of the individuals of the church.

Into God's Deep Financially

5. We need to launch out into God's deep financially. In these times of depression as well as in other times if there is to be a curtailment of expenses anywhere, the church budget as a rule is the first to feel the friendly blow of the ax. This is a time of testing, and if you want to know who are the real workers for God, you can get a fairly good idea by searching the records and at the same time keeping an eye on their activities in other directions. Those who are sacrificing to keep the church going with all of its interests are those who are launching out into God's deep. These are the people that feel that God has a program that the world needs, and know that "night is drawing nigh when no man can work" and that God will demand an accounting of our stewardship. If there was ever a time when every church should be open, and every missionary kept on the field and every true minister kept in the service it is today. If the work of the Lord had an equal chance with the business of the world, it would prosper. But it should be at the head of all business. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things will be added unto you." For every dollar invested in the work of the Lord there will be greater returns than will come from any other source. The church should be conservative and seek not to be a burden, but it has a right to at least the same consideration that other organizations have.

In Our Prayer Life

6. We should launch out into God's deep in our prayer life. The spirit of prayer in many of our congregations is like the dove that Noah released from the ark. It finds no resting place. With the spirit of uncertainty that prevails today we ought to welcome every opportunity to go to God in prayer. There is nothing stable and abiding in this world to which we can anchor our hopes. We have pinned our hopes to various things only to find them slipping away. When will we ever learn that God is abiding, and a sure footing for all those that will come unto him through Christ? The cultivation of the prayer life is the developing of our faith and the consciousness of the presence of God. So many Christian people are living as though God were in a far distant place where he was not concerned about us. We need the developing of that God-consciousness. With that development will come a faith in that great personality and a dependence that will lead us out of many difficulties.

We may place the blame for the ills of this world upon this or that, but our firm conviction is that it has lost that God-consciousness. An individual that is ever conscious of the presence of God is one who will seek to please him. He will walk worthy of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Every act among men will be performed with a desire to please God. God is not a myth, or a god that we want to call upon in the time of trouble only, but a God that is always near and a personality that we can well afford to cultivate his acquaintance. The best way to cultivate his acquaintance is in prayer. It is there that we talk with him and he talks with us. Prayer is a lost art among many professors, and altogether too many of our churches make too little of the prayer services, and many can see nothing in prayer that would be worth while opening the church for. When the prayer life of the church is gone, she is shorn of her power. Prayer is reaching up and coming in contact with power that vitalizes and gives power to go out and win men for the Lord. The church that moves in the spirit of prayer is the church that moves men for God. We can well afford to launch out into God's deep in our prayer life.

The Teaching of the Word

6. "Launch out into God's deep and let down your net" in the teaching of his word. These are days when every government is trying everything found in the catalogue to stem the tide of reverses and to get the world out of the great dilemma in which we find ourselves. Social, political and financial programs are being revamped these days to find a remedy for the world's ills. Our educators come along with their findings in the laboratories and make suggestions only to get us deeper and deeper into the mire. Theologians dogmatically declare that they have a workable plan, and then proceed to give some man's view. But when it comes to the teaching of the Word of God it is many times forgotten.

God has a plan for the world and that plan is righteousness. This is not found anywhere else than in his Word. It cannot be forced upon the people by legislation. Every minister of God should feel, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel". Paul told Timothy to "preach the word". We can do well to make more of a study of the Word so that we are able to "Feed the flock of God". If the flock is to thrive, it must have wholesome food, and if we reach into the store house of Satan we cannot expect to get wholesome food. I wonder sometimes as the flock looks up, if we have not failed to feed them the right kind of food and if they are not still hungry. It is the Word that reveals God unto us. It is the word that is his power unto salvation.

The Brethren Church could do no better than to seek to teach the Word of God in its simplicity and purity. When we find some passage of Scripture that is contrary to our ideas and views, we should keep on searching for the revelation of the truth contained therein, and when we find it we will find that it is in keeping with the whole Scripture. Don't be afraid of the Word. Launch out into God's deep in the teaching of it, seeking his guidance. We will find that the stewardship in fellowship is the richest and best experience as the result of "Launching out into God's deep" in all these points we have briefly touched upon. Fellowship is always a sweet experience enjoyed by those of kindred minds and interests and especially those who are engaged in the greatest business in all the world—not only that fellowship with each other but that Fellowship we have with Christ Jesus our Lord. It will be a joy to render an account of our stewardship in the light of that fellowship.

ability to instruct today. Perhaps this accounts for the universally recognized lapse in the moral standards of the time. The Church and the Sunday school have done marvellously, considering the hours they have to make their impression, and the irregularity of the attendance.

In the face of these facts we are confronted with a tremendous task. It is to give new direction to the streams of modern life that affect youth and which we are unable to control. The recreational trends, the movie pastime, the beer flood, the laxity of home control, all currents running away from the Church and religious control. To contemplate the task is discouraging. We may take the boy we can interest and superimpose in the midst of this many-sided education, a program built especially to meet his interests and needs, and with the few, our own as part of the group, try to train leaders who may give direction and goals and divert at least a part of the stream into spiritual channels. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts" (Zech. 4:6).

Man Like God in Christ

in the essential of his Divinely created being. In this man is soon to be Godlike.

What does the redemption in Christ mean to man? That the redemption in Christ Jesus will finally make every individual a REVELATION of God according to his measure of capacity. So each individual of the race, according to Divine intention, should contribute something to final perfection of the Deity to have its perfect out-coming. Perfect human society can only be realized in the economy of grace, for it must consist of perfect individuals. In redemption of the individual, Christ makes provision for the realization of Divine glory. Paul puts it thus—it must be realized in One Life, One Light, One Love. Thus a study of the Scriptures reveals that in the redemptive plan, God has purposed that man shall become like himself in Christ Jesus. Blessed be his name. Amen! Amen!

Signs of Our Lord's Return

The Bible and Social Conditions

This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come.

2 For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy,

3 Without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good,

4 Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God;

5 Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away.

6 For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts,

7 Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. (2 Tim. 3:1-7).

The passage above is a better description of the present day social conditions than all the writings of the sociologists. Consider also that it is said not in one hundred volumes, but in about one hundred words.

The world statesmen tell us that we are in perilous times and that the structure of our very civilization is threatened. So says the Word.

Men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, proud, boasters. This is certainly a picture of the present day. Analyze the mob which moves down the Boulevard on the Lord's day. It is a splendid representation of our modern civilization. The description fits!

Blasphemers are common these days. Things are said about God and Christ today even in religious circles that the harlot of yesterday would fear even to think. Once a few men blasphemed God. Now it is done by nations.

This is a day when children are disobedient to parents. Parents are now supposed to obey their children. Perhaps it is a good thing in some cases. Inside a restaurant near where the writer's car was parked some time ago, sat a young woman at a table. She was holding in one hand a baby perhaps two years old. In the other hand she had her indispensable cigarette. At intervals the mother was attempting to force the baby to put the cigarette in its mouth. The baby was trying frantically to push it away. Disobedient to parents—perhaps it's a good thing.

On the other hand, the sound advice, good teaching, and Christian truth are scorned by some of the children. To be modern and smart, receive no advice from any one. That's the spirit of the world. Find out what dad and mother say about it, and do otherwise. The spirit of the age!

They will be unthankful, unholy and without natural affection in the last days according to the Word of God. Politeness and tact are common, but where is the true gratitude of a sincere heart? Culture and society, yes, but what about the real virtues of the clean, honest life? Affection and love, certainly there is much of it today, for the poodle dog and some other woman's husband. The result is divorces and dog hospitals. Where is the family love and where the love for children which made this nation great? You need not live in Hollywood to know these things are true of the present day.

In the last days they will be true believers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high minded and lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. Have you noticed lately the value of a contract, a treaty between individuals, companies, or nations? Have you noticed the scoffing at the life that is clean and honorable? Have you noticed the wisdom of the wise, and what seems to be almost worship of the human attainments?

Now think carefully. Have you been noticing the large crowds which have been rushing to the churches on Sunday evenings and how the theatres have gone out of business for lack of patronage? Have you noticed? Well, it's only a dream. The hard cold facts of the case are these: The pleasures of the world have so captivated many of the professing people of God, that churches have to close their doors or minister to a mere handful of the old faithfuls. In some places the sermons get shorter and shorter and the services fever and fever with the spiritual life lower and lower and prayer gets less and less. Why? WHY? we ask. Men shall be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

Perhaps some pastor may say, "That's my case exactly, what shall I do?" To leave the subject at hand, let this suggestion be given. Get that faithful two or three busy in real genuine prayer of confession and intercession. Then Preach the Word. Tell about Sodom and Gomorrah, Tyre and Sidon and ... (where you live.) Tell what God wants told for the closing days of this age. Tell men how to be saved, and why salvation is needed. Preach the Word! And perhaps—perhaps, to the surprise of the many, the Lord will bless that evening service with the largest attendance of any in the week even though the theatre is just up the street.

In the last days, they will have a form of godliness but they will deny the power thereof. Here we ourselves need to be most careful. There is much in the Protestant church today which in itself is very good, but which at the same time may not be the power of the Gospel. Here comes this movement and that movement promising to put life and pep in our churches. We are to join here and federate there and cooperate somewhere else. A special day for this and a special day for that until some churches should have a special day to preach the gospel of salvation and another to talk about prayer. There is no time here to enumerate any such movements as are referred to above. It will be sufficient for each of us to ask as to whether or not we are preaching, teaching, explaining and pounding the Word of God. Preach the Word!

The next important admonition dare not be omitted. "From such turn away." The most profitable work some churches could do would be to disconnect, "unfederate" and separate from many unholy alliances and fleshly movements. The true church of power in the last days, MUST turn away from those who have a form of godliness but deny the power thereof.

In the last days, God says that they will be ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. How perfectly this describes MODERN RELIGION! It's one continuous round of religion. Addresses, conferences, committees, retreats, programs and more programs. If some disinterested bystander were to ask, "Why all this?" The answer would doubtless be, "To learn more about international affairs, social justice, racial problems and individual and social development." All of us can profitably learn many things about these. But men can be ever learning of these and never come to a knowledge of THE TRUTH. The Truth is Christ. Christ is the Truth. To preach THE TRUTH the church must PREACH CHRIST. Who is he? Why did he come to this earth? Why did he die on the Cross? Where is he now? What is he doing now? What will he do in the future? To preach the truth is to preach Christ.

In this article we have some things about the social conditions as the Word of God reveals that they shall exist in the last days. To say the least, we are forced to the conclusion that there is a striking similarity between what we see in the social world and what the Word of God reveals will take place socially in the days of the close of the age.

THE MASTER'S WILL

By E. Guy Talbott

*If I can find a spark of good
In cindered hearts of shame;
I'll do the thing the Master would,
And set that spark aflame.*

*What right have I to find a smudge
That mars a stricken heart?
And who gave me the right to judge,
And set myself apart?*

*No! I am one with all mankind,
And if my brother sin,
He might inspect my heart and find
The same dark dross within.*

*So let me look for good, not ill.
In every human soul;
And let me do the Master's will,
And help them find life's goal.*

Little Country Churches

The little country churches
That dot the rustic view—
Though small and unpretentious
Are peaceful havens, too.

The week of care and worry,
The burden, too, of sin,
Are left outside their portals,
For peace and rest within.

No dome or spire imposing,
Nor light from stained glass tall,

But bright and pure the sunbeams
Through plain glass windows fall.

No voice of hired singer
Is borne upon the air,
But grateful hearts express the joy
Of those who gather there.

Oh, little country churches—
Like pure, white sails are seen,
Upon the ocean's billows
Sailing in seas of green!

Signs of Our Lord's Return

By Charles W. Mayes

IV—Ecclesiastical

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts and saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation" (2 Pet. 3:3-4).

This passage plainly reveals what many who profess to be followers of the Lord will be saying in the last days of the church age. Where is the promise of his coming? This question worded in one way or another has been asked of almost every minister who preaches and teaches the Word of God. One may say, "Well, they talked about the coming of the Lord when I was a boy and he hasn't come yet, and everything moves on as it has always moved." Then the passage continues:

"This they are willingly ignorant of . . ." Notice the Word says willingly ignorant. The passage (too long to quote) tells us that things have NOT always continued as they are. Other ages have closed with the judgments of God, why cannot this one!

Opposition to Sound Doctrine

"Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season. reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrines. for the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves, teachers having itching ears, and shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables" 2 Tim. 4:2-4.

Although perhaps not in our Brethren churches, but in many of the churches this is literally taking place today. The old Gospel truths of salvation by Grace through Faith on the basis of the Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ have been superseded by a message of good will, world peace, moral reform and the philosophy of religion. In many places the Deity of Christ, the Virgin Birth, the Substitutionary Atonement and the Resurrection of the Lord Jesus as sound doctrines have been neglected, or are repudiated. Many no longer preach about the reality of sin, the need of regeneration, the fact of future punishment and the reality of Salvation. As a result, boys and girls and men and women are herded into membership in some congregations on Easter Sunday with no knowledge of salvation and in greater ignorance of their lost condition. Jude tells about this bloodless gospel of great swelling words and adds that we are to know that these mockers are to come "in the last time."

The Oxford Group Movement

Some time ago there was much said about the new movement known as the First Century Fellowship, or Buchmanism, or The Oxford Group Movement. Although this movement has enlisted some of the Lord's real people, the leaders do not affirm the doctrines of the Word of God to be the only foundation of truth and redemption. The leaders affirm that what its adherents believe is of no importance, just so they have an experience. Religion thus built upon moral reforms and without emphasizing the truths of the Gospel which are necessary to redemption, is warned against in the Word of God. We are told that in the last days, there will be a "form of godliness" or a form of godly life, but it will deny the power thereof. From such we are told to turn away (2 Tim. 3:5).

Modernism

Modernism is simply a modern form of ancient infidelity which has crept into the teaching of the Protestant church of today. It exists in many and varying degrees. Modernism does not accept the teaching of the Bible concerning itself as being true. Once the authenticity and reliability and the inspiration of the Word of God are denied many other doctrines are denied. Modernism is a testimony to the fact that the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine.

Jehovah's Witnesses

Judge Rutherford, one of the princes of the powers of the air, is today flooding America with his religion. Millions of books are being sold or given away, which are supposed to come from these witnesses of Jehovah. The message of this movement sounds like good Gospel at first but will not stand the light of the Word of God turned upon it. It is one of the false religious systems of the day. As evidence of this a quotation is given from one of Rutherford's books, "Creation," on page 18. "God is not a spirit creature, but he is a spirit Being. The Logos is a spirit creature, and was created by the great Spirit Jehovah. . . . It is therefore entirely proper, according to the Scriptures, that we state that the Logos, now also known as Christ Jesus, the great and mighty Son of God, is a spirit being and the first creature of all of God's creation" (Blackletter mine).

We have here unanswerable evidence that Judge Rutherford does not teach that Christ is anything but a great created being. If Christ is only a created being, then he is not God. Knowing that the Scriptures bear abundant testimony to the Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ, we should plainly state that Judge Rutherford's witnesses, the Russellites, or International Bible Students as they are also called, are representing a false religion which will not endure sound doctrine.

False Religions

"Now the spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils (demons) speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry and commanding to abstain from meats. . . . But refuse profane and old wives fables . . ." (1 Tim. 4:1-3, 7).

Although we cannot here take up an exposition of this passage, we can stop long enough to see a striking similarity between what is here recorded and some of the false cults of the day. Theosophy fits under this revelation. A study of New Thought will reveal it to be a first cousin of Theosophy. In some of their books the philosophy indicates that the advanced adherents are above marriage, and of course believing in the theory of re-incarnations, they discourage the eating of meats, lest one might eat his ancestors! Theosophy, New Thought, Unity and Christian Science all happen to be promulgated by a certain type of women. The Bible seems to have a good description of them—old wives. The passage speaks of the doctrines of demons, and it is a well known fact among the spiritists that a vegetable diet makes one more susceptible to contact with the spirits. It is easy to see again why they forbid the eating of meat.

Bahaiism

Bahaiism is one of the latest fads in oriental religions. Only nominal Christians are deluded by the movement. Its method of approach is to present its doctrines as the same as Christianity only the perfection of it. In reality, bahaiism is unscriptural and anti-christian, and just another of the subtle deceptions of satan in the closing of the age.

Meher Baba Also

"Meher Baba, the Indian spiritual leader whose disciples call him "The Messiah" and "The God-man" left here today for a new crusade in America," states a news article from Bombay, India. "He intends, he said, to break down all religious barriers, destroy America's materialism and amalgamate all creeds into a common element of love." Who would think that Christian people would listen to such stuff! Perhaps they do not, but at least some church members do. This is not only a doctrine of demons, but sounds also like what our Lord said, when he was asked what would be the sign of his coming. He replied, "Take heed that no man deceive you, for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ and shall deceive many" (Matt. 24:4-5).

Jesus Tower in Palestine

A new Y. M. C. A. was recently given by J. N. Jarve "as a memorial and pious offering to the one Lord, God of Christian, Jew and Moslem alike." On the north side is the Hebrew inscription, "The Lord our God is one Lord" (Deut. 6:4). On the south side, from the chapter of Mohammed in the Koran, "There is no God but God." Above its portals is inscribed the great messianic

A Rural Church Survey with Interpretations

The rural church is a problem of wide interest, growing acuteness and great importance. At least forty per cent of the country's population live in rural districts and their spiritual welfare is involved with the fate of the rural church. Church leaders in general and home mission boards in particular are vitally interested, and in many instances are disturbed and discouraged about its future. Every new study of the situation is received with concern and every new slant to the problem is a real contribution. We therefore keenly appreciate the privilege of making public the results of a rural church survey conducted under the direction of Dr. Morris G. Caldwell, professor of Economics and Sociology in Ashland College.

Pertinent Facts about the Communities Surveyed

The survey included 88 churches, covering a radius of 75 miles surrounding Ashland, Ohio. The communities served by the churches investigated vary in size as follows: 17 communities, or 14.5% of the total number contain 5 square miles or less; 28 communities, or 23.1%, are 5 to 10 square miles in size; 16, or 13.2%, are 11 to 15 square miles; and 60, or 49.2%, are 16 square miles and over. So the churches in the main have large fields.

The type of communities surveyed may be of interest. Of the number, 65 or 59.2% are open country communities while 45 or 40.1% are villages. These villages are in the main small: 34, or 62.9% having 500 or less population; 16, or 29.6% having 500 to 1,000 population, only four being larger. This data linked up with the number of churches serving in a community have a story to tell about the probable efficiency and the opportunity for growth of the rural church. In 18 communities, or 12.38% there was only one church in each community; in 64, or 43.8%, there are two churches in each community; in 19, or 13.0%, there are three churches each; in 16, or 11.1%, there are four churches each; and in 29 communities, or 19.8%, there are five or more churches each. These figures indicate one of the weaknesses not merely of rural communities, but of urban communities as well, namely, that of being over-churched. Such a condition certainly is detrimental to a church's future.

The denominations represented in the district surveyed are shown in the following tables:

Denomination	No. of Churches	Percentage
Methodist	35	29.70
Presbyterian	1	00.85
United Brethren	15	11.90
Church of the Brethren	36	31.00
Brethren	4	3.25
Christian	2	1.70
Evangelical	10	7.90
Federated	3	2.50
Baptist	2	1.70
Episcopal	1	0.85
Disciple	5	3.80
Lutheran	3	2.40
Church of God	2	1.70
Community	1	0.85

The denominational connection may not be considered significant when inquiring into the vitality and strength of the rural church. But, while the survey secured no data on this point, we happen to know the situation with regard to the Brethren churches and most of the Church of the Brethren congregations and have made inquiry regarding the other main bodies, and we venture to say that in most instances where the church is displaying strength and vigor, a vital, conservative, evangelistic Gospel message is being preached from the pulpit.

Characteristics of Church Constituency

In the main the churches included in this survey are small in membership, as is usually the case with rural churches. But taking the district over, they show up pretty well from the standpoint of activity. In the churches reporting there are 11,974 active members, or an average of 101.47 in each church. There are also a total of 4,245 inactive members, or an average of 37.24 in each church. While we take courage in the over-a-hundred active members on the average in each church, yet there is disappointment in the fact that the number of inactive members is so large. Practically one out of every four is inactive. That situation is not peculiar to the country church, however, as any city pastor can testify. The percentage of inactivity usually increases with the increase in number of members, which fact would put the larger city church on a poorer rating. But the country situation is bad enough at that point, and if it indicates the proportion of inactivity in the rural church the country over, there is presented a challenge for a re-vitalization of its forces.

But the size in membership of the churches surveyed may be of interest, and we reproduce the following table from the data supplied us by Dr. Caldwell:

Size	No. of Churches	Percentage of Churches	Total membership	Percentage of Membership
0-49	13	10.5	459	2.82
50-99	32	26.6	2195	13.40
100-149	33	27.4	4018	24.78
150-199	21	17.5	3548	21.70
200 & over	22	18.0	6084	37.30

Classification of the membership shows that the rural church can not be dubbed an old-people's church, nor yet a woman's church. There is a goodly percentage of both men and of children. There was a total report of 3,593 male members; 4,363 females; 2,197 children under 15; 4,673 married; and 3,511 single. Further it was revealed that out of 17,040 members, there were 1,053 who had attended college and 507 who were college graduates. That means that the country church membership can no longer be associated in mind with ignorance and back-woodsness, as some are accustomed to do. It means that country folks are no longer to be looked upon as "rubes", uncultured and uneducated. And the preacher who does not take this fact into account when he approaches a country audience is due for some unpleasant disillusionment.

Characteristics of Churches Surveyed

The churches investigated were not young churches. Only two were less than ten years old; eight were from 11 to 20; five from 21 to 30; and 75 were over 31 years. This indicates that very few new churches are being built in the country. The country is not the field for missionary activity today. Our mission funds are being expended almost entirely in the centers of population. The other side of this church-age data is a pointer to stability on the part of the rural church. That three-fourths of them are practically a third of a century old, that they have lived so long and are still functioning actively, indicates strength and vitality that gives promise of a future. Dr. Caldwell said, when asked about the future of the rural church, "It's like the Rock of Ages; it's got abiding qualities; it's going to live."

This prediction is justified by the figures from this survey indicating growth in membership. The membership of the churches more than doubled in the decade that closed with 1930. And the Sunday school membership more than doubled itself twice over. Furthermore, the attendance is encouraging. The fact that 53.14% of the membership is in attendance at the regular church services indicates that the rural minister does not have to preach to empty pews altogether. And the 62.8% of the Sunday school enrollment in regular attendance at the school sessions points to the interest taken in Bible study.

The Sunday School in the Country Church

The Sunday school is the one important auxiliary in the country church, and here it finds its chief source of growth. The Sunday school enrollment is pretty well distributed through the various grades and ages. In the district surveyed, the Cradle Roll is 8.52% of the total enrollment; the Beginners count 7.67%; the Primary department is 9.72; the Junior, 9.24; the Intermediate, 7.78; the Senior 7.25; the Young People's, 15.74; and the Adult, 36.08. It can be seen that the Sunday school is not merely a children's school in the country, as is sometimes the case in the city. The adults number more than a third of the total enrollment, and they with the young people, who are practically of adult age, number about half. That speaks of the vigorous spirit and the family character of the rural school, which are outstanding elements of strength.

The rural school is not grouped as satisfactorily as the average urban school. The most typical country school has not more than two or three group meetings. But it is evident that there is improvement being realized at this point, for almost 48% of the schools have from four to eight separate groups. The teacher situation also is encouraging. While not wholly satisfactory, the country school is not as bad off for teachers as it is generally supposed to be, if this survey is any basis for generalization. Over 40% of the schools have ten or more teachers, and 87.32% have five teachers and more. The country Sunday school teacher is largely untrained as yet, though teacher training has been introduced to the point where about 23% have had some training.

Financial Support and Expenditure

The financial survey is interesting and indicative of progress. Local support receives 71.61% of the finances; home missions 10.56%; foreign missions 14.83%; and education 3%. The 1920 expenditures were an increase of 47.02% over those of 1920. Increase in church expenditure means greater efficiency and broader vision and service.

The methods of financial support are encouraging because so largely Scriptural and systematic. In the churches surveyed 47% of the contributors are said to be tithers, while 53% are non-tithers. The budget system is used in 79.24% of the churches; collection envelopes in 75.93%; and the every-member canvass is used in 77.67%. Churches that approach so near to the Lord's plan for financing his kingdom cannot help prospering, and their future is as certain as their fidelity to God.

Rural Church Equipment

The equipment is not elaborate, for 62.7% of the churches have 2,500 square feet or less. We are not surprised at that, for we are accustomed to think of the country church as small and poorly equipped. It is a fact that is worthy of note that the equipment is larger than we are accustomed to think, it is surprising to learn

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Those who seek knowledge should bear in mind that it is not to be sought for self-gratification, but for equipment for service.

Every Christian has his place in the great temperance campaign and every one is necessary to the success of the whole, and both God and man will hold him responsible for doing his duty.

In a personal communication from Dr. J. C. Beal is a word concerning his work which we dare to quote: "Our work here continues to be blessed of the Holy Spirit. Last Sunday we had four confessions and I baptized one. We just closed one of the best of all our Daily Vacation Bible Schools. I think the attendance was the largest in our history. The Bible school attendance is fine and the attendance at the regular services is good."

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes of the progress of the mission work in Argentina. Notwithstanding the hindrance caused by the extremely cold weather and the consequent falling off in attendance of the children, yet there have been baptisms in a number of missions and candidates being prepared for baptism. The enthusiasm of the people at the new mission of Hernando is especially worthy of note. It seems to be with the people as it is here—some are made more responsive to the Gospel appeal and some are only hardened the more. It is said that Mrs. Eleanor Romanenghi is apparently improving in health, but prayer is still needed for the manifestation of God's healing power more fully and permanently.

The church at Washington, D. C., recently closed a very successful Daily Vacation Bible School, which demonstrated the more certainly the need of a completed church building. They tell us that further growth is impossible until more room is secured. There was a total enrollment at the Vacation School of 163, an average attendance of 114 and the highest single attendance was 140. This is a marked improvement over last year. The missionary spirit was encouraged by the offerings and the object to which they were given. Their program was restricted to Bible study and the outline for the three weeks' course was quite comprehensive. Brother Homer A. Kent is the able pastor of these people.

Dr. Martin Shively, bursar of Ashland College, reports the results of the Educational Day offering up to the close of July, the total to that time being $773.20. This is not a large amount, but of course every little helps, and this little amount would be considerably increased if the fifty-nine congregations that have made no offering would come across with the best that they are able to do. It is a long way to the goal, which was set at $2,500, and it does not seem likely that the goal can be reached, but it will mean a lot if every congregation will do something—its level best, even though that "best" may not be all that might be desired. Let's all cooperate.

Broth'r S. H. Buzard, pastor of the church at Vandergrift, Pennsylvania, reports eight souls baptized since his last report and the last communion service was well attended. The employment situation is improved in their community and happiness and contentment seems to be taking the place of worry and fear (How human it is to worry in the face of distressing circumstances! And how many of us do it, in spite of the promises!) It is good to have reports of this kind begin to come in, reports of improved conditions financially. We hope that Christian people everywhere may endeavor with greater zeal to fulfil the conditions, so that God may pour out his blessings upon us in greater measure. We are all alike, we have been careless and unfaithful far more than we have realized and God has withheld his blessings from us,—we have simply made it impossible for him to bless us as he in his great love has desired to do.

Young People's Training camps are featured in this issue, reports being in from the camp held at Shipshewana, Indiana, and from the one held near Canton, Ohio. Three reports concerning the Shipshewana Camp—Brethren Porte and Vanator and Miss Berkheiser. They are enthusiastic about the success of the camp and the splendid results, results not all temporary by any means. And with equal enthusiasm Brother Floyd Shiery speaks of the Buckeye camp. The testimony of those who attend such camps is beyond contradiction, a great spiritual blessing goes out from these gatherings. They are abundantly worth while and it is a great service that their promoters are rendering. There were 161 students to enroll at Shipshewana, and Miss Berkheiser reminds us that this is three times the enrollment of the first camp held at Shipshewana in 1927. We are told that Shipshewana was taxed to capacity by attendance, and that plans are under way for increasing the capacity for another year. It is a great institution that is being built up at that beautiful Indiana lake. The Buckeye camp was also a remarkable success, this being its first year, it was surprising to learn that 76 students were enrolled. And it was strongly equipped with leadership, there being 18 workers in the camp. Every echo from this camp has been one of satisfaction. Efforts have been made to ensure a repeat next year.

My Experience in the Country Pastorate

A Symposium by

D. A. C. Teeter
J. Milton Bowman
Robert D. Crees
Frank Gehman

D. A. C. TEETER writes of Loree, Indiana Typically Rural and Thrivingly Successful

More than half of my twenty years as a pastor have been in country churches. Some of the time in small towns and some in distinctly rural pastorates. Consequently, the rural churches occupy a "warm spot" in my heart.

However, the Editor has asked for a personal experience of my present pastorate. We are now located in a distinctly rural community where the church and parsonage are in the country. We will soon begin our sixth year as pastor at Loree, Indiana, eight miles south of Peru and fifteen miles north of Kokomo. The congregation is composed mostly of farmers, although we have some business men who attend here. We draw our attendance from a radius of about five miles in each direction, although we have some who come much farther. We are two miles from the town of Bunker Hill which has two churches, five miles from Miami, which has two churches, three miles from McGrawsville with one church, and just one mile north is the Church of the Brethren. Regardless of these our Sunday school attendance is the largest in the county outside the City of Peru. Our church attendance at the morning service is almost as many as we have in Sunday school. The evening services are especially well attended as the Christian Endeavor is vitally interested in this service and they help to make it a success.

I think there is a future for a great many rural churches. It seems to me the outlook at present is better than it was some years ago.

The future of the Loree church seems assured for at least some years, when we look at our young men's class with an average attendance of twenty-five, at the young ladies' class with an average of twenty, and a young married people's class of twenty-eight. And when we go into the large primary department we think the future church here is safe for many years to come.

The members here are of the stable kind, who like to listen to the Word and who have a great influence in the community. As to finances they are situated as most farming communities are at present.

The right kind of leadership is very essential in a rural church. Of course they need a pastor who is interested in rural life, in the Word of God, and in the church. But the church of the future does not depend so much on the pastor as on the Christian leaders in the community.

The Superintendent of the Sunday school here, who has held that place for over twenty-one years, says that last year was the best one in attendance and interest. This speaks well for the future.

Our program is planned one year in advance as nearly as possible. The Sunday school has been having a printed program for the year. This includes committees for all special days, special numbers, etc.

Our revival or evangelistic service is planned almost a year in advance and a committee chosen to secure a speaker and raise funds for the meeting.

The Christian Endeavor has an untiring leader who never finds anything too hard, with God's help, to do. He keeps others enthused. They are sponsoring a mid-week Bible class which has reached the book of Acts in reading the Bible through. They have a monthly social, usually in the church basement, with an attendance of from fifty to sixty, and most of these are in attendance at Sunday evening service.

We find that special evening programs along spiritual lines, given occasionally, adds much to the interest and increases the attendance.

These are given by the Christian Endeavorers, the Woman's Missionary Society, which has willing and competent leaders, or by a Sunday school class. The more we can persuade to help the more helpful the service.

We can persuade to help the more helpful the service. We can persuade some other rural church to start over again, as we firmly believe in the future of the rural church.

Loree, Indiana.

ROBERT D. CREES tells of the work at Brush Valley, Pa.--A Rural Church that is Mother of a Town Church

Country churches are not all alike. Their problems may vary according to their location, type of population, age, and other factors. I have the privilege of serving as pastor of two churches, one in a county-seat town of 8,000 population, and the other 10 miles away in a rural community.

The country church is the oldest, and was the mother of the town church. In the past she has developed strong leaders, who often moved to town and aided in building up the Brethren church there. For many years her growth was sacrificial, training up men and women, and often at the time of their greatest usefulness, surrendering them to serve in other congregations. Now the town church is the larger and stronger and bears the greater part of the burden of supporting a pastor, which in turn helps the struggling country church in her time of need.

The people farm on a small scale, depending mostly on coal and clay mining, brick manufacturing, road construction and river improvement work. Farming is now increasing some because the other sources of revenue have been diminished.

The pastor preached at one church morning and evening one Sunday, then went to the other church the following Sunday for the same schedule of services. Having church every other week was never quite satisfactory, but bad roads prohibited any change till just lately. This summer an improved road has been completed to within half a mile of the church so that the pastor can preach at both churches each Sunday. I preach in the country church one service each Sunday, on alternating mornings and afternoons. Services are held in the town church every other Sunday morning, and every Sunday evening. The advantages of this change are services every Sunday for each church and two extra evening services for the town church to enable it to compete better with the local churches that have full-time preaching services.

One noticeable characteristic of the country church is their faith in their young people. They are always ready and willing to turn leadership over to them, while the town church is somewhat reluctant to let the young people have their chance.

The country church is always a stronghold of Brethrenism. They are staunchly denominational, having grown up in Brethren families in the same community.

This fact is both an asset and a hindrance. Sometimes it is a good thing to have new blood move into a community, even though their traditional beliefs may differ. You rarely hear the country church member say, "All churches are alike. One is as good as another." That would be heresy! They are Brethren, and loyal as can be. To them largely goes the credit for preserving the emphasis upon our denominational ordinances.

The young people's service is always well attended. Cottage Prayer Meetings in different homes are far more popular than prayer services in the church. The Sunday school has the eternal problem of the one-room school, the only advantage being the feeling of solidarity which is fostered, in contrast to the highly graded departmental school with separate assemblies.

The country church has had a glorious past. What of the future? The Pennsylvania District reported 42 active churches two years ago. Now there are 37. The 5 churches that were closed were all country churches. Is their membership accounted for in larger city congregations? Are our churches consolidating, or are these members lost to the denomination altogether?

Kittanning, Pennsylvania.

J. MILTON BOWMAN from his Experience at Sergeantsville and Calvary, N. J. sees hope for the Rural Church

The Sergeantsville and Calvary churches are located twelve miles apart and approximately fifty miles from Philadelphia and New York City, in beautiful Northern New Jersey.

Many individuals and organizations are asking the question, "Does the Country church have a future?" Some think that the rural church has seen its day; that because it has not the modern equipment of the large city church, people are not satisfied any more than they would be in driving a fifteen-year-old car. Since the automobile is so universally used, it is claimed the people drive past the rural church and go to the churches in the larger towns and cities. Likewise, people can stay at home and listen to much better sermons over the radio, especially since only the inexperienced young men, or the real old and discarded preachers, usually occupy the rural pulpit.

In a measure, the above claims are true; the rural church has many problems with which to contend. We find, however, that those who use their cars to go to the city on Sunday, as a rule do not go to the city church. The churches in the larger towns and cities are quite often more poorly attended proportionately, than their rural neighboring churches. We have seen an attendance of fifty in a city church of eight hundred members. Many city churches close down for the entire summer. Recently, one thousand churches have closed completely in New England and they have not all been rural churches, by any means.

It is not unusual to find the rural church doing more, in proportion to its membership, than some of the large city churches, along benevolent lines. For the sake of illustration: Our two little churches averaged last year, approximately five dollars per member above current expenses for benevolent purposes. This is nothing about which to boast, for, if the average rural church member should tithe, our financial problems would be solved.

For years, rural young people have been moving to the city. Many have gone to cities where there is no Brethren church and have been lost to our denomination. We readily see the necessity of an aggressive church Expansion Policy; it would largely absorb this shrinkage.

The rural community must be served! In the past, our denomination concentrated primarily in rural communities, which was a mistake. It should not, however, swing to the other extreme and plant churches in the city to the exclusion of the rural districts. Approximately forty percent of the population is in the country and, if the President's "New Deal" eventually helps the farmer, country life will become attractive enough so that the young people will not only stay in the country but there may be an exodus from the cities. In fact, in this particular locality, many families have moved from the city. Whether this is merely a temporary condition or not, time and economic conditions will tell.

Some of the finest and most loyal Christian people in the world are found in rural communities. Human nature is more or less the same in either city or country and many of the problems are the same. If people really love the Lord, it is not necessary for them to worship in a cathedral. They can use their cars to come to the little church by the side of the road. If the Holy Spirit is within the heart, there will be a strong desire not to neglect the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is. One of our little churches has averaged over fifty percent of its membership at prayer meetings for over a year.

My experience in the rural church has been on the whole, a blessed one. We have had difficulties and discouragements, of course, but there have been many blessings likewise. In my estimation, there is a real future for the rural church.

Sergeantsville, New Jersey.

FRANK GEHMAM of Osceola, Indiana, describes a "Semi-Rural" Church which is a Growing Mission

Discussing the country pastorate from the viewpoint of experience comes almost to being out of my range. My present pastorate is only what one might call semi-rural. Former experiences have been somewhat varied. Perhaps this article could better be entitled, "The Country Church."

Our work here is partly rural, partly suburban. We are located in the industrial section of northern Indiana. We are twelve miles from South Bend, six from Mishawaka and slightly less than that from Elkhart, so you see that we are rather close to industrial centers. Even outside the limits of our little town many of the people depend upon the city industries to afford them a livelihood, living, as they do, on only small patches of ground. A little farther out are those who really farm. It is because of such a situation that I called this work a semi-rural one. Our people are an artisan-farmer-laborer combination. They have been hard hit economically due to both national and local banking and industrial conditions.

Our program here is and is to be, one of giving to the community a church that stands for something in the midst of a world of sin, a church that knows its Lord and does not doubt his Word, a church that puts an equal emphasis upon purity of life and of doctrine; a church that has spiritual life and warmth and believes that the Blood is as able as ever to save repentant sinners. And this is the thing that the successful church, wherever it may be, is going to have to do, be it rural or urban. The days of uncertainty in the pulpit is past for the church that would serve its Lord and Master and would serve its age as well. We need a note of positive preaching in the pulpit today. It is time for the pulpit to teach the pew and that in the riches of God's Word. Why should not the country church, unhampered by many of the things that have proved pitfalls to larger city churches—why should not the country church lead in sounding such a note of positive preaching? If God has given the church a message—and what Christian doubts that he has let us sound the word of that message in such a way that men will at least be convinced that WE believe it. Uncertainty will spell doom and disaster for the future of the Brethren Church. The world may question our right to existence, but loyalty and faithfulness to the teachings of our Lord will prove our right.

What is the future of the country church? All we really know about the future is what God has chosen to tell us, and Christians are not even agreed on the interpretation of that. Most of the rest that we may think we know about the future is plain guesswork, i. e., that which is aside from what God has told us. You may agree with my guesses; you may not. Ten years ago we talked of the country church as though she were a museum specimen or something of that nature. If the Lord tarry his coming another ten years (which we doubt he does), it is almost a safe venture that the country church will be far more prominent in denominational programs than has been the case for years. There seems no present cause to doubt the continued leadership of evangelical city churches. Too, those churches will probably continue to have certain advantages over the country church. But there is a marked decentralization of population today. That was not so prior to the present depression. This decentralization should result in a widened scope in the ministry of the rural church. The cities are not now, and will not for some time to come, absorb our rural youth as has been the case for years back. That single fact in itself is at the same time an encouragement and a responsibility to the country church. The country church of the immediate future will have a larger ministry amongst the youth than for years, provided she makes use of the opportunity that stands right now at her doors.

Again, the problem of unemployment is not going to disappear without leaving some things in its wake—granted that it does disappear. If unemployment be wiped out by means of shorter hours and a division of labor, it is many, many times going to be a case of a steady, industrious and dependable workman giving up a part of his job to another. I am hardly optimistic enough to suppose that increased wage rates will entirely compensate for shorter hours and increased living costs. Consequently either the workman will find his living standards lowered, or he will seek some outlet for those extra hours and for that extra energy that his job no longer uses and does not pay him for. The result may logically be that more and more of the more industrious workers will move their families onto small country places and themselves commute back and forth to the city. Here in the country they will find occupation in their spare hours and also supplement their income by raising chickens, gardens, fruits, etc. This is another opportunity for the future country church. While many rural communities may not directly see this thing come to pass, they will feel the effects of it in that there will be an increasing density of their own populations unless there should be a marked falling off in the birth rate. A denser population and a population with a possibly changed outlook offers to the country church an opportunity that a few years ago she thought she would never have.

Already something has been said about the program for such churches. Let not those churches be deceived into thinking that they must supply a social ministry to their respective communities. Most rural communities are sufficiently organized today for all their social needs which at the most need be only few. If the church should prove her worth, let her emphasize spiritual and not social ministries. People who do not want a spiritual ministry we could scarce hope to satisfy anyhow. Many people only think they want a social ministry. Let them once taste of the riches of fellowship that are in Christ Jesus and share the spiritual warmth that a church can have and no longer will they trouble about the other. (Would to God that everywhere all Brethren churches were really feeding the spiritual lives of their people.)

Now one more word, and that has to do with the requirements of leadership in the future (and present) country church. We may just as well forget about country folks all being "bumpkins" and "hicks." They are far from that on the average. Often—and that not a few times—they are very well informed. Their pursuits call out a line of thought that hardly any other manual occupation does. Many a country audience is as intelligently critical of matters as city audiences. Even in the mountains of Kentucky I seldom preached without having high school and often college students in attendance. To be sure much of that was due to the work of church schools, but it stands as a fact nonetheless. And if that thing is true there, how much more so have we a right to expect it elsewhere? In other words, the country church, as much as the city church, needs intelligent and trained leadership. And the church at large had ought to so reduce the costs of such training that the right sort of men might be available to even the least of the rural churches. They offer us a field that I believe has been too much neglected.

Of course no requirements of leadership are more important than the spiritual. If the country church is to take its place of widening influence, as it might and had ought, it will need, as never before, spirituality. Let its ministry be men who know their Lord and his saving power, men who have some genuine knowledge of the Bible, men who believe that sin is real and that Jesus Christ is able to save from sin. Granted such spiritual leadership the country churches will, in the future, prove an active force in the ministry of the church.

Creed and Conduct that Solves the Problem of Home Training

By George H. Jones

Mother's Creed:

She Believed, that a mother's faith wedded to a father's conduct made the best foundation upon which son could build his character.

She Believed, that mothering a son was a God-given privilege, and that the responsibility obligated her as the most promising home missionary the Church could call.

She Believed, that a boy needed inspiration from her, more than correction.

She Believed, that boys got health from cleanliness of body, mind and spirit.

She Believed, that her boys were just as human as the neighbors.

She Believed, that boys needed just as much intimate friendship as girls, but not leaving such things to chance, she planned for Dad to fit into his place as son's chum.

She Believed, that boys would gang together, and counted the junk in the attic, and the cave in the cellar, as good meeting places for her boys under the right roof.

She Believed, that a mother needed her son's protection and escort, even when her women friends saw no sense in having the "kids around." Strangely, her sons reciprocated.

She Believed, that both schools of psychology were right, about "catching character and teaching character" and never failed to practice, teaching the value of sterling conduct and exposure to the friendship of the best men in the community.

She Believed, that the cost of a little "feed" now and then more than paid for itself, in the pride that lighted up the eyes of her admiring boys, when the gang left.

She Believed, that a boy's life was worth more than a living, never forgetting to warn herself against the best paid professions lest she make money her boy's supreme objective.

Lastly, She Believed, that religion, a mother's in particular, was a boy's holiest memory, so she tried to live it, measuring it without excuse, up to the Word of God—and her boys used her yardstick for themselves.

Father's Conduct:

He Lived as if the job of being a Dad was the biggest job he ever undertook.

He Acted upon the assumption that a boy's rights began just a little ahead of a father's indulgence.

He Chummed with his boys, figuring that his boys ought to know him better than they did the cussing "skate" across the street.

He Demonstrated his fitness as a Dad, when he shared in the labor, but expected son to do his share, when they fished and cooked together on their outings.

He Won son's confidence when he frankly shared the blame for mishaps to boat, canoe and machine that occurred through common carelessness.

He Earned son's respect when he carefully pointed out his own mistakes and hoped that son would not make the same ones.

He Played the games, both of recreation and of life, as if that, at the time, was the all-important job, and was repaid by like conduct upon the part of his sons.

He Shared the fun of making jimcracks with his boy and helped place the bird houses when they had to go where a boy couldn't climb.

He Worked for a living and respected himself and his job. He was repaid by his son's never swerving for "easy money" or "soft snaps." They took pride in sharing hard labor and laughed at "shirks."

He Bought tools to fit up a little workshop for the boys and found in their companionship more joy and inspiration than his neighbor ever got from the country club links.

He Actually Believed that the boy with a broken will was a boy with a broken spirit, and that, to him, was the supreme tragedy of life.

He Went to Church because bluff and hypocrisy were the unpardonable sins to him and strangely enough, his sons grew up to be like their Dad. Folks said, "Chips off the old block"—and the boys were proud of the neighbors' talk.

THE JESUITS TO BE EVICTED FROM JUGOSLAVIA

It will be remembered that the indefatigable clerical politicians were active in Serbia at the time of the outbreak of the Great War in 1914. They seem to have learned no lesson, but the government of Yugoslavia has and is applying this lesson. Within 48 hours of the passage of the new law the Jesuit fathers will have to pass the frontier. Their property is to be auctioned off. Meanwhile in Spain 40 Jesuit colleges, 8 universities, 6 novitiate houses, and various other institutions have been taken by the state and are to be operated as state institutions.—S. S. Times.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK BRIGHTER

The business outlook brightened considerably during the past week. Trade reports indicated that orders poured in from unexpected sources and for amounts unsurpassed for a long time. A further reduction of unemployment was shown, accompanied in many cases by encouraging announcements of wage increases. "It no longer is an opinion that business is on the upgrade, it is a fact," announces Dun and Bradstreet, Inc. "At the same time," they explain, "confusion surrounding the future value of the dollar in the wake of the Administration's inflationary legislation is prompting wholesalers as well as retailers to place orders with considerable caution. Most analysts hold that the success of the fall merchandise season will largely depend upon the prices at which the farmer will be able to sell his produce, together with the relative vitality of mass-purchasing power."—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

that as much as 37.3% of the churches have 2,500 and more square feet of space; that 50% have a seating capacity of 300 and over; and that 18.2% have over nine rooms. There were no single room churches found, though 46.4 % had only two rooms. Others ranged between these two extremes. Most of these country churches are modern in their heating and lighting, 73.9% having furnace heat and 72.6% being lighted with electricity. Most of them also, 69.8% to be exact, have frame buildings, while 30% have stone. All these items point to an equipment that means good service. In fact, the country churches compare quite favorably with the average country home in efficiency of equipment, strength and beauty.

The Rural Minister and his Activities

The average rural minister in this district is not an untrained man of the type a by-gone day, but one whose training commands respect. Not all are college bred, but almost half of them are (48.67%), while 64.22% have taken theological training, and 20% have the bachelor of divinity degree. Besides preaching, one-third teach a Sunday school class and the same percent are engaged in extra-church activities in the community. One of the encouraging features of the rural pastorate from the minister's standpoint is the number of parsonages, there being 65.18% in this survey. Remuneration in kind is had in 27.27% of the cases. All things considered, the rural minister in these parts seems to be pretty well cared for and highly respected.

Problems of the Rural Church

We conclude this discussion of the rural church by appending the list of problems recorded in Dr. Caldwell's survey:

No problem	12.28%
Lack of leadership	51.7 "
Too many churches	32.4 "
Other attractions	47.4 "
Lack of musical talent	27.2 "
Dissension in church	20.1 "
Sunday movies	10.5 "
Church not centrally located	4.8 "
Poor roads	18.4 "
Lack of financial support	57.9 "
Lack of interest in church work	50.0 "
Not enough young people	22.8 "
Lack of Trained S. S. teachers	48.2 "
Lack of knowledge of Bible	38.59 "
Sunday baseball	8.77 "
Lack of cooperation	25.26 "
Other problems	4.8 "

Doubtless these and many other problems that might have been tabulated are hindering the progress and vitality of the country church, and it would be hard to find anywhere the ideal church. But after all, the elements that give encouragement and hope regarding the church of God in rural places are greater than those that tend to obstruct it. Under God, its future is secure.

OUR BIBLE STUDY DEPARTMENT

Miniature Studies in the Divine Library

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey

Acts

"As for this Paulus—we have heard his fame, Indeed; if Christ is not one with him I know not, nor am troubled much to know. Thou canst not think a mere barbarian Jew, As Paulus proves to be, one circumcised, Hath access to a secret held from us? Thou wrongest our philosophy, O King, In stooping to inquire of such an one, As if his answer could impose at all.

He writeth, doth he? Well, and he may write!
 Oh, the Jew findeth scholars! certain slaves
 Who touched on this same isle, preached him and Christ;
 And (as I gathered from a by-stander)
 Their doctrines could be held by no sane man."

Such is the ever-popular yet ever-mistaken belief of the worldlings of every century. The poet who wrote the above lines belonged to one of the Grecian Isles where the wisdom of Socrates, Aristotle, and Plato held sway. But that wisdom did not keep the grandeur of Greece intact, nor did it help to stop the speedier decay of the once glorious Rome.

The story of the spread of the Gospel of Christ is the most thrilling adventure of Church history. No project has ever been so bold, aggressive in its propagation, and effective in its working as that of the dissemination of the good news of salvation. The book of the Acts relates how the intrepid apostles and early followers of the Lord Jesus went forth, bold as lions and harmless as doves, to evangelize the world of their day.

The Changed Disciples

A simple surface reading of the narrative reveals the presence of the Spirit of God empowering the witnesses of the Word with the authority which once belonged to their Saviour and with the grace of angels. The once defeated, despairing, and despondent disciples are pictured as the challengers of the race of the Jews who crucified the Lord of Glory. They are full of courage, vim and vitality in their efforts. They are messengers of hope, joy, love, and peace in the midst of turmoil and persecution. The very change which overtook them so suddenly was in itself a miracle.—Pentecost's miracle.

WHY "The Acts?"

The earliest existing manuscript of the material of the present study labels the sacred story "Acts". The Revised Version (American) bears the title "The Acts", signifying, of course, the acts of apostles and doings of other "gifted" workers of the early church. Manuscripts vary, however, in the title. Some appear with "Acts of the Apostles," "Acts of the Holy Apostles," and "The Acts of the Apostles." None of the titles are wholly satisfactory, yet they are suggestive enough to convey adequately the meaning and intent of the author to the world. Daniel Crawford preferred the picturesque Bantu title, "Words Concerning Deeds." We will do well to remember that these words and deeds are based upon the model life of the ascended and glorified Lord. Through the Comforter, he continued to testify concerning himself—speaking the language of heaven in the midst of the nations.

Author

Dr. Luke, the famous historian-physician and beloved companion of St. Paul, is the writer of the Acts. It is the first authentic Church History. And as a historian Dr. Luke has no peer. "Examine and compare the secular historians," urges the versatile Dr. Schaff, "from Herodotus to Macaulay, and the church historians from Eusebius to Neander, and Luke need not fear a comparison. No history of thirty years has ever been written so truthful and impartial, so important and interesting, so healthy in tone and hopeful in spirit, so aggressive and yet so general, so cheering and inspiring, so replete with lessons of wisdom and encouragement for work in the spreading of the gospel of truth and peace, and yet withal so simple and modest, as the Acts of the Apostles."

Dr. Ramsay and Dr. Harnack have settled the problem of the Lukan authorship of the Gospel and the Acts for the writer. Long before they made it seem so, the history was authentic. But they have handled the difficulties magnificently, especially Dr. Ramsey. Constant tradition, the similar dedications, and the writer's modesty set forth in the "we" sections, conspire to prove the Lukan authorship. If Luke didn't write them, then who did? There is dynamite in that question.

The Holy Spirit

Before Pentecost the Spirit of God always existed in nature, in the Old Testament theocracy, and on the individual believer. The Spirit's work after Pentecost was special in the sense that he had the completed work of Christ to utilize in his ministrations. He was a Guide, Teacher, Comforter, and Infllor of Saints. The book of The Acts is replete with references to his ministry. We will miss the richness of his work if we fail to study the history of the early church.

Missions

The book of the Acts is as excellent a missionary manual as the church will ever possess. Chapters 13 and 14 are filled with missionary methods; chapter 15 contains the missionary message and also presents the messengers; chapters 16 and 17 set forth the missionary needs.

Missions should always begin at home. That is where the early church began. "The Jew first," is a motto sanctioned by the Holy Spirit. It is well to evangelize the heathen everywhere, but let us not forget that added blessing will come to those who remember the needs of Israel. The Brethren church today claim the Lord's blessing at that point, if she so chooses. We should awake to our opportunity in America.

Conclusion

The early church began with and continued in the Spirit. "But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit is come upon you," etc. Today the church yearns for that same power, but she is absolutely unwilling to wait in prayer in the upper rooms. She is too busy setting up organizational machinery and protecting the hierarchs in her midst, to appreciate the work of the Spirit of God in nature and in the individual. Every blowing zephyr or boisterous wind should remind us of the wooing or wounded Spirit. Kingsley understood the doctrine of the good Spirit when he wrote:

"Welcome, wild North-easter!
 Shame it is to see
 Odes to every zephyr,
 Ne'er a verse to thee

Through the black fir forest
 Thunder hard and dry,
 Scattering down the snowflakes
 Off the curdled sky.

Come; and strong within us
 Stir the Viking's blood,
 Bracing brain and sinew;
 Blow, thou wind of God.

And, mark you, when that happens in the church once more, we shall witness a new Pentecost!

Ohio Young People's Camp

By Floyd Shiery

The first Brethren Young People's Camp for the Ohio District was a decided success. Camp Buckeye was located at Loehr Ranch, just northeast of Canton. The camp began Monday evening, July 17th and closed Saturday noon of the same week. We had five big days of class work, with 76 students enrolled. There were 18 workers in the camp.

The camp organization consisted of the following: Dean of the Camp, Floyd W. Shiery; Dean of Boys, Grant McDonald; Dean of Girls, Viola Knoll; Director of Music and Camp Activities, Ray J. Klingensmith; Recreation for Girls, Leah Robinson; Morning Devotions, Everett B. Niswonger; Old Testament Studies, Dr. J. C. Beal; Principles of Teaching, Dorothy Whitted; Sunday School Organization, Dr. G. C. Carpenter; Church History, Raymond Gingrich; Christian Endeavor Work, Tom Hammers; Evening Vespers, Norman Uphouse; Camp Treasurer, A. E. Whitted; Camp Nurse, Anne Sutek; Camp Stenographer, Elizabeth Beal; Camp Cooks, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Whitted, Mrs. G. C. Carpenter, Mrs. F. W. Shiery, and Miss Viola Knoll.

Much credit must be given to Miss Deane of the Y. M. C. A. Cafeteria at Canton for preparing the menus and to Miss Margaret Sutek for supervising the preparation of the meals, which were brought out from Canton by Dr. Beal. Through their generous kindness it was possible to serve the meals at a very reasonable price. The students were charged $2.50 for the five days, plus twenty-five cents extra if they wished to swim. Classes were held out-of-doors under the shade trees. We were fortunate in having a week of very favorable weather.

Many testified, from both the faculty and the student body, to the fine Christian character of the camp. It was a pleasure to live with such a fine group of young people. There were 13 grade school students, 40 high school students, 14 high school graduates, 4 college students, and 5 public school teachers.

There were twelve churches represented, as follows: Ankenytown, 2; Ashland 1; Canton, 14; Ellet, 10; Fairhaven, 8; Homerville, 2; Louisville, 14; Mansfield, 1; Middlebranch, 5; Rittman, 9; Smithville, 9; Sterling, 1.

The services of the Camp had an evangelistic note. On Saturday five accepted Christ as their Savior for the first time, and over twenty consecrated their lives to him. It was the feeling of all in attendance that we were brought closer to our Lord and Master, and that God was glorified there.

At the close of the camp Saturday, a special farewell service was held. The young people were more than eager to see that a camp is held next year. There were tears in the eyes of many when the last song was sung.

The Young People's Camp at Shipshewana

By Fred C. Vanator

Once more the Young People's Camp at Shipshewana has become history. To the pastor who has been looking forward to the days in this camp with his young people this means one of two things: either disappointment because of lack of results among the lives of those in his charge, or, a sense of satisfaction for the amount of good that was done in the lives of those who attended the work of the camp. Surely no one who was present at the camp this year would have any misgivings as to which of the two feelings welled up in the pastor's heart.

I can speak more intimately of the results in the lives of those of my own young people than of the others who were there in the various groups. The camp, the largest in the history of the movement, was also the best in the work done and the influences wrought. When a group of young people of varied dispositions attend a school of the nature of the training camp and takes part in its varied activities and on returning home IMMEDIATELY begin preparations for the return next year of a much larger group, and, at every gathering the Camp is the main topic of conversation, then you can come to no other conclusion than that the camp was a genuine success. Such was the result in the Peru group. The camp did more than merely teach Christian character this year. It brought confession of Christ in the hearts of at least two young people in the camp. Let me tell you about it. At our own cottage we always engaged in one-half hour of devotional service before retiring for the night. One Saturday night one of our number who had never confessed his Master made that good confession. Arrangements were made for the baptism of this young man before the afternoon services on Sunday. It was so announced at the morning service. When we arrived at the water's edge for this service we were approached by another of the young people, a young man from North Liberty, who also desired to make this confession and be baptized. It was a beautiful service in the waters of our beloved Shipshewana.

Yes, Brethren, the Young People's Summer Training Camp at Shipshewana is more than worth while. May it ever increase in its influence and may more and more pastors and teachers catch the vision of what it means to get their young people in touch with the wonderful fellowship of the camp, Peru, Indiana.

The Brethren Training Camp at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana

By Robert F. Porte

The foundation for a future Brethren Church must be established in the hearts and minds of our young people today. Our most thoughtful leaders are recognizing this fact. The training of youth under the leadership of specialists is establishing in the minds of young people a deep respect for the Christian religion. One South Bend young man after telling of the good time we all had at our recent conference said, "I got religious help." My personal contacts with the young people who attended our Shipshewana Camp has convinced me that the effort is not of mere passing influence. Instead of a highly complex mechanism the teaching passes directly from teacher to pupil and deep impressions are being made.

The modern high school youth and senior young people show a more scientific understanding of real Christianity than the older generation. I mean by this that instead of a formal knowledge of Christianity so characteristic of the older generation, there is a profound ethical sense among the younger generation. The fellowship of nearly two hundred young people coming from different communities studying and worshipping and playing together helps to create this fine Christian ethical sense of proportions. I found that the advice and the rebukes from the leaders were not received in the spirit of antagonism but received in the spirit in which the leaders gave them, namely, for the protection of the highest morality and Christian ethics.

Shipshewana Young People's Camp and the other Brethren Camps are doing what our other church conferences have failed to do, namely, to create a group consciousness. Earlier in the year at two rally banquets for young people there were over two hundred at the first and nearly three hundred young people at the second banquet. All these young people live in the north part of the Indiana district. The south part of Indiana has also had as many as two hundred and fifty young people at their young people's rally. These young people are interested in some Christian purpose. They are challenging both pastors and teachers and they are challenging the church as a whole. When we had four hundred delegates at General Conference we hit a high mark but at Shipshewana this year we had 161 young people who paid a fee of fifty cents to attend a week of religious training and fellowship.

In the Brethren Church today we have too many who will not raise two dollars for the church paper, cannot afford to go to National Conference, cannot spare a membership in the Missionary societies and some Brethren churches are economizing by not employing a minister to feed their souls and help win sinners to Christ. Now if some of the Brethren happen to disagree with what I say in paragraph two, they can answer the challenge mentioned in this paragraph. We older people can do better than we are doing. We should do better. There should be easily one thousand people at the coming General Conference. I am proud of the developing army of Christian young people who sit at the feet of our Seminary and College teachers and drink in their lectures and like them. When Seminary teachers and others can talk to 161 young people and move them, something is going to happen in our church. Our future church will emphasize that practical ethical Christianity which made the early Brethren Church a distinct and forceful power in early American history. The present generation merely imitates various types of religious thought. We do not understand each other but our young people do understand each other and they will make the church of tomorrow. My Impressions of Camp Shipshewana-1933

Bernice E. Berkheiser

When asked to give my impressions of the recent young people's camp held at Shipshewana Lake, immediately my thoughts traveled back o'er the brief space of a few years to the first camp conducted at Shipshewana; and incidentally, the first such program ever launched within the brotherhood. Those who attended that first camp may well remember how some of our leaders declared repeatedly that history was being made while we worked together by the pretty lake during that initial week of training.

In "The Brethren Evangelist" dated August 6, 1927, one may find the report given of the first camp held at Shipshewana. From the pen of one reporter we find these words: "Our only regret was that so few, comparatively, had come to learn and to live as Jesus would have us live. Such a program of training is essential to the church's larger growth. However, young and old predicted and pledged themselves to put forth every effort to increase the number, twice, thrice or even four times." And that, my friends, is just the thing that has been done; the recent camp enrollment being three times as large as that of the first camp. Now, one need not regret the fact that so few had come to learn and to live as Jesus would have us live. Nevertheless, we know there are many more young people throughout the Indiana District, and the brotherhood as well, who are needed at Shipshewana. Nothing can be finer for every pastor or young people's leader than to impress their young folks with the fact that they need Shipshewana just as Shipshewana needs them.

It was no small task to care for the large number enrolled when it was necessary to lodge nearly half the group off the camp grounds on the opposite side of the lake. However inconvenient that may seem there is no doubt in the mind of any one who was present but that the camp was a success educationally, socially, and religiously. That big word "cooperation" describes the reason for this success. Practically every group of young people represented was accompanied by the pastor or a sympathetic adult leader who served as the "connecting link" between the faculty and administrators and the student group. Too much thanks cannot be given those folks who were responsible for their own particular groups. But we must not fail to make mention of the young folks themselves. They were the type of young folks—with but few exceptions—who were eager to learn more of the Jesus way of living. They were young folks who were anxious "to increase in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man."

But to quote again from the aforementioned article: "Every day was full of food, fun and faith, beauty, joy and goodness, desire, devotion and determination. There was not the slightest discord. The heartiest cooperation prevailed. God was always near. Friends were constantly present and friendships became increasingly more precious. "One finds that same spirit prevailing in an even more increasing way. Those are the things one still sees, feels and enjoys."

As each departed from this "mountain peak" experience to again live in the valley they must have been singing: "And the joy we share as we tarry there, none other has ever known."

SAMUEL

(Lesson for August 20)

Lesson Text: 1 Samuel 3, 7 and 12; Golden Text: 1 Samuel 12-20

MONDAY

Samuel's Vision. 1 Samuel 3:1-10

Samuel had been waiting upon Eli at the tabernacle for a number of years when this vision appeared to him, supposedly at the age of twelve. Every year his father and mother visited him and brought him his clothing, and without doubt gave him such instruction as a devoted father and mother would give.

The record tells us that Samuel did not know God in such a manner that he would recognize his voice at this time, and thus he was instructed by the aged Eli to address this strange voice the next time it spoke with the words, "Speak Jehovah." Thus the vision was received and permitted to give its startling message to the boy Samuel.

TUESDAY

Samuel's Fidelity. 1 Samuel 12:1-5

Samuel was a faithful judge of Israel for many years, but as age came upon him and his work was turned over to his sons in a large measure, they proved a disappointment; and the children of Israel became dissatisfied, and clamored for a king. This displeased Samuel, but he took the matter before the Lord, and the Lord told him to hearken unto their request; but to tell them just what the result of their demands would be. He faithfully followed the Lord's instructions, and after the king had been anointed to rule over them Samuel called upon the people to witness that he had faithfully performed all his duties; this they gladly did and said "The Lord is witness."

WEDNESDAY

Samuel's Wise Counsel. 1 Samuel 12:14-25

It had not pleased the Lord to grant Israel's request for a king, but the request had been granted, and the people had not yet realized what it would mean to them. It was a wicked thing for them to make this demand of the Lord, and dire consequences would result, unless they were extremely careful of their conduct and of a proper recognition of the place of Jehovah in their affairs even though they now had a king to rule over them. They must be instructed in these things, and Samuel, grieved though he was, did not shirk his task, and in the verses for today's reading wise counsel was given them.

THURSDAY

A Wise Son. Proverbs 1:1-9

It always seems too bad when a son of righteous parents fails to heed their teaching and insists upon going his own willful way without realizing what the outcome will be. We know it is difficult to convince the youth that the opinions and judgment of the older generation are not things that have been outgrown by time, and should be abandoned, that the newer ideas and ideals might have free course in their lives. But the writer of the book of Proverbs says, "My son, hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother." The implication is that a wise son will follow this proverb to the letter.

FRIDAY

Responding to God's Call. Luke 5:27-32

As Samuel followed the call of the Lord in his boyhood and became a mighty man in the Lord's work, so have many others been called in later years, and though many of them have never become famous in any matter, yet they have been faithful, and have done their work.

An outstanding response to a call from God was that of Levi whom Jesus found sitting at "the seat of custom: and he said unto him, Follow me." So Levi left all, rose up and followed him, which is what every one should do when called by God through his Son or his Spirit.

SATURDAY

Faithfulness Rewarded. Revelation 3:7-13

This week's readings and study take us from an early period in the history of God's dealing with his people to the very last divinely revealed accounts of the work of his apostles as recorded in his word. John writes to the faithful followers of the Lord who made up the Philadelphia church and points out to them the things that they may expect from God because they had remained faithful to him. The Lord said "I know thy works, thou hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name." And he promises because they had kept his word he would keep them from temptation. This promise may be claimed by any one who proves faithful to the word of God.

SUNDAY

Security in Jehovah. Psalm 125:1-5

During the period of the recent "bank holiday" one of the bankers of Ashland said to the writer, "This experience has taught me one thing, and that is there is nothing material that is dependable at all. Stocks, bonds, lands, money itself, is not dependable. Only spiritual things have real value after all."

If all America could learn that lesson, then perhaps the "bank holiday" would prove a great blessing after all, for it would then be realized as the psalmist says, "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed." "The Lord is round about his people from henceforth even forever."

MISSIONS

Our Argentina Mission Work

The weather in this part of the world is becoming about as unreliable as people. After a long period of summer weather in the midst of winter we are now having the coldest weather ever recorded in this country. Even to the edge of the tropics there have been hard frosts. The poor people who are not prepared for cold have suffered much. Houses are not heated and the clothing of most is scant. Our different missions are suffering in attendance because so many children lack suitable clothing to come.

However, there have been baptisms in a number of the missions and candidates are preparing in others. Brother Sichel is engaged in an evangelistic campaign in Huinca Renanco, which is arousing great interest.

The new mission in Hernando prepared a program on the eve of the 9th of July, one of the national holidays, which was a great success, there being about 500 people present in spite of the cold. It is inspiring to see the constant enthusiasm of the people in this new mission.

Brother Luis Siccardi has gone to Rosario to help the mission there and if possible secure some kind of employment so as to be self-supporting. His family is still in Rio Cuarto while the family of Brother Sichel is still in Rosaria.

Brother Alfonso Psece, one of our earnest young laymen, is now living at Resistencia in the Chaco, far to the north, but not where Bolivia and Paraguay are fighting, and there he has begun meetings which are well attended. He writes that he is holding three a week in different places and that the interest is growing.

Our daughter Eleanor and her two children are now visiting with us in Almafuerte for a few days. She has been increasing in weight and seemingly is much improved, but is not yet out of danger.

We need the prayers of the friends in the home land not only for her, but also for all the workers and our different missions. The hard times have softened some people and hardened others, but our greatest enemies, the priests, feeling that their power is slipping, are working with greater fury, not to win souls, but to destroy the work of our soul-winners. Their arms are always threats and slanders and such methods of the inquisition as they may still use.

People are losing their old time fear of them, but many are still in bondage and it requires courage for converts to openly confess their faith and identify themselves with us.

If the time is short for these enemies, it is also short for our labors and we need the prayers of all that we may not lose any of the precious time that remains.

We shall pray that the General Conference may be another time of great spiritual blessing to the church in the homeland.

The Hogs of Gadara

A half a dozen tourists, afoot, were on the high hills east of the Sea of Galilee. A thousand feet below are the sacred waters of the little sea. Out yonder we saw a group of animals, and asked if they were wolves. Our guide answered, "They are hogs." Then we remembered the large numbers that were here when Jesus came. They have been resources in that place for two thousand years.

Our hogs in Iowa are the finest ever on the pork market of the world, we say, and they are down to three cents per pound. And the decline in prices engages the legislation of America. The loss of hogs at Gadara was heavy, too, but the interests of the Kingdom of heaven were advanced, and that is first everywhere. Down yonder about the borders of Decapolis a child came out of a hole in the rocks. Some people yet dwell in caves and dens in the rocks, and they cling to them like the Wets in America to their bottles of beer.

But this poor old country is rich in historical events of the nations and of the human race. Down the deep gulches yonder sometimes sweep the swift currents that produce a storm of fury that destroys property and life.

Over yonder Jesus taught the people and called his disciples and chose his apostles. The scene of the great prophet was here.

The people that sat in darkness have seen a great light. Jesus preached the Gospel in

FROM SHORE TO SHORE

By Phebe A. Hanaford

*In childhood's hour with careless joy
 Upon the stream we glide;
 With youth's bright hopes we gayly speed
 To reach the other side.
 From shore to shore, from shore to shore,
 We're gliding on forever:
 Keep watch and ward to guide and guard,
 O Thou who slumberest never.
 Manhood looks forth with careful glance;
 Time steadily plies the oar;
 While old age calmly waits to hear
 The keel upon the shore.
 And when our keel shall grate at last
 Beyond the rolling river,
 Thy praise we'll sing, while loud shall ring
 The fair green shore forever.
 Through storm or calm we glide along;
 We pass from shore to shore;
 With blended tears and smiles we go
 To smile for evermore.
 With love to God and love to man,
 The spirit of the sky,
 The young and old may calmly pass
 To angel-home on high.*

the synagogues of Galilee. And he taught the masses by parables along the shore.

And these same parables of the Kingdom are loved by the children and studied by the philosophers. Another view by the same prophet in this place pictures the desolations of many generations. That desolation has come, and we see it.

When Jesus came to this shore, devils were here and a human derelict. Jesus expelled the devils and the people requested him to quit their land. The derelict became rescued and in his right mind, and became a home missionary and personal evangelist. The results of his influence are not written in pagan Rome, but they are written in heaven. The same Jesus and his disciples have crossed the waters into Europe and America and the messages are widely spread, and everywhere they make the desert to blossom as the rose.—E. W. Curtis in The Watchword.

EVANGELISTS EARNING THEIR LIVING AS MECHANICS

The India Industrial Mission, Cossipore, Calcutta, was organized by Edwin Lawrence, one time an engineer in the firm of Jessop and Company, of Calcutta. Mr. Lawrence was converted in Calcutta, and his attention was soon called to the perversion of education, which has created in the great Indian cities, an educated proletariat of clerks and lawyers. He felt called of the Lord to devote his engineering abilities to the training of Indian Christians as manual workers. This led to the further step of combining manual work with evangelistic work after the fashion of the tentmaker of Tarsus. He believes that India is to be won to Christ, not by paid preachers, but by evangelists earning their living as mechanics.

He went to England and perfected himself in the art of oxy-acetylene welding, at the same time enlisting a band of like-minded helpers.

In 1925 he and Mrs. Lawrence obtained the use of the Church Missionary Society divinity school at Cossipore, then closed. "The first pupil," says Light for the Fighting Forces, organ of the British Christian officers, "was a Brahman who had come in search of a clerical job. He is now a believer and has worked for two years as an artisan. Twenty young men have now passed through this mission into the world, and are earning an average of ninety rupees a month. Twenty-four are in training. The workshops produce patent vermin-proof bedsteads and other kinds of metal furniture, and the excellence of the work has been proved by many mission hospitals. Great stress is laid on regular Bible teaching and evangelistic training. The pupils go out regularly with an experienced missionary to learn to preach in the open air."

This mission is, or will be, more than self-supporting, any profit going toward the gospel work. All teaching is based on a full acceptance of the Bible as the Word of God.—S. S. Times.

A collapsible bridge is used by a railroad in Switzerland in order to avoid destruction by the avalanches which come every winter. The bridge is folded up and protected from the elements during the winter and then put back into use in the spring. Everything in the way of these avalanches is destroyed as was the stone viaduct which used to stand where the bridge is now situated.

SUMMER BIBLE SCHOOL WASHINGTON, D. C.

Yes, the Brethren church in Washington, D. C. needs a larger building. The Sunday school is crowded; more room could be used for the preaching services; and now we write of another phase of our work—the Summer Bible School—which will soon require more room if it continues to grow as much as it has since last year.

The school this year lasted for three weeks, in which time three great divisions of Bible truths were presented to the children in song, missionary stories, Bible verses, Bible study, catechism questions, and stereopticon lectures by our pastor, Rev. H. A. Kent. The course, which was planned and executed by the capable superintendent, Miss Mabel Donaldson, was as follows:

First week—The Life of Christ or New Testament Studies.

Second week—Stories Christ's Mother Taught Him or Old Testament Studies.

Third week—The Second Coming of Christ as Taught in the Whole Bible.

The Junior High Group studied a Junior Teacher Training Course.

No handbook is used in our Summer Bible schools. Experience has taught us that the Word of God is sufficient attraction to interest the children if properly presented to them.

The total enrollment of scholars this year was 163 and the average daily attendance was 114. Last year we had an enrollment of 95 and an average attendance of 72. The largest attendance for any one day this year was 140. There were 61 boys and girls who were present every day.

During the week preceding the opening of the school a house-to-house canvass of the neighborhood around the church was made to invite the parents to send their children to the school. This in addition to other things done to advertise the school, in our opinion had quite a lot to do with the increase of nearly 72% in the enrollment over that of the previous year. We have learned that in order to get people to come to church services these days you must go out after them.

The school closed on Sunday night, July 16th, with commencement exercises at which the children were given an opportunity to demonstrate the many things they had learned from the Word of God, and it was surprising how much they had learned in such a short time. During the three weeks of this school more time was devoted to the teaching of the Bible than is ordinarily spent in teaching the Sunday school lesson in a whole year, and for that reason we are satisfied these children received as much Bible instruction as they would receive in a whole year in the Sunday school. When we consider how little the Bible is taught in many of the homes these days we can not help but realize the great need of a school of this sort. At the commencement exercises the house was filled to its capacity and more, many parents we had not seen in the church before, being present to hear their children recite. This service furnished an opportunity to become acquainted with them and to interest them in the work of the church.

The offerings given by the children amounted to $15.09 which amount was sent as a love gift to the Romanenghi children in South America. The total cost of conducting the school was only $28.07 including a little gift to the superintendent in appreciation of her faithful services and the fine way in which she conducted the school. In this connection we might say that the services of the 19 teachers and helpers were given voluntarily and gladly unto this great work without compensation.

To any church which has never conducted a school of this kind we would like to recommend that you hold one next summer if it is too late this year, for we are certain that after seeing the great work that can be done in such a school and realizing the great need for one in each community, you will want to conduct one each year.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

It is a pleasure to make known that the enrollment for the second term of the summer school is satisfactory, being 159. This is smaller than last year but about the average or above for most years. The teaching staff now consists wholly of the regular college faculty. Miss Stout, dean of women, came from her home in Pleasant Hill to teach her courses this term.

Dr. Haun and others were at Shippewana for the first week while others carried their work. They report an exceptionally fine attendance and spirit at this camp.

A letter from Professor McClain in this mail brings information that he and Mrs. McClain are having a pleasant and profitable summer among our California churches, especially at the Southern California Conference.

We are receiving more inquiries than usual and many applications. If these may be taken as an indication for next year's attendance, we will have our usual number of students. However, everyone must realize that this is wholly problematical.

The President's Code affects us here but little, only applying to our clerks, dormitory help, and janitors but we were for the most part above and beyond that code for many years anyway. Still I signed the papers.

The income from the summer school is a life-saver in more important ways than one. It has enabled us to clean up our outstanding obligations with a slight margin left over. Thus we can start the new year with a clean slate. The Saturday courses and the summer school are so important that nothing dare happen to endanger them in any way. If the school here consisted only of the regular winter semesters, it would be pretty slim. As it is, there are as many students on the campus during the summer as during the winter; hence the place is always alive. If we were to close in June and open in September with no summer sessions, the place would not only look ragged but other conditions would not be good. The summer school has made headway and grown for several reasons, among them being, low costs, full recognition, and able faculty. This is its fifteenth year. The brief history of it is this: When it became known that President Furry was to resign in 1919, I wrote to Wm. Kolb, then president of the Board, asking permission to start the summer school. This was granted and along with Dean Miller we canvassed the county and also employed several teachers. The only teachers on the staff today who were present then, are Dean Miller and myself. It was not known then who would succeed President Furry, but we went ahead with arrangements any way. As it turned out, about 80 students came, the tuition being $12.00 for the term. That amount of money divided among the teachers gave no one much, except the superintendent of the Ashland schools (J. A. McDowell) whom we had to guarantee $250.00 for the thirty days,—this we did wholly on faith.

Thus slowly we have grown until we are now among the largest summer schools in Ohio, outside the state schools. The school has made headway, not on "slogans," (one school had the slogan, "a thousand or bust") nor on promises and dubious claims, nor by proselyting, nor by employing some one famous and much-talked-of "educator" but on quiet merit. I count the growth and the administration and organization of the summer school as a distinct achievement on the part of those who have had part in it. The total enrollment for the summer, counting no name more than once, is 294.

Dr. Ernest Miller (M.D.), a student of former years, recently paid the College a visit on his way to his internship in Ford Hospital, Detroit.

The summer school will close the week before our National Conference. Many of the teachers are planning on attending. From there, I expect to go to the World's Fair in Chicago.

The fall semester opens, Tuesday, September 12th. EDWIN E. JACOBS.

VANDEGRIFT, PENNSYLVANIA

The church in this place is moving along as usual.

Brother Yett was with us Friday evening, the 21st of July with his pictures of South America. Those who saw them and heard Brother Yett report a pleasure and benefit from the meeting.

In April we baptized eight precious souls and our Easter communion service was well attended.

The financial situation is coming along better now. Most of our folks have better and more steady employment now. We hope the depression is over.

The church services are attended as well as usual. The spirituality of the folks seems up to par. Every one is busy in garden and mill. The folks coming with their little families to the services in God's house are more happy and less worried, for which we thank God and take courage.

We ask an interest in the prayers of the Lord's folks. We pray for the peace and prosperity of all. Sometimes we may lack in Paul's learning "To be content in whatever state we are," but like Christ we can and do pray that the Triune God may be glorified in our lives.

CENTURY OF PROGRESS MEETINGS AT MOODY INSTITUTE

Although vacation is on in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago during August, yet the dormitories and dining room are open, and meetings for the spiritual life are held twice a day, morning and evening, to accommodate hold-over students and Christian visitors to the Fair, of which the Institute has very many.

The program for the month is in charge of Evangelist Oscar Lowry, and Mr. George S. Schuler of the music faculty of the Institute. Other teachers and preachers engaged for the month include Rev. Charles R. Scafe, D.D., formerly of Detroit, Michigan. Rev. W. H. Rogers, D.D., pastor of the Hinson Memorial Baptist church, Portland, Oregon, and the well-known Bible expositor, Rev. B. E. Sutcliffe, D.D.

The meetings are all held in the Auditorium of the Institute at the corner of North LaSalle Street and Chicago Avenue.

YOUMANS DISCUSSES ALCOHOL AS POISON

He Cites Numerous Instances of Its Bad Effect on Body

(The following article is a clipping from the Kansas City, Kansas, Maryville, Mo., sent by Elder J. S. C. Spiekerman.)

Raymond C. Youmans, member of the speakers' bureau of the Kansas Allied Forces for Prohibition, spoke on "Alcohol—A Poison" Wednesday night before a meeting attended by twenty-two members of the Wyandotte county speakers' bureau at the local Y. M. C. A.

Youmans said that society's efforts to regulate, control and prohibit the alcoholic beverage traffic was the result of the disastrous effects of alcohol on the human body and mind.

"Alcohol is a poison," Youmans declared. "It is not a food, but rather a poisonous waste product of yeast plants. It is not a stimulant, although the illusion of stimulation is brought about through deadening the inhibitory nerve centers. Alcohol attacks the basic cells composing the human body, and interferes with the life processes, and in this respect it is in the same class with chloroform, carbolic acid and prussic acid."

"A Deadly Poison"

The speaker said that while science has records of people being revived after taking eight ounces of ether and twenty-two ounces of chloroform, there is no record of a man surviving as much as five ounces of alcohol.

Then Youmans quoted from several eminent authorities on the effects of alcohol on the human body:

Dr. Haven Emerson, commissioner of health of New York, says, "Alcohol is a depressant habit-forming narcotic drug. It is a protoplasmic poison. It causes disease. It increases liability to accidents and delays recovery. It deteriorates emotional and nervous control. It causes death from acute and chronic poisoning."

"No Disease Cure"

Dr. Howard Kelly of Johns Hopkins university, says, "There is no disease in the world for which alcohol is a cure . . . It does undeniably cause thousands of cases of disease. Its use is ruinous to the kidneys, liver, heart, and smaller blood vessels, and gives rise to that most common fatality, high blood pressure."

Dr. Gustave von Bunge, physician and professor of physiology, University of Basle, says, "Beer is most harmful of all alcoholic drinks. . . . No other leads so easily to intemperance."

"The consumption of alcoholic beverages has been a problem for generations," Youmans declared. "In 1911 before state prohibition became general, the annual per capita consumption of alcoholic beverages in the United States was over 22 gallons, not counting home brew and bootleg liquor that escaped taxation."

Consumption Decreased

"No informed person will say that our present consumption even approaches that figure. Deaths from alcoholism have decreased nearly 50 per cent according to the U. S. bureau of vital statistics," Youmans pointed out.

Youmans denied that the present campaign against prohibition was developed or financed by those who wish to drink. He told his audience that the movement was organized and backed by those who intend making money out of the sale and manufacture of liquor, being willing, he said, to profit by the degradation of men and women and the ruination of children, brought into the world by alcohol consuming parents.

Then into epigrammatic sentences he threw the meat of the cause against liquor:

You can repeal the prohibition laws, but you cannot repeal the effects of alcoholic beverages.

You can repeal prohibition, but you can't repeal the fact that liquor steals away a man's brains and lessens his efficiency.

Can't Erase Misery

You may erase present legislation, but you will not erase the liquor problem.

You can legalize the liquor traffic with its advertising, merchandising, free samples and alluring salesmanship, but you can't change the results from drinking beer, wine or whisky.

Even the mighty president of the United States cannot alter the law of cause and effect as it touches alcohol by asking people to legalize the traffic because his party platform calls for it.

You can't change the nature of a bootlegger by giving him a license.

Permanent prosperity cannot be built upon destructive occupations. It cannot thrive on gambling, vice, liquor or anything else which degrades and destroys.

We cannot drink ourselves into employment.

We cannot drink ourselves into possession of a savings account.

Liquor consumption does not increase the buying power of anybody.

Christian people are concerned with the elimination of the liquor even though it takes a hundred years of effort, because that traffic is contrary to every notion expressed by the Kingdom of God.

HOW BOOZE PLANS TO MAKE DRINKERS

A Delaware Beer Party

A few days before the Delaware election, a business house located within one block of the police station in Wilmington sent an invitation through the U. S. mails. We have a copy of it addressed to a boy fifteen years of age. The invitation reads:

"The _____ Company invites you to come to their store and bring a boy friend for an evening of entertainment, of moving pictures, of Motor Cycles, Sports, Thrills and Spills, Hill Climbs and Races.

"REFRESHMENTS. 3.2 right out of the keg. It is our treat."

A friend of one of the boys who received an invitation asked a young man to attend this "party" as an observer. We have his affidavit of what he saw there. The following quotations are from it:

Extracts from an Affidavit Report of the Beer Party

"Thirty or more boys were present, ranging from fifteen to twenty-two years of age, I would judge from their appearance. The majority of them were minors. A keg of beer advertised to be 3.2 per cent alcohol, was mounted on the side of a motorcycle and wheeled into the open. The boys were invited to step up to the spigot by the host, who added: "If any of you fellows are minors, there is some Coca-cola for you." This announcement was greeted in the spirit with which it was made—with a Bronx cheer.

"There was no restriction on the number of times we could have access to the faucet. As nearly as I could keep track, one boy in his teens must have gone at least eight or ten times.

"After about fifteen minutes of drinking the party began to liven up and finally it became quite noisy, so as to attract the attention of some half dozen people who watched us over a high wooden fence.

"After the flow of suds was underway, the boys became talkative. 'This makes six for me,' boasted one lad. 'Don't say anything about this at home,' said another. 'I see you are getting to be quite a drinker,' one boy greeted another. 'I am getting on to it,' the other replied.

"One young fellow moved over to me, where I was munching a pretzel. He timidly admitted that he did not like beer. 'Look, he drinks Coke,' said a jeering voice and some four or five of us who did not drink beer were placed in the category of 'sissies.'

"Out in the open lot were six powerful motorcycles which some of these boys were expecting to ride home after the party.

"A boy of about sixteen years, dressed in a Western Union uniform, was making frequent returns to the keg and belching frequently. He would go on duty afterwards, he said, if he were able. He was the owner of one of the wheels parked in the open.

"I noticed two young fellows drawn off to a dark corner of the lot and drinking from a flat bottle which contained, evidently, more kick in it than the 3.2 beer.'"—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

Some one has said that if he were to be banished to a desert island and was given the opportunity to take a limited number of books along, one volume which he would select would be a hymnal. A few of the hymns may be too mournful, and we can omit them. But we cannot afford to neglect those grand hymns which have inspired the Church down through the years. They are a heritage to be preserved in reverence as holy inspirations.

Said the poet Tennyson concerning a Sunday experience, "It was a good sermon; I applied it to myself." Would there ever be any really poor sermons if we applied them to ourselves? We may be looking to the sermon to startle us, to please our fancy, to entertain us, or to put us to sleep. If it is measured by these standards, a sermon may not receive a high rating according to our thinking. But suppose that we tried to apply the lessons which are delivered from the sacred desk from Sunday to Sunday; we should soon be counting the good sermons on the fingers of both hands.

SIGNS OF OUR LORD'S RETURN

prophecy of Isaiah 9:6. The corner stone carries the inscription, "These buildings are given to the glory of God and in remembrance of his only begotten son..." It is said that there is no intention in anybody's mind of using this structure or its facilities for undermining the faith of Jews or Moslems, who like Christians honor their holy places in the Palestinian city... The Y. M. C. A. is wholly of a piece with the liberalism that is coming to dominate the Christian fields everywhere on earth."

Knowing that if Jesus Christ is not the Lord of all, he is not Lord at all, we see from this, the rapid decay of Christianity. This is what happens when they will not endure sound doctrine.

The Free Church of America

Recently the plan was announced by the Unitarian and Universalist denominations to form one great body to be known as THE FREE CHURCH OF AMERICA. It is thought that a number of other denominations will later be brought into line.

"The Christian Register" (Unitarian) says:

"We are coming to a new day which is in fact the advent of a religious revolution away forever from all authoritarian standards.

"Beliefs in doctrinal matters are today less a requirement for fellowship, both within and outside Christianity, than they have ever been. ... This means that in due time, the deed will be followed by the proper doctrine. That is the way all real progress comes."

The Episcopal Church

It is a well known fact that some of the prominent leaders of the Episcopal Church have gone to the Roman Catholic Church. It is also well known that the Pope has invited and expects many more non-catholics to come back to what is called the mother church. Then it would be one fold and one shepherd.

As for the uniting of various faiths, the Oxford Group Movement purposes to make its contribution. Such a motive is applauded in many circles today.

A. J. Russell, writing in "For Sinners Only," makes this statement on page 1. "It (the Oxford Movement) may speed up the reunion of Christendom, even Catholic and Protestant." Mr. Russell although he may not realize it is speaking true to the spirit of the age. Everywhere there is the talk about Christian Unity. Some people think the millennium has about arrived when they see a Jewish Rabbi, a Catholic Priest and a Protestant Minister on the same platform together.

Meaning of These Things

Every Bible student knows that the true Church of Jesus Christ which is made up of all the saved people from the day of Pentecost to the coming of the Lord will be taken to heaven when the Lord Jesus Christ comes the second time. At this event redemption shall have been completed for the church spirit, soul and body. When the true Church is taken to heaven in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, there will be a great mass of professing religion on the earth.

With the above truths in mind, we may turn to the Book of Revelation and notice what the Lord says to the apostate church of Thyatira. This apostate church has Jezebel, the woman who calls herself a prophetess, to dominate her. Adultery and fornication in this message to the churches in the book of Revelation refer primarily to spiritual fornication, the uniting of two spiritual forces which do not belong together, or the uniting of two things which do not belong together. It has been the purpose of the Roman Catholic Church in all the centuries to unite the church and the state, the church and the world. The uniting of the church and the world is not limited to the Roman Catholic church alone, however.

Now the judgment pronounced upon Jezebel is that she shall BE CAST INTO GREAT TRIBULATION, AND THEM THAT COMMIT ADULTERY WITH HER (Rev. 2:22). This reveals to us that there will be a great apostate church made up of all those who have not belonged to the true church and such will be cast into great tribulation. Of the judgment which will be passed upon this federated apostate church, we read in Revelation 17.

But some one asks about the true church, made up of the true believers, the true people of God. Concerning this true church we read, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth" (Rev. 3:10).

It will be remembered that the Great Tribulation so mentioned in the Bible is the judgment and wrath of God poured out upon an unbelieving world. We have then additional evidence that the true church will not pass through that day of tribulation for we read, "For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. 5:9).

The Spirit of Federation

We see abroad a spirit of federation in connection with great portions of the professing church today. Many are saying that all churches should unite, get together, cooperate and federate. It is always well to cooperate and unite when unity is on the basis of the truth of the Bible. But the true Christian and the true congregation has no business uniting with every form of religion which comes along in the name of Christ.

There are even now many Christs in the world, many false Christs and many false theories about the Christ of the Bible. But we must not federate, we must separate from every false doctrine and false theory about the Christ of the Bible. The Brethren churches can well cooperate with those who preach the faith "once delivered to the saints" (Jude 3).

But with much which calls itself Christian today, we must not make alliances for these movements deny the authenticity, reliability and inspiration of the Word of God. When the apostate church comes to her supremacy and the Antichrist comes into power, (after the true church is taken to be with her Lord) then there will be a great federation of religion. With this sort the Lord's people should have no part, even today.

In Conclusion

We have seen some things concerning some of the cults and religious movements of the present day. We have scarcely begun. In Los Angeles alone there is said to be a new religion born every day. Yet they are NOT new. Every one has been anticipated by the statements in the Word of God.

We have also called attention to the fact that many today will not endure sound doctrine. The denial of the faith is as common as political scandal. We are compelled to admit that these things are similar to that condition which the Word of God reveals shall take place at the close of this age.

The Brethren Church

Brethren churches have a great privilege in these days. Whereas the Brethren Church will faithfully preach and teach the Word of God, it is sure to be mightily blessed of the Lord. There is no denomination today that has an advantage equal to that of the Brethren Church. We must continue to stand unitedly for sound doctrine and the exposition of the Word of God. If our Lord shall tarry, may he keep us faithful to his blessed word!

Paul said that the church at Thessalonica was a great church because they "turned to God from idols, to serve the living and the true God and to wait for his Son from heaven."

RIN AND THE SLIDING BOARD

By Phebe Plato

Written for The Christian-Evangelist

Which would you rather do, slide down the sliding board or go swimming? Maybe you are like lots of other boys and girls and would rather do both at the same time.

One very hot Saturday afternoon a great many boys and girls, men and women decided that the best way to cool off was to go swimming in the safest place they could find. On that same Saturday afternoon two little boys, Jimmie and Paul who lived near the Chesapeake Bay thought how nice it would be if they should take their pet dog Rin into the water with them.

So they whistled to Rin, fastened his strap to his collar and started for the beach. They hustled into their bathing suits and in next to no time were ready for a fine swim. They led Rin out into the water with them, and were as happy as happy could be to find that Rin was about the best swimmer of the three.

"Jimmie," said Paul, "you had just as well take the strap back to the land, for we won't have to worry about Rin."

So Jimmie hurried back to the sand with the strap. Now Jimmie was a good swimmer and he was one of those boys who like to slide down the sliding board and go swimming at the same time, so hardly thinking what he was doing he swam out to the sliding board. He walked up all the twenty-seven slippery steps and just as he was about to start down the slide he heard a shout from Paul.

"Jimmie, sit still there, Rin is climbing up the steps!"

Sure enough, when Jimmie turned around he saw Rin coming slowly up the long flight of steps. The poor dog was having a hard time of it, so Jimmie called to Paul to climb up in back of Rin to keep him from falling.

All the swimmers far out in the water stopped to watch the dog. Finally he reached the top. Jimmie tried to put his arm around him and take him down the slide with him, but Rin seemed to have an entirely different idea. He waited until Jimmie went down the slide, and then he sat down just where Jimmie had been.

He looked down the long slide into the water, he looked to the right, to the left and seemed for a minute to wish he had stayed in the water. But just as he thought of trying to walk down the steps again, he heard Jimmie's voice "Here, Rin, here boy, you're all right, come on down." So Rin hesitated no longer, down the slide he went, splash into the water and came up with what looked to be a real dog-grin on his face.

The people all cheered, Paul and Jimmie hugged him tightly and altogether Rin was a much petted dog.

But cheering and petting were not what Rin wanted on this hot Saturday afternoon. The very first chance he got he was back up on the sliding board. This time the boys had to call to him again to get him to come down. When he had splashed into the water Jimmie thought that Rin had had enough swimming. He called him out on the beach and left him to shake himself dry.

Rin watched the swimmers for a while and then very quietly he slipped out into the water again. Almost before anyone had seen him he was on the steps of the sliding board again. Some one shouted for Paul to help him up. When he got to the top this time it must have looked longer than before, or the shouts and calls of so many people must have confused him, for he turned around and tried his best to crawl down the steps again. But Paul was there, and talked to him and petted him until he was ready to turn around and have the slide which he had come for. This time Jimmie caught him at the bottom of the sliding board. He noticed that Rin was tired, so he carried him to the shore and fastened him up until they were ready to go home.

Now this is a true story!

God's Code for His Church

Taken from the book "Forbid Him
Not," by James I.
Vance, D. D., published by Fleming H.
Revell Co., New York.

"There is something greater for a nation than to save itself. The ethical code for the individual is not less binding on the nation. Christ was uttering a lesson for individuals when he said: 'Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone,' but was he not teaching nations also? Shall we say that what is right for one man is wrong for a hundred million, that what is moral for the individual is immoral for the nation, that what God says to one man he revises and reverses when he speaks to a crowd? No, there is but one morality. It is the same for all colours, creeds, nationalities and worlds. God's code is international."

Signs of the Times

by
Alva J. McClain

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

The District Conference of Southern California churches closed its ten days of meetings last Sunday night. This was the 23rd conference and, I am told, was the best attended in its history. Several times the Long Beach church was filled, which means over a thousand people. Such an attendance is quite remarkable considering the fact that the district has only eight churches.

I was asked once for the secret of the success of this conference. There are two main reasons: First, it is above all a Bible Conference. Business is confined to two afternoon sessions. On the other days the entire time is used for Bible studies and addresses, two in the forenoon, two in the afternoon, and one at night. You cannot feed the souls of men on financial reports. People are hungry for the Word, and they come where there is food. Spiritual members of other denominations, often starved modernistic preachers, know they can find the Bread of Life at a Brethren Conference out here.

Second, the pastors have taught their people to love the Bible and study it. Hence the Bible teacher here is always certain to receive an enthusiastic hearing.

I shall not attempt any report of the conference, as that is to be given by Brother Pearce, the Conference Secretary. It was a privilege to renew our fellowship here with Christian friends of past years, and to teach the Word among them. Nearly all the addresses this year were given by Brethren ministers. Members of the Ashland Seminary Quartette gave a good account of themselves, both in singing and preaching.

AFTER the Earthquake

It is remarkable how quickly the devastated areas here have recovered from the effects of the recent quake. The earth seems to have settled down, though a couple of very slight tremors have been felt since our arrival. Life seems to go on normally. You may see marks on the buildings here and there, but people do not talk much about it. The large crowds at the Conference demonstrated that people do not fear to enter public buildings.

Wanting to see the worst effects, on our way to Long Beach we drove through Compton which was said to have been almost the center of the quake. People had reported that two weeks afterward this little city was almost a "ghost town." We found it the center of bustling energy. If you had not known of the quake, you might have supposed that it was merely experiencing an unusual revival of building.

The human spirit, fortunately, is so created that it recovers quickly from the shock of catastrophe.

SOME Strange Tales.

If you question the people who passed through the earthquake, you hear strange things, some humorous, others tragic.

The classic story concerns the colored man who was in the bath tub when the shaking began. Panic-stricken he ran out into the street, where a pedestrian colled his attention to the fact that he was unclothed. He at once rushed back into the house for clothing, and had barely gotten into his room when the earth began to rock again. Out he came on the run, this time with a straw hat on his head. I do not know what happened after that. Those who tell the story always end it at this point.

But here is a story that is true: After the initial shocks, Brother Bauman went over to the church to see what had happened. Coming finally to his study, he found nearly all the books of his library had been hurled out of the permanent wall shelves and were scattered over the floor in utter confusion. He picked his way through the debris and was suddenly arrested by a striking sight. On a pile of books thrown to the floor lay a pamphlet, face up, entitled "THE WORLD IN CONVULSION. Beside it was a wooden cross which had fallen from a top shelf. And the cross was STANDING UPRIGHT. As he stood there looking at the two objects, the whole building shaking every little while, there came to mind the familiar lines,

"In the Cross of Christ I glory Towering o'er the wrecks of time."

Dr. Courtland Myers, famous Baptist preacher, heard the story and told it several times, but mistakenly got a Bible mixed into it. One modernistic preacher of Southern California heard Dr. Myers' version and remarked that "The only Book Bauman had in his library was a Bible!"

Even if this were true, it would be the most valuable library in the world.

THE Iron and the Clay

After the late world war, termed by Pollyanna preachers and statesmen as the war to end war and make the world safe for Democracy, we were told that Democracy was about to become a universal form of government. Crowns fell like stars from heaven.

Some of us, at that time, were a bit puzzled at the apparent tendency toward universal democracy. It looked as if the "iron" might disappear from the feet of Daniel's great image (See Dan. 2). But we did not give up the book. Now Daniel is being vindicated. The "iron" is coming back in the form of dictatorships.

Recently in a speech Mr. Hitler announced to the "German people that the 'last vestiges of Democracy' must be removed from the world." Doubtless, Mr. Hitler believes it can be done. But students of the Book of Daniel know better. They know that at the end time the feet of the image will be part of iron and part of clay, and therefore that autocracy and democracy will exist side by side until the image is demolished by the coming of Christ. You can learn more about the philosophy of history from Daniel than in all the books of men.

ADVANTAGE of being Poor

If you are not rich, you should be thankful in these days. People with wealth are in terror throughout this country lest the hand of the kidnapper fall upon their loved ones. Nearly every day the newspapers tell of a new case. Very few are caught. Relatives pay over the money demanded and are glad to say nothing.

The situation has become so bad that the Federal Government is about to organize a Federal special force to help the states deal with it. Such a force, properly organized independent of politics, could clean up the racketeers in a few weeks. Mussolini did it.

But human life will never be entirely safe until the Kingdom of Christ is set up on earth.

BE Careful in Choosing Hymns.

Doubtless all readers will remember the story of the preacher who said "Now before the collection is received we will sing number 134." The congregation turned to the number and sang "I surrender all."

Recently a preacher in North Carolina announced that a quartette would sing at the close of his sermon. When he finished speaking, the quartette arose and sang "How Tedious and Tasteless." A few days later he was called upon to preach a High School baccalaureate sermon. As he sat down, the Glee Club sang, "Awake! Awake!"

Some years ago, at the Southern California Conference, one of the main speakers failed to appear. At the request of the Conference, Brother A. V. Kimmell very graciously consented to pinch-hit. As he took the platform the song leader announced a number, and the congregation arose and sang the good old song, "O What a Change!"

The moral to all this is: Choir directors need something more than a knowledge of music. They need a deep spiritual judgment, especially in choosing hymns for the close of the pastor's message. The song leader can either put the climax on the sermon or destroy its effectiveness by his choice of the closing song. I have been in churches where the choir leader paid no attention whatever to the message, and in one place he left the church when the Standing Still, or Marching--Which?

Years ago Li Hung Chang, the Chinese ambassador to the United States, said: "China does not need a standing army; China needs a marching army." May not those words suggest the trouble with the church today—that it is too much of a "standing army" and not enough of a "marching army"? There is not enough realization abroad that a war is on; that there is hard fighting to do; that the order of the great Captain of our salvation is, "Forward, ever forward," into the enemy's territory and against the enemy's phalanxes. There is too much time and energy spent in mere drilling and displaying of technique, in the throwing up of earthworks and the digging of trenches, and not enough real effort given to advancing against the foe, taking new ground and capturing new prisoners for the Lord.

We may well bestir ourselves with the spirit and terms that apply to carnal warfare, even though we be strongly opposed to war itself. For we are truly engaged in a great war, though the weapons of our warfare are not carnal. Paul set us the example. He urged Timothy to "war a good warfare," to "fight the good fight of faith," and to "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." He also referred to himself, when the end was near at hand, as having "fought a good fight." We greatly need more of the fighting spirit against the forces of evil and in behalf of those enslaved in sin. There is too much tameness and half-heartedness employed. We are too slow to press the battle against Satan and take possession of the souls of men in the name of Christ. It is difficult to determine, taking the body as a whole, whether we are standing still or marching forward. That is all too widely the spirit of the church of this age.

Stand-still Attitude Prevalent

The Southwestern Advocate, Dallas, Texas, organ of the Texas and Oklahoma Methodists, in commenting on the history of Methodism in America, says: "As Methodism had a large part in making this country, it ought to have no less part in saving it. Just now it is drifting. The wave of materialism that swept over it tore it from its moorings." The Christian Index, the magazine of the Georgia Baptists, thinks the figure inapt and changes it, saying: "The church is not drifting. She is anchored, rusting and rotting in port, rather." Edwin E. Sundt, writing in The Baptist, the now defunct organ of the Northern Baptist Convention, lamenting the lack of aggressiveness in soul-winning, said: "The passion for a lost world is lost. Even a discussion of it in some quarters sounds like an echo of a past day." That is a strong statement, too strong to be true to our situation, and yet are we not compelled to admit that the quest for souls has been all too tamely conducted? Instead of having spread wide our sails to catch the wind, have we not become practically anchored? Is it not everywhere the same? And as our southern Baptist friend enquires: Why did the church anchor?

Hindrance of Wealth and Selfishness

There may be any number of reasons assigned, but first of all we suggest that it was because the church became wealthy and took on more or less of the spirit of self-satisfaction and self-sufficiency. It is with a church as it is with an individual, when one becomes increased in goods there is a waning of the feeling of divine dependence and a growing of self-importance. That enlargement of self takes away spiritual keenness and the sense of responsibility for others. It makes for sluggishness and lack of concern. And gradually aggressiveness disappears and soul-seeking is lost sight of. Wealth has brought lavish equipment and that is counted on to draw the crowds and fill the pews. That sort of a spirit brings the church to a standstill. Is not that the explanation?

How else can we explain the church's anchorage? "Were there no uncharted seas to cover, no strange lands to explore, no battles to be fought? Had 'this vile world' become 'a friend to Grace?' Had the church sheathed her sword? From the founding of the colonies the church took an important part in the institutional, industrial, educational and social development of America. In the first quarter of the present century her power had reached its climax. There was scarcely a community in the entire nation where her power was not recognized and respected. In the main her congregations were led by a trained and cultured ministry; her adherents represented all sections of our social life; her literature was of a high order; her benevolences were varied in application beyond measure. She was rich. She put on a great building program. Meeting houses, called plants, were built, hundreds of which are utter monstrosities. She enlarged her agencies and institutions, which increased her overhead. The backwash of the World War chilled her to the bone and marrow. Institutionalism became paramount and she anchored in port." Is not that largely true of the church situation in America, considering organized institutionalized Christianity as a whole? Its selfishness has stagnated its freshness and halted its growth. It is at a standstill. The Index continues, "It were better for the cause if she were adrift. The mud flats of mammon hold her bottom, and the rust of selfishness is eating her machinery."

This is not to decry wealth, nor beautiful and well-equipped churches. Both are needed, but the church must know how to use them, and not allow them to use her. We have gone through a church building period. Our accommodations for worship and facilities for instructional and social activities have surpassed anything the leaders of twenty-five years ago ever dreamed of. But why has not spiritual aggressiveness and Gospel extension kept pace with our material growth? Is it not because the selfishness that wealth fosters has been allowed to creep into our hearts? Is it not because we have come to value things too highly, placing them above the worth of a human soul?

Separation from Worldly Entanglements

Another reason we would assign for the stand-still attitude we have assumed spiritually is that we have entangled ourselves too much with the world. We have not lived the separated life. We have forgotten the necessity of it and lost the desire for it. Our ears have been too close to the earth to hear the heavenly voices: "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you" (2 Cor. 6:17). "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier" (2 Tim. 2:4). "For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof" (1 John 2:16, 17). "Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them; because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. They are of the world; therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them" (1 John 4:4, 5). "And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness" (1 John 5:19). These and many other references set forth the fact of the distinction between the people of God and those of the world, and the necessity of the recognition of that distinction in actual life.

The World is Antagonistic

Not only is this contrast set forth in the Scriptures, but it is made plain that the world is actually antagonistic to the children of God. If the Christian would be true, he cannot do other than live the separate life, because the world will be against him. This,

Jesus points out to his disciples by referring to his own case. "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, the world hateth you" (John 15:18, 19). In the opening chapter of John's Gospel we find these words: "He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not" (John 1:10). That antagonism is again shown in these words: "Even the spirit of truth whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him" (John 14:17). The world's harshness is shown in this further statement from John (16:20; 17:14), "Verily, verily, I say unto you, that ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice." "Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world, if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence" (John 18:36). And if there should be any doubt left as to the impossibility of being a friend of this world and also of God, this reference should dispel it: "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of this world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is an enemy of God" (James 4:8).

It is hard to live the separated life, always and consistently, but we may have the encouragement of God's word if we will only receive it. "Hearken unto me, ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart is my law; fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings" (Isa. 51:7). The example of Peter should be an inspiration, when he said, "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts 5:29). And aside from the Word giving encouragement, it sets forth the absolute necessity, spiritual death being the only alternative. "But if our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not" (2 Cor. 4:3, 4). We

Be sure that your church is well represented at the General Conference, August 21-27, Winona Lake, Indiana. A good program deserves a large attendance.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter's church calendar published in the interest of his church at Smithville, Ohio, reports under date of July 30th, four new members received by baptism.

From the church calendars of the church at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, we note that Brother W. H. Schaffer, the pastor, has received six new members into the church in recent weeks, all of them received by baptism, we believe.

There will be a paper published next week, but none the week following. The editor will be in attendance at General Conference. This is the second week during the year to drop an issue and is in accordance with our policy of publishing but fifty numbers a year.

An announcement has been received at the editor's office from Rev. and Mrs. Grant McDonald, leaders of our church at Ellet, Ohio, informing us of the arrival at the parsonage on August 8, 1933 of a tiny ministerial recruit, named James Kenneth McDonald. We extend hearty congratulations to Brother and Sister McDonald.

Brother D. R. Murray, pastor of the Cooperative Brethren Church of Columbus, Ohio, writes of a successful Vacation Bible School, at which fifty-four pupils were in attendance every day. The total enrollment was eighty-two and the average attendance was seventy-seven. The school was financed by freewill offerings and individual gifts. We are glad to be permitted to present a picture of the school along with Brother Murray's report.

In the absence of Dr. J. C. Beal in attendance at the Winona Lake Bible Conference, the editor had the pleasure of filling his pulpit at Canton, Ohio, on August 13th and sharing the fellowship of that zealous and Bible-loving people. While the attendance was somewhat affected by vacations, yet we were greeted by two good congregations. The Sunday school attendance held up well; the children's department was crowded. Everybody had a good word for their pastor. We presented the cause of The Evangelist and received some subscriptions. We are indebted to Brother J. C. McBride and his Ford coupe for the trip.

* To most of our present generation of readers Rev. Mary Sterling was not known, for it has been many years since her health permitted her to be active in our ministry, but to the editor she was a friend and counsellor in his first pastorate and to the older generation she was known and respected for her ministry and leadership in the church. She was a woman of ability and of deep convictions, and was unable to compromise the truth or right principles. Yet she was reserved and unassuming and kind. She knew her Bible and knew how to present its message with the old-time emphasis upon faith and works. She knew the beginnings of the Brethren cause, and was a leader in the organization of the women's work within our church. We remember with gratitude the profit we received from her informing conversations and encouragement at the beginning of our ministry. We extend to the one remaining member of her immediate family, her sister, our sincere sympathy.

One of our loyal pastors has in his church calendar a comment about a very strong prohibition lecture which he recently heard, stating that the speaker produced evidence to show that almost all the prominent newspapers of the country had been bought to dispense "wet" propaganda in the past few years. "And yet," says the pastor, "how many of the people of this church subscribe to the 'wet paid' newspapers and never think of counterbalancing their reading with their church magazine—The Brethren Evangelist? The average daily paper costs $5.00 a year. The Evangelist offers seven months for one dollar. You need this paper in your home." We have noticed that this pastor's church calendar is always echoing the appeals of his church paper for subscriptions, stressing the people's need of it and presenting the special offers. That is loyalty of a kind that makes for success all along the line. While his church does not have as many papers going into its homes as he would like and as we would like, yet it has more than they generally have where the matter is never mentioned in church calendar or pulpit. Let us have cooperation.

It is with sadness that we report the death of Brother Guilford Leslie, prominent layman of Ashland, Ohio, who has been a correspondent of this paper and a faithful reader of this and other Brethren publications from their very beginning. Brother Leslie passed to his reward on Sunday evening, August 13, 1933, in his eightieth year. He was a charter member of the Goshen church and has been with the Brethren cause from the time it was launched fifty years ago. Throughout his entire life he has been a zealous Christian, having been active in the Gideon's organization during his years of salesmanship, and during his settled residence at Ashland he has always been a regular attendant and a devout worshipper at the Brethren church. His life has counted largely for the kingdom of God through his own service and personal devotion and that of his splendid family through which he continues to bless the world. We extend to his wife and children the sincere sympathy of the Evangelist family. Further obituary will doubtless be supplied by the minister officiating at the funeral on Tuesday afternoon, August 15th.

We have a good letter from the Second church of Long Beach, California, where Brother John Lienhard is the capable pastor. The digest of the semi-annual reports given at their second quarterly business show the work to be in good condition and growing. During the six months period the church realized a net gain of thirty-eight new members. Forty-one were baptized, but three were lost by letter. Brother Lienhard gave assistance to the Fillmore congregation in evangelism and seventy decisions were made, most of which were confessions of Christ for the first time. The North Long Beach Sunday school had an average attendance of 450 and received $418.22 in offerings from January 1st to July 1st. A total of $2,549.60 was raised by the congregation from all departments of the work. They made a foreign mission offering of $506.14 and paid $936.00 on their church building debt. Christian Endeavor work is well organized and growing. The week-day Bible classes were remarkably successful with a weekly attendance of 200. All things considered, this church has experienced a growth, not only during the past year, but through the several years of its short history that is almost unique among the churches of the brotherhood.

The Lordship of Jesus

By William H. Beachler, D.D.

Bible Lecture at the recent Ohio Conference held at Dayton. The Conference theme was—"Our Stewardship in God's Commitments."

I. Introduction

1. "Our Stewardship In God's Commitments." "The Lordship of Jesus." That there is a vital connection between the theme of this conference and this subject must be clearly evident to all.

2. I would say that the subject was wisely chosen by the committee responsible for this program. Whether or not they have maintained throughout, the wisdom they have thus far displayed, depends upon whether they chose wisely when they chose me to treat the subject. God helping me, I shall endeavor to do my best.

3. "The Lordship of Jesus." We have at once a commanding and vital subject before us. Whatever else it implies, it does imply that whereas the Christian life begins with a surrendered will, a great choice, and a redeemed life at the Cross, it does not and cannot end there. At the Cross there begins a mysterious and matchless relationship. The Christian is not only redeemed: He is also related—attached. At the center and heart of it all is a relationship. So that, if a Christian is a Christian Jesus is his Lord as certainly as he is his redeemer. If a Christian is a Christian he does not merely call Jesus his Lord, but in deed and in truth Jesus IS his Lord.

4. The failure to arrive at this point in thought, experience and realization is, shall we say it? an appallingly common failure, and as tragic as it is common. The result produced in the life of the individual by this failure is only too comparable to the contrast between a cistern and a flowing fountain; an artificial flower and a real flower. The failure in much of our preaching and teaching to stress boldly and unceasingly the fact of Christ's Lordship over the Christian doubtless accounts for and explains various facts and conditions which make for weakness in the church, and which are much deplored by every thoughtful Christian leader. The letter which brought to me this subject and my assignment carried as a footnote these words: "In my judgment, this subject is at the center of our existence." Personally I do not consider that an overstatement.

II. Body

1. Our subject combines various challenging aspects and angles. If it were to be a series of studies instead of one study I would, I think naturally, devote the initial study to a survey of the many texts and instances in the four Gospels and the epistles where Christ is designated Lord either by himself or others. But under the circumstances we shall have to be content with less than this.

I limit myself therefore by suggesting in a general way the following: First, upon the meeting between Mary and Elizabeth, which was shortly after Mary had been informed of the amazing honor to be conferred upon her, Elizabeth referred to Mary as "the mother of my Lord." Again, when the angel announced to the shepherds the birth of Jesus, he referred to him as "Christ the Lord." Yet again Jesus on various occasions designated himself as Lord of his disciples. And later in their preaching and writing, the apostles repeatedly referred to Jesus as their Lord.

The Lordship of Jesus therefore is far from obscure in the New Testament. And in the lives of those early believers it was not mere sickly sentimentality—not mere empty words. But it was to them a great, thrilling, sobering, binding, dynamic reality. They were his disciples—his followers. HE was their Lord. They did not merely call him their Lord. They had yielded their lives to his Lordship. They had owned him as their Lord. And he was their Lord.

2. Now in attempting an analysis of the Lordship of Jesus, what words shall we employ? At this point I thought long and much. And I allow myself to hope that some of the words I suggest have a place in this description.

a. First, I would say that the Lordship of Jesus is inherent in his nature, and rests firmly and eternally upon what he is. Therefore the Lordship of Jesus transcends all other authority. He is not only Lord, but he is Lord because he is God, and therefore he is Lord of all. All authority and all power is his. If there was a major note in his earthly ministry that note was authority. Jesus never once questioned his identity, his power, his rights, his authority. He exercised that authority over demons, over disease, over death, over nature. As a teacher he spake with an authority that was at once amazing. He conceded that to him belonged the right to call upon men and women to give to him their lives, their all, just as he conceded that to him belonged the right to be owned and followed as Lord and master by those who came after him. So I would say there is nothing of which we may be more sure as we think of the Lordship of Jesus than this, that it is a Lordship fraught through and through with a Divine, Heavenly, absolute authority. Before he went away he said to his little circle of followers, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." And the Apostle Peter, Spirit filled and Spirit emboldened declared that, "God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." How wonderful therefore, and how beyond all question is the authority that crowns, and undergirds, and impregnates the Lordship of Jesus Christ! Seeing even dimly and in part that authority we are compelled to cry with Peter, "My Lord and My God!"

b. I employ next the word jealous. The Lordship of Jesus is a jealous Lordship. Jesus is a jealous Lord. This is true, not because there is smallness in his nature, but because he is supreme. Jesus demands first place in man's heart. He can only be Lord as he has first place. If he has not first place it follows that some other lord has usurped the throne. For Jesus Christ to be satisfied with less than first place in man's life would amount to a contradiction of all the claims he ever made for himself, as well as the claims his church through the centuries has made for him.

It was a jealous Christ who said, "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me

Signs of Our Lord's Return

V. The Jew the Sign of Signs

By Charles W. Mayes

The plans and purposes of Almighty God are revealed in the Jew. Where are we in God's calendar of the ages? Look at the Jew. What is God doing in the unfolding of the ages? Look at the Jew! LOOK AT THE JEW!

The Jew in Disobedience

If the reader will take time to read Deut. 28 and Lev. 26 it will be made clear that great and far reaching blessings were promised to Israel as long as she walked in obedience. Likewise judgments of awful severity were pronounced upon them for disobedience. Israel fell into disobedience. Therefore Israel was scattered among the nations, overwhelmed by enemies, with the glorious land of Palestine made desolate. "And thou shalt be an astonishment, a proverb, and a byword, among all the nations whither the Lord shall lead thee." (Deut. 28:37).

Since the worst of all the sins of Israel was the rejection of the Lord Jesus Christ, their Messiah, it can readily be seen that the coming back of Israel into the will of the Eternal God must be upon a consideration of THE MESSIAH.

The Jews and Christ

Strange as it may seem, there is a great revival of interest among the Jews today concerning Jesus Christ. Whereas his name was, in the past, not even to be pronounced, today Jews are talking about Jesus. In the past they denied his existence, today they call him a great teacher. In the past they hated the New Testament, today many Jews are reading it.

Whether or not we take seriously the talk about the revival of the Sanhedrin and the re-trial of Jesus, the trend of the Jewish thought toward Christ is most significant. Jewish lawyers in various parts of the world are now debating sessions which last for days, the question of the Messiahship of Jesus Christ. Do we have eyes to see the meaning of all this? We read in Lev. 26:40-42 "If they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers . . . then will I remember my covenant with Jacob. . . ." "The Jews of the twentieth century are preparing the way for that confession. It will not be made without preparation. That confession will finally be made when the Lord Jesus Christ comes back to earth as King of kings and Lord of lords. Then, "All Israel shall be saved." But how? "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins." (Rom. 11:26-27).

Here we have again a reference to the covenant with Jacob and the taking away of their sins and we find that it is associated with the coming out of Zion of the DELIVERER. God is preparing the Jewish nation today for that great event! Wonderful Day! Glorious Day! "His feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives which is over against Jerusalem on the east . . ." (Zech. 14:4). "And I will pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and supplications; and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only son. . . ." (Zech. 12:10).

Israel Will Yet Know Christ

For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without a teraphim; Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their King and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days" (Hos. 3:4-5).

The above gives us a glimpse of the past, present and future of Israel. They have been without a king. They are now returning to their own land. They will know their God. He will be their king.

The Jew Religiously

It is a well known fact that Judaism is rapidly decaying. Reformed Judaism is not Judaism at all. The orthodox Jews are becoming less and less in number and influence. Their own writings show an awful despondency. Grasping at a straw like a drowning man, many have turned to Christian Science. Literally tens of thousands in the last decade have done so. Certainly this is jumping from the "frying pan into the fire," but it is true nevertheless.

This attitude is not surprising to the man who reads the prophets. In the "Dry Bones" chapter (Ezek. 37) which pictures the regathering of Israel, we discover that the process of regathering finds Israel saying, "Our bones are dried up, AND OUR HOPE IS LOST; we are clean cut off" (Ezek. 37:11 R.V.). This is the discouraging despondent and pessimistic cry of the nation which is being regathered. Can you wonder that in such a state they turn to the vain religion of the Gentiles? And what a challenge for the Christian! Why cannot WE go to them, with the genuine revelation of the complete Word of God?

With the present decay of Judaism it will be a thing of the past before many years. Then what will become of the promises and covenants which God has made with his ancient people? This is one thing for which there is no alarm.

"If heaven above can be measured and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord" (Jer. 31:37). We are therefore reminded that the covenants which the Lord made with his people are as sure and indestructible as the very universe itself. God will keep his covenants. And they will be executed before the Jewish nation goes into decay.

Palestine and Prophecy

Every one is familiar with the fact that the Jews today are going back to Palestine. Over 200,000 have gone. God said to Israel, "I will take you from among the heathen and gather you out of ALL COUNTRIES and will bring you into your own land" (Ezek. 36:24). It is recorded that Jews from sixty-four countries have gone back to Palestine. (This could not have happened in the return from Babylon. The present return to Palestine is called a second regathering in Isaiah 11:11-12.) The prominence of Jews coming from the north is especially remarkable since we read, "Behold, I will bring them from the north country . . ." (Jer. 31:8). The terrible persecutions in Russia and now in Germany are making this passage stand out with new meaning.

Jerusalem and Prophecy

In recent decades Jerusalem has been built to conform exactly with the description found in Jeremiah 31:38-40 R.V. Although this description was given 2500 years ago it is revealed to be an exact prophetic utterance. This part of the city is here revealed never to be destroyed. Even during the World war, it was remarkably (miraculously) preserved although threatened by Turks and British. The story of the capture of Jerusalem (too long to be repeated) proves the protecting hand of the Lord over the city and the guarding of his prophetic word.

Aeroplanes

When thinking of the history of Jerusalem during the World war we are reminded of the means of defense which is recorded in Isaiah 31:5. "As birds flying, so will

Gospel Principles of Congregational Church Government

By I. D. Bowman, D.D.

Two great fundamental principles to keep in mind.

I. The Bible, which is the Word of God, furnishes wholly the objective authority for the Doctrine, Constitution, Worship and Discipline of the Church. This excludes all additions and subtractions. This principle alone, as important as it is, would be insufficient to govern the church without the second great principle.

II. That is the great SUBJECTIVE principle of regeneration and the Gift of the Holy Ghost. This subjective principle is intended for every member of the church, symbolized by baptism and the laying on of hands. These two great principles urged and practiced would unify the church and evangelize the world in a generation. This of course is ideal, and impossible to put wholly into practice; nevertheless it is a gospel principle and should be the aim of every local church. From the combination of these two great principles, we derive the following secondary active principles, equally essential in Gospel church polity.

1. Christ is the perfect lawgiver and furnishes the only law which is also perfect for the church. This excludes all ecclesiastical systems of authority and the enforcement of human creeds. Christ is the only head, Lord, and lawgiver. Upon this rock the church is built. Christ is therefore the whole, and only ruler of the Brethren Church. Let us all thank God for this principle.

2. Next derived principle. "All ye are brethren," individually equal, regenerated and spirit filled, therefore we are FREE to control ourselves. This apparently contradicts the principle—Christ the only ruler—but the mystical Christ within each believer is what makes the individual able to control himself. Bond-slaves of Christ but bondsmen to man, yet servants of all. Spirit-influenced individualism is a principle of true church polity. (a) We should teach and practice the six fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ: namely, Faith, Repentance, Baptism (trine immersion), Laying-on-of-hands, the Resurrection, and Deliverance from Eternal Condemnation. Any ordained preacher, or layman, that fails to teach these should not teach at all (See Heb. 5:7-6; 1-3). Read the New Testament and the early church fathers, and compare these with the teachings of today and you can clearly see the apostacy of the church, including many of so-called Fundamentalists. Many make a God out of faith (undefined, abstract, without works), the kind that devils have. They wholly reject Apostolic Baptism, substitute single immersion, sprinkling, pouring and infant baptism for that which the Gospel teaches and throw away the Laying-on-of-hands, etc., and yet we call them Fundamentalists. See what Heb. 5:7 to 6:1-3 says about them:

3. A true local church, scripturally organized, composed of saved and spirit-filled members, is the unit and source of ALL church power. No outside preacher, committee, board, college or conference has any authority whatsoever over the local church. (They may exercise moral influence and give advice by consent of the church, but the Gospel gives them NO ECCLESIASTICAL authority at all).

Of course this third statement gives the ideal principle to be aimed at but never fully accomplished. The defects in our churches are given as the excuse for exercising outside ecclesiastical power. But the kind and scriptural policy of arousing and quickening a higher spiritual life has far out-weighed all the arbitrary efforts in preventing division and eradicating heresy from our churches. The Gospel Congregational liberty has produced the best and most spiritual churches from the days of the apostles to the present time. This, history abundantly proves. The history of our own church since 1708 proves the same.

A few examples. Professor E. P. Barrows: "If we unroll the scroll of history we find that it is precisely that church which has the strongest organization, that is the most corrupt; and, further, that it is the very strength of hierarchical power that makes it irreclaimable in its corruptions."

The noted German author of "Notes and Additions to Hartley's Work Upon Man," in writing against enforcing man-made creeds says, "Experience clearly shows, that though the thirty-nine articles were established for the purpose of preventing differences of opinion, this end has not been in the least degree promoted." Another great author says, "Our open enemies and timid friends, . . . are of the opinion . . . as a bond of unity in doctrine, no better than a rope of sand . . . and in dealing with heresy, no more beneficial than the shaking fist of an infant."

When the Congregational Church, a hundred years ago, largely forsook the Gospel Principles of a regenerated and spirit-filled membership, took into their church unsaved people by the thousands and Unitarians flooded these formal churches, many in and out of their church said it was caused by Congregational Polity. The learned Dr. Leavitt replied, showing that in 1772, 250 clergymen of the Church of England were Unitarians. "They petitioned Parliament to be released from the subscriptions to the Thirty-nine Articles." Parliament rejected the petition but did not censure the heretics. They remained in the church. The same author declares (1831) 186 churches in England had become Unitarian and fewer than ten were Independent churches, and the great majority Presbyterian. Dr. Chalmers declared that the Scotch Congregationalists were "the purest body of Christians in the United Kingdom."

In 1881 it was believed by a large majority of the leaders in the Dunkard Church that the local churches should no longer be permitted to use their own judgment and conscience, because it would cause great heresies and finally would split the church. They decided the only remedy was to make Annual Meeting mandatory and by outside force bring about union. The result of this method of union we all know. It tore the seamless garment of Christ into three parts.

None of us want divisions or heresy, neither did our beloved church in 1881, but they were ignorant of the true principles of Church Polity and the history of the church through the ages. They accepted a policy that always makes division instead of producing unity. Division was caused by a sin against the great principle of love and heresy is a sin against faith; hence the method of compelling men to be united and have the right kind of faith is the method that produces the very thing that we are trying to prevent. We should fast and pray until it "seems good to the Holy Ghost and to us"—this will bring the unity desired.

A great author speaking along this line says a man does not know the alphabet of true history if he does not

SIGNIFICANT NEWS AND VIEWS

A CIGARETTE MYSTERY

A tremor passes through an important sector of American Industry on the news from Naples that Rosa Ponselle can not stand cigarette smoke while singing.

Cigarette smoke, as every one knows, is kind to your throat and there isn't a cough in a carload. Famous tenors puff them between acts to improve the voice, and famous actresses depend on them to soothe the nerves after the big scene.

When Prince Umberto lit a cigarette in that Naples concert hall, he had every reason to believe that it was a subtle tribute to this American girl in particular and to all beautiful American women in general. But Rosa stopped the concert until the offending fag was doused. There is only one explanation. Prince Umberto smoked the wrong brand.

The news concerning Miss Ponselle is not less surprising than the fact that this daily paper should dare thus to stick a pin at the enormous cigarette balloon. Undoubtedly the most disgusting piece of ballyhoo in American life today is that which is carried on by the various cigarette manufacturers in their campaign to put a cigarette on the lips of every man, woman and child in the world.

The most surprising thing of all, however, is that the San Francisco newspaper should even suggest that Miss Ponselle has any rights in the matter. We had supposed that long ago the women smokers had utterly demolished all the rights of nonsmokers. In the light of the all but universal impoliteness of cigarette smokers, we had supposed that there was no such thing as the right not to smoke, which Miss Ponselle now endeavors to assert.—Christian Standard.

A MAJOR SOCIAL EVIL

We cannot agree with all that Clarence E. Martin, president of the American Bar Association said in an address before a recent meeting of the National Educational Association—such, for instance, as that the proposed child labor amendment is "a communistic effort to nationalize children." There is agreement, however, with a good deal which he had to say with reference to divorce. He called attention to the fact that divorce has reached a higher rate in our country than "in any civilized country." He thinks that we are but little better than Russia in the matter of "divorce by agreement." He made the startling assertion that nearly nine-tenths of the divorces granted in this country in 1930 were uncontested cases. "We have divorce by agreement. While not so bold and open as in Russia or Mexico, it is just as effective." He takes the unusual position that remarriage should be limited to cases of annulments, on grounds existing at the time of marriage, and not for causes arising after marriage. He makes the charge that "divorce shelters juvenile crime," and that "orphan asylums find the greater number of children dependent upon them are children of divorced parents." There is not much doubt that divorce is one of our major social evils.—The Presbyterian Advance.

WHY COMMUNISM IN CHINA?

Roderick Scott of Foochow, China, has been exercising his philosophic mind on the reasons for the prevalence of communism in that region. He has found two explanations: "(1) The red armies are about the same as the bandits or independent 'war lords,' employing a familiar technique for gaining control of fertile areas and collecting the taxes, with a dose of communism thrown in. They are not particularly against religion, but are against all the rich, who, it must be confessed, are a pretty scaly lot. When they come to a town they capture all who wear long gowns and hold them for ransom or execute them, burn all the deeds and make an attempt to redistribute the fields. They provide food and land for the poor; up to a point they are better liked than the government and its soldiers. But the country is no better off, for every one lives in fear. Any one who works to improve his land may be called 'rich' and made to suffer for it. (2) The other explanation is that, even though we escaped from militarism and violence, there would still be an agrarian uprising, which in the end might prove a good thing. There is too much reliance on the government for everything. Government by violence—when shall we have an end to it? But amidst wars and rumors of wars we attend to our business affairs, academic and spiritual!"—The Congregationalist.

FINANCES AT THE EXPOSITION

The average cost of operating A Century of Progress Exposition is $23,000 a day, of which $1,500 goes for insurance. The remainder goes for salaries, lights and incidental expenses. There are 700 concessions that are also required to carry insurance. The management has greatly reduced the force of workers during the last few weeks, though the attendance has been beyond expectation. The total attendance to date is 4,500,000, and the average daily attendance runs considerably over 100,000.

The average amount spent by the visitors is $1.10 each, in addition to the admission fee. The average expenditure in the last twelve World's Fairs, after admission to the grounds, was eighty-six cents each. The first 4,000,000 visitors spent $4,445,000, of which $491,000 went to refreshment stands, $1,300,000 to restaurants, $374,000 to stores, $454,000 to amusements, $1,446,000 to shows, $86,000 to games and vending machines, and $526,000 to buses and launches. Manufacturers producing articles in their exhibits have sold $44,000 worth, but are not permitted to make a profit. It is expected that the Fair will be solvent financially.—R. W. G. in The Congregationalist.

DEPRESSION HIT BABYLONIANS 3,000 YEARS AGO

Lack of cash, depressions, delinquent taxes and political corruption—they had all these troubles in ancient Babylonia! writes Stanley Gorden in The Los Angeles Times.

It has been some 3,000 years since Tabi-utulelil of Babylon felt the pangs of a depression and told all about it by impressing wedge-shaped cuneiform signs on a small, square piece of clay, such as may be found now in the Babylonian room at the University of Southern California, one of a large collection of ancient cuneiform tablets used for research work there by Dr. Carl Summer Knopf, professor of Semitic archeology and history. Translated, it gives the gloomy result shown above.

"Each tablet that we decipher," said Dr. Knopf, commenting on the significance of the tablets, "reveals that people thousands of years ago carried on their business and pleasures much as we do today.

"Hard times were not unknown then, and in each depression some calamity howler would take his reed stylus in hand to impress in a clay tablet, by means of cuneiform signs, his prediction that good times would never come again. Or, perhaps, he would complain of the crookedness of Babylony's public officials.

"There are still in existence the inscriptions of Urukagina, king of Lagash in 2300 B. C. one of the world's first reformers. He says he found the common people taxed almost out of existence, the middle class being ruined by forced sales of their mortgaged homes and lands, too many government office-holders and exorbitant government fees which were often added to the officials' salaries. He reduced government fees, stopped the sales of mortgaged property, and threw out large numbers of officeholders.

"Later there was another depression and Hammurabi, about 2000 B. C., provided a moratorium for debtors. His inscription says that if the farmer, through no fault of his own, cannot meet his debt in that year he shall not make any return of grain to the creditor; he shall alter his contract; he shall not pay interest for that year."—The Evangelical Messenger.

Standing Still, or Marching-Which?

should not be surprised that the church has not grown more rapidly and been more zealous and aggressive in spiritual things, when we consider the fatality of worldliness and the wide prevalence of it in the church. Let the church first seek a better type of membership and it will have taken the longest step in the way of greater progress. That is the first requisite to a marching army.

A man who is worried is a weak man, and if he is a Christian he is a disobedient Christian.

THE EPISTLES: GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

"Even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you; as also in all his Epistles speaking in them of these things." 2 Peter 3:15, 16.

Introduction

"The epistles are the wives of the apostles." This illuminating, yet humorous remark had its origin presumably somewhere in the United States of America. When it first was uttered no man knows definitely, perhaps, but it never could pass as an inspired saying of a worthy prophet.

The Epistles of the New Testament are "letters weighty and strong." To be exact twenty-one is the number. Five historical books, one apocalyptic writing, and the Epistles—twenty-seven in all—constitute the Divine Library of the New Testament. God chose in revealing himself to mankind the avenue of chosen servants who wrote their choicest sentiments down under the direct guidance of the Spirit of God. These letters, it must readily be admitted, are highly personal and very human.

The records of the Christian faith are absolutely unique in the religious history of the world. The Koran, the writings of Confucius and of Buddha, etc., are discourses in philosophy, legendary histories, or specially tabulated addresses of prophets and teachers. Man's expectations are their chief concern and they satisfy not the cravings of the earthly life for an assured relief from sin and a positive certainty of an after life following death. Mohammed's Koran depicts heaven as little more than a Turkish harem. Where in these epistles will you find a suggestion as ridiculous as that of the Moslem prophet?

Authors

Paul, John, Peter, Jude, James and the unknown writer of the book of Hebrews—these are the men who have made history wholesale and history wholesome. The Gospels and the Acts and the Old Testament have done the same thing by contributing generously to the final and complete revelation of God in history. The Pauline writings are profound and represent liberty of thought and action; those of John are sublime, abstract, spiritual; those of Peter moderate, comprehensive, catholic; those of James and Jude are more Jewish and practical.

Let us remember that these letters of the first century are more widely read today than those of Rome, Greece, Egypt, Assyria, or Babylonia. And why are they read? Simply because they contain worthwhile messages from God to the human race. They are God's heart throbs scattered far and wide by those who knew the Kinsman Redeemer personally or by religious experience. Everybody loves to receive a letter—that is why the New Testament letters have been so popularly received throughout the passing centuries. Unlike some love letters which are silly and sentimental—yours and mine—these are elevated and eternal because they are God's.

Structure of the Epistles

One uniform plan of outlining appears in the letters of St. Paul. There is much detail everyone knows, but there is also general identity of structure. Six divisions occur with almost unvarying regularity in Paul's epistles to the churches.

1. Greetings, always sane and to the point.
2. Thanksgiving, for saints with gifts and graces.
3. Doctrine, for instruction, correction, etc.
4. Ethics, for saints who need greater poise.
5. Messages, for friends, old and new.
6. Autograph, to establish the writer's identity.

Little wonder is it that Ewald, a famous critic whose scholarly conclusions are sometimes too liberal for acceptance, wrote:

"The divine assurance of the old prophets, the all-transcending glory and spiritual presence of the eternal Lord, and all the art and culture of a ripe and wonderfully excited age, seem to have joined, as it were, in bringing forth the new creation of these Epistles of the times, which were destined for all the times." Was this ever more correct than when he penned these lines? Never! Never!

Dr. Philip Schaff, the greatest of all the American historians, has these lines—thoughtful and judicious—in his first volume of The History of the Christian Church dealing with Apostolic Christianity:

The epistles "presuppose throughout the Gospel history, and often allude to the death and resurrection of Christ as the foundation of the church and the Christian hope. They were composed amidst incessant missionary labors and cares, under trial and persecution, some of them from prison, and yet they abound in joy and thanksgiving. They were mostly called forth by special emergencies, yet they suit all occasions. Tracts for the times, they are tracts for all times. Children of the fleeting moment, they contain truths of infinite moment. They compress more ideas in fewer words than any other writings, human or divine, excepting the Gospels. They discuss the highest themes which can challenge an immortal mind—God, Christ, and the Spirit, sin and redemption, incarnation, atonement, regeneration, repentance, faith and good works, holy living and dying, the conversion of the world, the general judgment, eternal glory and bliss. And all this before humble little societies of poor, uncultured artisans, freedmen and slaves! And yet they are of more real and general value to the church than all the systems of theology from Origen to Schleiermacher—yea, than all the confessions of faith. For eighteen hundred years they have nourished the faith of Christendom, and will continue to do so to the end of time. This is the best evidence of their divine inspiration."

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

By Rev. Milton Bennett Lambdin

III Egypt the Imperial

Among the great nations of antiquity that skyline our historic imaginations, Egypt, confessedly, exerts an alluring charm. And particularly is it true in the case of those who are diligent readers and reverent students of the sacred Word.

For the name of Egypt and Egyptians, in its varied and derivative forms, trackways the chapters of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation more than seven hundred times in one way or the other, as it is closely interwoven into the history of the Hebrew people. Abraham, as you know, made a trek down into that wonderful land; and Egypt was the setting for that fascinating romance of Joseph, sold as a slave into the land of the Nile, and passing in a single step from a prison to a palace, as the dominating power behind the throne of the mighty Pharaoh.

In after times there migrated into Egypt a Bedouin chieftain, Jacob, with his family and retainers of seventy souls, that eventually grew into a nation of 3,000,000, and were in long after centuries, brought out of a cruel bondage by the mighty hand of Jehovah.

It was the birthplace of Moses, who spent the first forty years of his life in that land in an intensive training for his subsequent role as the national deliverer and law-giver of God's chosen people. Solomon took one of its fair princesses in the undue expansion of his already overplussed harem. Malcontents of other nations, with a price on their heads, found Egypt a near at hand and safe asylum into which to run, with the laudable desire to keep their heads on their shoulders; as in the case of Jeroboam, afterwards the first king of the Ten Tribes, and Hadad, an Edomite prince, for instance, of Bible mention.

It was an Egyptian King, Shishak, with an innumerable army, that overran Palestine in the reign of Rehoboam, captured Jerusalem, looted the temple treasures, and carried away the shields of gold that Solomon had made for spectacular pageantry purposes.

One of the most pious Judean kings, Josiah, was slain by the Egyptian soldiers at Megiddo, as they were passing through the territory of Palestine in a campaign against Babylon. Jeremiah, the prophet, was compelled involuntarily to go along with a group of Jewish refugees to Egypt, following upon the destruction of their Judean kingdom by the Babylonian army of invasion.

In long after times Joseph and Mary, with the infant Jesus in charge, found safety in Egypt from the murderous designs of King Herod. And thus the story runs in brief narrative of Egypt in the light of the Bible.

The Ancient Name of Egypt was Keme, meaning black, from the color of its soil, like the "black wax" of Texas. The Hebrews called the land Mizraim, from the second son of Ham. The distinctive and historic name with which all are familiar, Egypt, is from the Greek of Homer, Aigupt.

With the exception of the Delta, its territory is a long drawn out, sinuous stretch of two thousand miles, reaching far into Nubia, and pictorially represented by a hieroglyphic character that means a crocodile's tail. It has an average breadth of about six miles, though widening out in rare places to twelve or sixteen miles. All the rest is desert land and sterile mountains. As Herodotus aptly phrases it, "Egypt is the gift of the Nile."

The annual rise of the Nile was invested

Daily Vacation Bible School of Cooperative Brethren Church, Columbus, Ohio

The Cooperative Brethren church of Columbus, Ohio, held a very successful Vacation Bible School from July 17 to 28. This was our fourth school here. The enrollment was 82 with an average daily attendance of 77. Of this number 54 came every day, which we consider a very fine record for attendance. Twelve faithful workers assisted in making the Bible school a success. Each Wednesday of the Vacation Bible School the members of the Women's Missionary Society helped the Intermediate girls knot comforters. Two comforters were completed; one will be sent to the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana; the other to the Church of the Brethren Home at Greenville, Ohio. Also included in the handwork were other articles for missions which will be sent away. The closing exercises of the school were given to an appreciative audience which filled the church on Friday evening, July 28. This year the school was financed by individual gifts and a free-will offering. The Women's Missionary Society pledged themselves to financially support the school to whatever amount would be needed. But the response of the members and friends was so splendid that the entire expenses of the school, $29.07, were entirely met by their individual donations. Sister Horne of Cleveland, still deeply interested in the work of the Kingdom here at Columbus, sent her birthday offering of $10.00 to be used for the Vacation Bible School. Many of the parents and children expressed their appreciation for the Bible School this year and are looking forward to another one next summer. D. R. MURRAY.

SAUL

(Lesson for August 27)

Lesson Text: 1 Samuel 9 to 11 and 15;
 Golden Text: 1 Samuel 15:22

MONDAY

Saul Anointed King. 1 Samuel 10:1-8

If lessons are taught by contrasts, then the children of Israel should have been taught one of the best lessons of their entire history by the experiences of the two men, Samuel and Saul.

They chafed under the rule of Jehovah through the judges and wanted a king as other people had. This desire was opposed by Samuel, but after counsel with Jehovah their desire was granted, and under the direction of Jehovah the future king was chosen and anointed by divine decree.

Saul was not yet qualified to serve as king, but after his anointing Samuel told him he would be "turned into another man." 1 Samuel 10:6.

TUESDAY

Saul's Disobedience. 1 Samuel 15:10-16

According to the story of today's lesson Saul failed to live up to the requirements of "another man," and got himself into serious difficulties. After a man's life has once been "changed" he may think he is free from all future dangers, that he is perfectly safe, and there is no possibility of being changed back into the "old man." I would warn all who hold to such a belief to think of Saul and to note how great was his sin, the sin of "disobedience", when he failed to live up to the requirements of the "new man."

Saul may have thought he was justified in disobeying the orders he had received, and one may be justified sometimes in disobeying the orders of some superior so far as the authority of man is concerned, but it is NEVER in order to disobey Jehovah.

WEDNESDAY

Saul Rejected. 1 Samuel 15:17-26

It must be a great disappointment to any one to be elevated from a lowly place in life to a high position only at a later period to be told that they have been a disappointment, and that they must now be rejected. When a baseball player has been promoted from a place on a minor team to the "spot light" of one of the major teams either in the American or National League, and then after a few years' trial is found to be lacking in some of the characteristics that make a "big league" player and is sent back to the minor league he is terribly humiliated. How great must have been the humiliation of Saul when told that he had failed to make good in Jehovah's "major league", even to the extent that none of his family could inherit the place he had been called to fill. But sin is like that.

THURSDAY

The Death of Samuel. 1 Samuel 31:1-6

The world was terribly shocked when some of the facts leaked out about the wanton execution of the Czar of Russia and of his entire family at the time of the revolution during the period of the World War, but this was not the first time such an occurrence had taken place in the experiences of the rulers of the earth.

King Saul lived for a good many years after Samuel had notified him that he had been rejected because of his sin, but we would not presume to say he anticipated the tragic end toward which he and his sons were traveling; yet he must have carried with him at all times the knowledge that with his death would end the reign of the family of Saul in the land of Israel, and when his sons were killed by the Philistines upon the field of battle, it is not to be wondered at that Saul concluded it was no longer worth while for him to live and so fell upon his own sword, and thus ended ingloriously a life that, but for an act of disobedience, might have brought great glory to Israel.

FRIDAY

Failure Through Disobedience. Isaiah 42: 18-25

It is not to be presumed that Saul was the only one of the children of Israel who suffered because of disobedience. The truth is all the troubles that came to them may be traced to their own disobedience to the laws of Jehovah which he had told them they must obey, if they were to have his protection at all times.

The prophet, Isaiah, in this forty second chapter cries out a forceful warning against disobedience, but to no avail; and the evils that came upon them he declares were because "they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law." Isaiah 42:24.

SATURDAY

Success Through Obedience. Luke 5:1-11

Thus far in this week's studies emphasis has been laid upon the consequences of disobedience. It will now afford some relief to have one's mind directed toward some of the results of OBEDIENCE, for there are such results; and the lesson for today relates the events of one very outstanding occasion of this nature. And this not some remote occasion of Old Testament times, but an event in the ministry of Jesus.

After Jesus had used Peter's boat for a pulpit for the delivery of one of his matchless discourses, he instructed him to thrust out into the lake and let down his net. Though Peter and his companions had toiled all through the night with no results, yet at the word of the Master he let down the net with the results recorded in this chapter.

It always pays to heed the direct teaching of our Lord.

SUNDAY

Obedience Better than Sacrifice. Psalm 40:1-8

Who, better than David, can speak from the real experiences of life and the emotions of the heart, concerning the things God will do for them who are obedient to him? Sometimes one grows impatient as God seems to delay action favorable to one's desires; but in this psalm the writer says "I waited PATIENTLY for the Lord." Many a one has waited for the Lord; but did he wait patiently?

The psalmist had offered sacrifices and burnt offerings, but these things, he discovered, were not nearly as favorably received by the Lord as obedience itself; so he declares upon this discovery, "I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart."

TO A SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER

How God once made the heavens and the earth

And all that in them is, a wondrous way;
 The starlit story of the Christ Child's birth,
 And how he blessed the children one spring day—

These I have told my son—and gentle things
 Out of the Scriptures, bits of psalm and prayer;

Thus fashioning for his faith, soft, fragile wings

To lift him into blossom-sweet spring air!
 Now you must teach him—it is time he knew—

About the fruit of that forbidden tree;
 Of Eve who tempted and of Cain who slew;
 And how kind Christ hung, nailed, on Calvary.

Forgive me, if, at first, with tearful eyes,
 I watch you light the way from Paradise!

What the Society Can Do in Evangelism

By Clifford Earle, Field Secretary of the Wisconsin Christian Endeavor Union

Conduct a survey in the Sunday school to secure names of all scholars who are not in the Christian Endeavor society. Consider graded societies, and try to have one society for each department in the Sunday school above the primary department. (Thus, if there is an intermediate department, have also an Intermediate Christian Endeavor society.) Devise and execute a plan for presenting Christian Endeavor in the Sunday school and urging scholars to attend. Reach scholars individually and by classes and departments. Ask classes to lead society meetings. Hold parties for departments. Adopt as your slogan, "Every Sunday school scholar above the primary department in Christian Endeavor."

Extend the survey so as to include all young people in the church who are not in Christian Endeavor and all unchurched young people in the community. Maintain a card file; classify all information. Devise a plan for informing prospects about Christian Endeavor, what it is doing, and who belongs to it. Invite them to meetings and parties. Use mails, telephone, and personal visits. Make yours a friendly society with a place for every one. Try to reach all young people in the community who are not connected with other churches or societies. Christian Endeavor is democratic; it is not partial to groups or classes.

Get your societies organized and going this fall. Then during the winter build up spirituality and faithfulness and prepare to conduct a campaign of visitation evangelism during the two weeks before Easter. Organize the society into teams of two or three. Let the pastor instruct the teams for one or two evenings. Then send teams to work in assigned territories or on assigned lists of names. Have the teams frequently meet with the pastor to compare results, exchange ideas, and solve problems. Follow all possible leads until definite results are attained. Employ prayer lists. Receive all new members into the society and into the church with impressive services.

These suggestions for personal evangelism were outlined by an international group of young people recently: Definitely formulate plans for urging friends, associates, and other young people to accept Christ. These plans may include (a) well-arranged meetings for young people in which the meaning of salvation, the need for Jesus Christ, and the challenge of the Christian life are presented; (b) personal work with young people who have not accepted Christ; (c) organization of classes in inquiry and in the Christian life; (d) decision services under favorable conditions; (e) invitations to attend church, Christian Endeavor, and Sunday school; (f) definite responsibility in some phase of church-work for every young person; (g) establishment of regular practices of private devotions; or any other means by which young people may be brought to Christ.

hypocrisy, with capitalism and imperialism, with slavery and empty form. The Russian leaders have not discarded Christianity for they do not know Christ, his work or his teachings. They have condemned and banned a counterfeit.

Soviet foolish tactics to discredit belief in God are illustrated by their anti-religious propaganda in kindergartens and primary schools. Children are given two plots of ground. One is called the child's plot; the other is God's plot. Both are planted with the same seed but while the child's plot is weeded, watered and nourished, the other is left alone to see what God will produce. When weeds and briars come from God's plot and vegetables and flowers from that cared for by the child the contrast is used to impress the idea that God is a myth and that we must depend on our own efforts. Apparently the thought never occurs to Soviet atheists that man is dependent on God's sunshine and rain, the air and the earth, without which human effort would be in vain. Some day they may see the truth that God's plan is cooperation,—that fruitfulness comes from human labor and obedience to divine laws. Without God man can accomplish nothing that will abide.

Educationally and economically Russia has made great strides in the past decade but in trying to establish a godless state, Russia is a menace. Human energy and some heroic sacrifices are harnessed to achieve their ideals. These include an effort to end hunger; social justice and equality of opportunity; the duty of all to work and the right of all to enjoy the fruit of one's labor; the distribution of property and production, with the abolition of the contrast between wealth and poverty. But when Russia seeks to plant suspicion and discord in the earth; when she neglects the weak and the aged and destroys family ties; when she treats with tyrannical cruelty those who oppose or fail to cooperate in her regime; when she deliberately seeks to blot out belief in God; then Russia loses respect and confidence. As Dr. Ernest F. Tittle says:

"In the social struggle, as in international strife, it is a vain hope by war to end war. . . . You cannot maintain a great and glowing vision by an appeal to hate. . . . You cannot secure social justice by practicing injustice—you cannot reap peace by sowing strife."

Nor can you cultivate truth by a system of spies, suspicion and falsehood; you cannot develop respect for law by teaching children to ignore or despise the divine Law Giver. There is no liberty in Russia today—less than in the days of the Czar. Dr. Will Durant, the author, says: "You have no conception of what the suppression of civil liberty and free speech means. Great masses of the people are ragged, miserable, diseased, starving and cowed by fear."

But the fight against God is the most serious feature of the Russian program. A Lutheran pastor, who recently escaped from the country, describes Russia as "an inferno of blood and pitiless persecution against Christians—worse than in the days of Nero—since the torture of the soul is added to that of the body. Christians are bravely enduring this persecution and rather than renounce their faith undergo banishment, separation from wives and children, and forced to labor in the arctic regions.—Missionary Review of the World,

MISSIONS

Counterfeit Religions in Russia

As Russia starts on her second five year plan, the Soviet leaders have declared that religion will be obliterated by 1937. The worship of God there will be banned; He will only be an empty name; churches will be destroyed or turned to other uses; children will be ignorant of the meaning of the name of Jesus; the Bible will be wholly neglected and discredited. The statement reads, as reported in the press correspondence,

"On May 1, 1937, there must not remain on the territory of the U. S. S. R. a single house of prayer to God, and the very conception God will be banished from the boundaries of the Soviet Union, as a survival of the Middle Ages which has served as an instrument for the oppression of the working masses. In the first year it is proposed to suppress all religious schools. . . .

In the capitals all churches and prayer-houses are to be closed by May 1, 1934 . . . The printing of religious books will be strictly prohibited. Special attention will be devoted to the inculcation of the principles of 'reasonable unbelief' among the masses, and one of the main instruments for achieving this purpose will be the production of atheistic films."

Men have made threats like this before but less drastic, less imminent and less official. Russia has always had more religion than Christianity. That has been the trouble. Under the Czars, religion was a mixture of formalism and reverence, of faith and superstition, of honesty and hypocrisy. The lack of unselfish, intelligent Christianity on the part of the leaders of Church and State led the revolutionists to discard all religion as synonymous with ignorance and

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

Our Lord's Greatest Apostle was a Great Correspondent

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH, NORTH LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

Dear Brethren:

Conforming with the request of the Editor of the Brethren Evangelist, I am reporting what the Lord hath done, also a review of what we are endeavoring to do for him here in the Second Brethren church at Long Beach.

This report is from the beginning of the year, January 1, to July 1, 1933, and is based on the reports handed in at our last quarterly business meeting.

We are continually praising God for Jesus who is "Yesterday Today and Forever the same." We are praising and giving God the glory for the things we herewith report.

During this six months period, we have continued on the following prayer program: five prayer meetings a week in the following order with an average attendance of 90-95 a week. Tuesday and Friday morning at 10:00; Wednesday night at 7:30; and Saturday night at 7:30, a men's prayer meeting. In addition to these we have had three all-day meetings of prayer. The Tuesday and Friday prayer meetings are in charge of Mrs. S. Kirby who assigns leaders from week to week.

Our Sunday school is comprised of 43 officers and teachers, with an average attendance of 450. During the past six months 10,999 adults and children attended our Sunday school in spite of the serious earthquake interruption. Total offering was $418.22 for this period.

Our Board of Deacons, consisting of three deacons and three deaconesses, reported two communions held with a total attendance of 330, averaging 165 for each communion. The last communion was the largest when about 180 were present. They also reported having distributed 1100 pounds of groceries to needy folks.

Our general treasurer reported a total of $2,549.60 having been received from all departments of the work. Our foreign missionary offering was $506.14.

During the conference year, that is between June 30, 1932 and June 30, 1933, this church paid $936.00 on its building indebtedness. When our church was dedicated May 19, 1929, our total debt for our entire organization was approximately $15,000. This debt has now been reduced to $5,000.

During this six months each of our six Christian Endeavor Societies have functioned nicely. We have a Beginners; a Junior Intermediate; a Senior Intermediate; a Young People's and an Adult Society. These societies average an attendance of 144.

From the first of the year until the close of the school year, the Week-day Bible Classes enjoyed every week an attendance of approximately 200. These classes are held in various homes thrown open in the neighborhood.

The Summer Daily Vacation Bible School under Miss Hazel Kirby, Superintendent and Mrs. F. Kliever, assistant Superintendent, was well attended with an average attendance of about 130.

During the past six months our services have enjoyed an increasing attendance from Sunday to Sunday. The average attendance each Sunday has been from 250 to 300 for each service.

During the past six months, this church permitted its pastor to hold an evangelistic meeting at Fillmore with Brethren Scott and Farrar assisting. The meetings continued for four weeks, during which time 70 decisions were made; the most of these for the first time. A large number already have united with the church there.

In this last six months a total of 38 new members have been added to the work here. There were 41 souls buried in baptism. The loss of three members by letter was recorded. At present our total of members is

Rev. Mary Sterling as she appeared when she was State Evangelist of Pennsylvania 310, of this number perhaps 15 will be stricken off as inactive during the coming year.

Brother Lienhard's gift of preaching has been blessed of God in reaching the hearts of his people. To the labor of evangelism is added the increased pastoral duties of "strengthening the brethren" during this unusual stress through which we are passing. His tireless zeal in pointing his congregation to the "Place in quiet rest near to the Heart of God" is inspiring to even the most tried and tempted of his pastorate.

The pastor is grateful to the officers and members who by their cooperation, during these trying last days, are maintaining and spreading the ideal of loyalty and faithfulness to God and his work. With these conditions existing God has blessed and caused the work here to go forward.

We covet the prayers of the brotherhood at all times and for all our efforts, but not the least for our pressing problem at the present time of securing more room in which to accommodate the children of our Sunday school, and to care for the growing attendance at our church services.

Heartfelt sympathy is expressed for our pastor, Brother Lienhard, in his recent bereavement, when his father departed to see his Savior face to face and there to tell again the story, "Saved by Grace."

We await the "meeting in the air." Even so, Lord, come quickly.

Faithfully submitted.

Church Correspondent.

REV. MARY MALINDA STERLING

Rev. Mary Malinda Sterling died in her home in Masontown, Pa., at noon, Thursday, May 25, 1933, following a brief illness. Rev. Sterling was born June 18, 1859, a daughter of the late John and Elizabeth DeBolt Sterling. She is survived by one sister, Mrs. George (Belle) W. Honsaker, of Masontown, four brothers and two sisters having preceded her in death.

After attending California Normal School and graduating from Jefferson college, Miss Sterling was ordained to the ministry at the Brethren church, Masontown. For a number of years she was actively engaged in evangelistic and home missionary work. During recent years, however, she has spent her time at home, compiling genealogical data of Fayette county residents upon which she was an interesting authority.

Funeral services were conducted at the family homestead at two o'clock, Saturday afternoon, May 27, by Rev. F. Sibert. Burial in Masontown Cemetery.

A PASTOR'S TRIBUTE

It was with a feeling of great honor conferred upon me that I stood by the bier of one of Masontown's honored residents and one of the faithful ministers of the Brethren church, to deliver the last message of tribute. While her health of late has not permitted her attendance at services she never lost interest in the church she loved and helped to start on its victory march. Her last attendance at services of this church was Easter Sunday, preceding her death when she attended the Easter Morning Prayer service. Though it taxed her strength greatly she expressed satisfaction at her last noticeable accomplishment for her Master.

Her life, so nobly lived, has been one that was outstanding in many respects, worthy of note and filled with usefulness. "Her early schooling was acquired in Green County public schools. Later she attended Monongahela College. One of her outstanding teachers here was Dr. J. W. Scott, father-in-law of President William H. Harrison. While in college she had the honor of being president of the Phi Kappa Literary society. It is also worthy of note that she finished a six year course in four years and graduated with honors, carrying the degrees of A.B. and A.M.

After graduation she taught the languages, science, history and elocution in Ashland College for a year and continued her teaching career from 1878 to 1891. She has long been a devotee member of the Brethren church and a loyal member of the ministerial association. On April 11, 1889, the trustees of the Sisters' Society of Christian Endeavor of the Brethren church licensed her to preach the Gospel. And on August 10, 1890 she was ordained to the Christian ministry in her home church.

As an evangelist she traveled, taught and preached the doctrines she loved in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and West Virginia. She was for some time pastor of the Mason-town Brethren church. From 1889 to 1900 she preached 1,157 sermons. Her watchword was "duty" and whenever the call was heard from pulpit, farm or home it was answered. As a preacher she was eloquent, pleasing in manner and strong in her plea for better living and thoroughly orthodox in her teaching.

While we were not privileged to be her pastor for long we learned to love her and feel that the following poem found carefully tucked away among her papers reveals something of her understanding of life and her confident faith in the Savior she loved and served.

The Transit

I do not know what scenes shall rise
When shadows fill the azure skies
And I shall climb with fleeting breath
The hill along the stream of death.
I do not know what I may feel
Of grief and pain or joy and weal
If loving friends beside me keep
To smooth my pillow while I sleep.

I do not know how I will tread
The downward road unto the dead
For no returning soul I'll greet
Who could direct my weary feet.
I do not know that I shall fail
To dread the gloom within the vale
Uncalmly watch the swelling tide
Until I reach the river's side.

I do not know if I will shrink
And tremble at the chilly brink
Or wait the waters rising near
And touch the current without fear.
I do not know how soon 'twill be
That I must face the open sea
Just when the ebbing tide
Will bear me on the ocean wide.

But I shall know the heavenly land
As I grasp hold my Savior's hand
And lean against his gentle breast
To leave the rolling billows' crest.
My loved ones over there I'll meet
And with them sing redemption sweet
We'll walk the shining streets of gold
I'll tell them all my love untold.

With not a cloud along the lea
I'll said upon Life's Crystal sea
To anchor near the Great White Throne
Where I shall know as I am known.
And in that changeless ever more
With Christ, the victor, I adore.
There'll be no dashing of the waves
Nor partings at our dear ones' graves.

This is but one of many poems written by Miss Sterling but this one of all the collection seems to portray a perfect picture of her life goal assured. Loving friends did stand by the bedside and from the crest of one of life's billows she quietly slipped away to a better land where she now knows as she was known. REV. F. SIBERT.

preacher began and came back only for the closing hymn.

Such leaders have no business directing church music. They are worse than nothing, no matter how much they know about notes.

THE Liberation of Death.

The oldest convict in San Quentin Prison died last week, at the age of 81. Newspaper headlines read—"Death Liberates Oldest Convict." This is the theology of the world, wrong as usual.

Death may liberate the sinner from a human prison, but only ushers him into another and eternal prison from which there is no liberation. Only Christ is able to liberate the soul from sin and its eternal penalty.

About the above convict, the paper cites a pathetic fact. Records were searched when he died, but no trace could be found of either family or friends. How tragic! To be alone in the last sad hour. Yet that is the fate of the sinner. More fortunate than this convict, a man may be surrounded by family and friends, yet unsaved, he must cross the bar alone.

How wonderful to be a Christian; to be able to say, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me."

THE Ambassadors of Peace.

The recent World Economic Conference is dead. Nothing of consequence was accomplished. Some very intelligent political commentators feel that the Conference actually made things worse. Some of the delegates, sincere men, almost shed tears of despair as the Conference disbanded.

In the book of Isaiah, chapter 33, verse 7, you may read the following line—"The Ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly." That is a description of the end time, but already it describes a present situation.

Only the peace of Christ is effective and permanent, both in the heart and among nations.

in ancient popular belief with the romantic idea of an inundating producing tear dropped by Isis, as she was mourning the tragic death of her brother-husband, Osiris, thus causing the river to swell over its banks in the fertilizing overflow of the land. Even to this very day, so 'tis said, the period between the nights of June 17 and 18 is called "The Fall of the Tear."

No people can so justly claim such a remote antiquity and illustrious ancestry as Egypt. Think of a national or racial birth lineage that stretches back in an unbroken linkage of thirty-one splendid dynasties, from its first known king, Menes, to Cleopatra, covering thus a chronological record estimated somewhere near 5,000 years B. C.

And think, too, of that glorious cavalcade, that splendid procession of Pharaohs, queens, princes, priests and nobles, whose numbers defy computation, as it passes in shadowy review across the far distant stage of human activity, ages before we reach what is called ancient history. Egypt, in its mighty ancestry is the "F. F. V." above all the other nations of the earth. For convenience of historic review these dynasties may be divided into three periods: The Ancient running from the first to the tenth; the Middle, eleventh to the seventeenth; and the New, eighteenth to the thirty-first; with their respective capitals, Memphis, Thebes, Sais.

scattereth abroad." And again it was a jealous Christ who said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." And yet again, it was a jealous Christ who said, "So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."

I find a remarkable example and illustration in the Chinese convert. He was a man of culture and learning, prominent as a teacher in one of the schools of his country. But he found the Light, and eventually turned from his idols to accept Christ. But it was not without a great conflict. And his influential pagan relatives and friends did their utmost to hold him within the ranks of paganism. Their last resort was a proposal that if he must be a Christian he should be one secretly, but that outwardly he should give out the impression that he continued to retain his loyalty to his pagan religion, to all of which he made a heroic and remarkable reply. Said he, "A few days ago one came to dwell in my heart: He has changed all of life for me. I dare not bow to any other lest he depart." Oh, yes, how greatly we need to be reminded again and yet again that the Lordship of Jesus is jealous, and sensitive, and satisfied only, when the throne room of the heart has been opened to him! God is Christ, and Christ is God. God is a jealous God. "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me" is as fixed and unchanging as God is unchanging. And Christ is unchanging, and just as in the days of his flesh so today he demands first place, because he is a jealous Lord.

c. Once more, the Lordship of Jesus is rich—rich indeed beyond the understanding of man. Because this is true, the best endeavor to enumerate the various qualities and elements which enter in to comprise this richness is after all only a feeble endeavor. Nor can I do more than merely touch in passing on those considerations which arise before my mind.

Rising indefinitely above the austere, the arbitrary, the cold, and the severe, the Lordship of Jesus is rich because our Lord understands, and loves, and feels, and cares. It is a Lordship tempered and mellowed by sympathy, and patience, and longsuffering, and forgiveness.

Moreover, Christ's Lordship is rich because unerring and altogether and always dependable.

Rich because our Divine Lord seeks and desires always the highest and truest good for his followers.

And rich in helpfulness. Ours is not a Lord who stands off feelingless and at safe distance, watching with indifferent eye our struggles, our discouragements, our defeats. Such is not his Lordship. But rather, he is ever at the Christian's side, with plenteous grace, to sustain, and hearten, and comfort, and strengthen his believing children. And back of it all is his Infinite ability and eagerness to bless and sanctify to our lasting good every experience that comes to us, and to turn everything into wheat that comes into our barns. What a blessed Lordship is the Lordship of Jesus!

d. And finally it is a comprehensive and expectant Lordship. Comprehensive in the sense that Jesus expects all who call him Lord to yield to his Lordship. Social dis-inctions, race distinctions, cultural distinctions, wealth considerations, the matter of earthly position or power—these things weigh nothing in the scales of our Lord. If we are to be counted as his we must yield our hearts and lives to his Lordship—everyone of us. Jesus Christ recognizes no preferred list—no exempted list. If we are truly his we are all on the preferred list. And his blessed Lordship is binding on all alike.

Again, the Lordship of Jesus is comprehensive in that it includes all of the individual—all of the interests of the individual—all of the life of the individual. Jesus refuses to be satisfied with control of a fractional part of the Christian. Thus we are bound to accept it as a safe, sound conclusion that,

"If he is not Lord of all,
He is not Lord at all."

In the matchless consecration hymn of the sainted and holy Francis Ridley Havergal, "Take My Life and Let It Be," there is nothing omitted. I recommend that we all, at our first opportunity, read again this wonderful hymn. Our Lord demands all there is of us. And "love so amazing, so Divine, Demands my life, my love, my all."

If we have made Jesus our Lord in very deed and truth, then in very deed and truth we are not our own.

He is Lord of our bodies. Lord of our minds. Lord of our souls. Lord of our hands and feet. Lord of our tongues and voices. Lord of our time. Lord of our material things. Lord of our influence. Lord of our children. Oh, how sweeping and comprehensive are the askings of our Divine and Glorious Lord! And to comply with those askings cheerfully and without reservation is not only the soul's supremest privilege, but it also represents man's supremest moral achievement—the supremacy of the spiritual over the material, and the only sure path to abiding, satisfying peace and rest and happiness to the soul.

I said the Lordship of Jesus is comprehensive and expectant. It is as expectant as it is comprehensive. It is expectant because it is intelligent, sensitive, tender. And because it is expectant it is capable of sustaining cutting disappointments, cruel grief, severe bruises and wounds. While on earth our Lord suffered much. There is every reason to believe he still suffers much. As individuals we have caused him to suffer, and alas, how much of suffering and shame the church has brought to him.

Our blessed Lord is not blind, or deaf, or dumb, or stupid, or silly, or feelingless, notwithstanding he is often treated as if he were, by those who have called him Lord, Lord.

He expects of us undivided loyalty and loving obedience! He expects of us that we shall respect him by respecting others who are under his Lordship! He expects us to honor him by making all of our attitudes honorable and Christian! He expects us to play the game square with him! He expects of us that we shall be stewards that need not to be ashamed because we are honest with him! He expects us to keep his church in her activities, and methods, and policies far above reproach and question. He expects all of us to let our "light so shine before men that they may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven." It is an expectant Lordship. How are we answering back in our lives to that expectancy?

III. Conclusion

1. In my concluding thought I want to present first what was once written down in a book as the master yearning and aspiration of one of God's peculiarly devout and pious saints, and which ought to be the master yearning and aspiration of all who call upon his name. "I would live to be continually conscious of the Lordship of Christ over me, and to become his veriest slave, where slavery means the sublimest of freedom." "To be continually conscious of his Lordship—" what a realization! To find in him that "sublimest freedom" through complete consecration to him—what an attainment!

2. And I propose next that if, according to my own way of thinking, even a bare majority of God's professed followers yielded their lives completely to the Lordship of Jesus, it would produce results at once staggering in their reach and possibilities. It would mean the church transformed, revitalized, reempowered like unto the church of the first century. It would mean the church reclaiming and enjoying the influence and respect she has lost somewhere between the present and that century. It would mean the church seeing anew and clearly her true mission, being lifted far above petty, childish divisions, and bickering over issues, which, in the light of eternity, are at best only secondary in importance. It would mean the church lifted above and freed from embarrassing and cheapening financial struggles, and doubtful methods of money-getting. It would mean the church purged of politics, and selfseeking, and lust for power, and unholy intrigue, and ungodly alliances, and minority rule and other ailments just as inconsistent and unChristlike. It would mean a reduction to a hallowed and blessed minimum of the tendency on the part of even a few of God's professed followers to lord it over any other part of his heritage. Jesus said, "But he ye not called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." And thus Jesus made provision for all time that "Lording" should remain in his own hands. It would mean the church repossessed of lost glory, and fully adorned with the beautiful garments, and graces, and charms that belong to the Bride of Christ—chastity, undivided loyalty, gentleness, fervor, devotion, humility. Oh, if only Christ were accorded his rightful place as Lord of our lives: And if he were accorded his rightful place as Lord of his church, what marvellous results would follow! The highest form of success that can crown the church is success in making and keeping Jesus Christ Lord of it all, just as the saddest failures and defeats have come to the church from failure at that point. And the greatest need of the church today is "reconditioning" by its Divine and blessed founder and Lord. Give him back his Lordship and he becomes responsible for results. Give him back his Lordship and he will make the church as he wants it, and empower it as he wants it empowered, and lead it as only he as Lord can lead it.

3. And so, I am fully persuaded that as preachers, and teachers, and leaders of God's people we cannot possibly overemphasize the reality and importance of the Lordship of Jesus. Every Lord's Day throughout any year and every year should be viewed as a "special day" to remind pastor and people of the Lordship of Jesus. By choice of hymns, by pulpit prayers, by prayers over the offerings, by sermons—in these and in all other possible ways, it should be heralded forth that Jesus Christ is Lord, blessed forevermore, and that until the last one of his professed followers has "Crowned Him Lord of All," we have not yet paid the necessary price nor gone far enough to receive from his nail-pierced and hallowed hands all that he has in store for us. Our hearts fully surrendered, and all things earthly placed second—then and only then can he become truly the Lord of our lives.

"And everyone that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands for my name's sake shall receive an hundred-fold, and shall inherit everlasting life."

the Lord of hosts defend Jerusalem. . . ."

Palestinian Wealth

The Bible speaks of the "Abundance of the seas" of Palestine and the "Treasures hid in the sand" (Deut. 33:19). Today the wealth of the dead sea is estimated at $1,270,000,000. No one dreamed of this until recent years, yet it was foretold in the Word of God.

Rainfall in Palestine

The rainfall in Palestine has doubled since 1860. This is the beginning of the fulfillment of the prophecy recorded in Ezekiel 34:26-27 and Joel 2:28.

Persecutions of the Jews

Many persecutions are past. The history of some of these is almost unreadable. But persecution is still the lot of the Jew.

Look at Germany today. The Jew has done much to make that nation. The best brains of Germany have been Jewish brains. But now comes little Adolph Hitler, thrust into power by those with selfish ambition, and either defiant or ignorant of the history of the enemies of the Jews, he proceeds to agitate the most furious violence ever perpetrated upon the Jewish people in modern times. It is said that as a result of Hitler being thrust into power in Germany, 650,000 Jews are in imminent danger of becoming paupers. Thousands and thousands of these—scientists, musicians, lawyers and scholars—are already in bread lines. Jewish merchants have been boycotted and their stores guarded that shoppers dare not enter. Besides all this it is reported from reliable sources that hundreds have been killed and thousands injured from mistreatment. And this is MODERN CIVILIZATION!

The Meaning of It

The Word of God teaches us that there is a world Dictator coming. He is called the Man of Sin, the Beast, the Antichrist (Rev. 13). But before he comes the spirit of antichrist will be in the world preparing the world for the coming of the dictator. Therefore the present day experiences of the Jews in Germany are but the first rain drops of the awful cloudburst which shall yet come,—the time of Jacob's trouble (Jer. 30:7). The history of this period is pre-written in the books of the Prophets and in the book of the Revelation. It is revealed that all the wrath of the bloodthirsty Gentile potentates shall be multiplied and centralized in one great Dictator who, although making a covenant with the Jewish nation for a period of time shall break the covenant and turn in awful hatred upon the Jewish nation. By the miraculous power of God a remnant will be delivered and protected from the power of this mighty potentate. The day of great tribulation is terminated by the coming again of the Lord Jesus Christ. "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken, and then shall appear the sign of the SON OF MAN IN HEAVEN, AND THEN SHALL ALL THE TRIBES OF THE EARTH MOURN AND THEY SHALL SEE THE SON OF MAN COMING IN THE CLOUDS OF HEAVEN WITH POWER AND GREAT GLORY" (Matt. 24:29-30).

Tribulation ahead for the Jewish Nation! Yes, but immediately after the tribulation, the Son of Man comes back as King of Kings. Then he shall reign whose right it is to reign.

As this is being written, we are living in the church age. The Great Tribulation has not yet begun, nor will it begin until the Church is removed in a twinkling of an eye to Heaven. Many Jews have received the Lord Jesus Christ as their own personal Savior and therefore belong to the true church which is the Body of Christ. But the Jews as a nation have rejected Christ and are out of direct covenant relation with God. Perhaps the taking of the Church to Glory in a twinkling of an eye will have some effect upon the Jews, as is evidenced by a report from a Christian man recently writing for the Sunday School Times. Said he:

"I had a remarkable experience recently when traveling with an orthodox Jew. We were together in the same cabin for several days, and as my custom is, I knelt at my berth-side night and morning to pray. I soon found out that this Jew, in the upper berth, watched with keen interest my reading of the Scriptures. When Sunday came I would no longer play deck games with him, but otherwise we were on very friendly terms. On Sunday when we were walking together up and down the deck, I at last reached the subject of the Rapture. In full detail I gave him the program as I understood it, Scripturally, to be. All of a sudden he turned and faced me, and with his finger pointing he said, 'If that event takes place as you said, we shall know that you folks are right and we Jews are wrong, and that will create a cataclysm in our midst.'"

Let us hope that such may be the case. As Israel has been the SIGN of signs to the Church concerning the unfolding of the ages, perhaps it may be so that the Rapture of the Church may be an announcement to the Jewish nation of the purposes of God.

In the meantime, we watch the Jew and marvel at the wisdom and power of Almighty God to unfold the ages in harmony with his own counsel.

Gospel Principles of Congregational Church Government

know that this arbitrary method of enforcing unity against the will of the people always produces division. The only safeguard against heresy, division and the only safe way of promoting world evangelization is primarily to arouse a higher spiritual life. TO SEEK AND FIND ABSOLUTE BIBLE TRUTH IS THE ONLY METHOD TO PERMANENTLY SETTLE ALL TROUBLE IN THE CHURCH. The vote of churches, boards, councils, and conferences, settles nothing permanently.

4. The fellowship and communion of Gospel Congregational Churches. The effort to unify the churches has caused more debate and division than any other principle of church government.

That churches should be separated most widely on the very principles intended to unite them is remarkable. Historically this has proven true of all forms of Church government. The effort to unify churches has divided them in all ages of this Gospel dispensation. That, all power to govern and discipline the Christian as given by the Gospel is delegated to the local churches individually seems to contradict the communion of the churches as a whole. A misunderstanding or a partial understanding of these Gospel principles has caused accusations of extreme independence on the one hand, and extreme ecclesiasticism on the other. The right adjustment in theory and practice of these two Gospel principles is the most difficult thing in church polity. Set rules and force cannot make the adjustment. Lack of intelligence and love has often made the adjustment impossible.

(d) The greatest defect has been caused by a lack of disposition to correct the defect. Hence often our efforts have been unsuccessful and damaging. There must be a true and genuine manifestation of brotherly love.

(a) Interchange of members of the different congregations.

(b) Interchange of Ministers. (c) The wealthy churches willingly supplying the needs of the poor churches. (d) By prayer and fasting on our knees, get pentecostal love, then by spiritual messages send all home from our different conferences with a white heat spirit of unity. No advice should ever be asked or given by ANY church without it being done with unfeigned love. Communion of churches should always grow out of that new love and all the advice given and work done should be true to the facts of the Gospel. Remember the Gospel teaches that all should be saved and spirit filled. The Lord added to the church such as were saved and the gift of the Holy Ghost is for as many as the Lord shall call (See Acts 2). "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye should love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:34, 35).

(2) Examples of means applied for the fellowship and communion of churches. (a) A Misunderstanding in the local church at Antioch arose and they could not settle it by controversy. They sent members from this local church with Paul and Barnabas to the church at Jerusalem. The apostles and elders and laymen received them. After open debate and thoroughly considering troubles made a decision. The Apostles and elders and the WHOLE church made choice of men of the Jerusalem church, and sent them back, and the loving letter was not only sent to the church that made the inquiry but to the brethren of Syria and Cilicia as well. Here we see not only did they help the church that asked for help but without any request they offered to hold communion with these other churches as well and gave advice to those remote churches also. It surely is implied that the advice was for all the Gentile churches that had need of it. At least the Antioch church was strengthened in the faith and greatly increased in numbers.

Here we see although the local church has an inalienable right of self-organization, it also has the privileges of soliciting the advisory help of sister churches, and also each church has the privilege to offer help to those even who have not asked for it. Please remember that the local church has the self-constituted power to organize and govern itself. To deny the local church this power is a fundamental reversal of Gospel church polity.

We see here how kind, loving and affectionate may be the communion of the churches without the use of force or ecclesiastical means. The New Testament shows how it succeeded and it would rarely fail today if the same spirit of love should be manifested. We know that as churches, as well as individuals, we are liable to err, hence we need to call in outside help to assist in discovering the mind of Christ. Every historian knows that large churches, great national and local conferences, as well as missionary boards and committees, of every church and every age, have made grievous mistakes, that intelligent, conscientious Christians could not accept. What then? Where is the ultimatum? The final authority. We should honestly listen to advice from sister churches, boards, conferences, etc.

A great authority has said the way to increase the authority of a council is to give them a more definite and trustworthy moral character. The ultimatum of every believer is the Gospel soliciting the aid of the Spirit. This is the sole objective authority to control the conduct of the believer. Follow no church, conference, committee or board further than they follow Christ. Hence God has delegated to the individual and local church all the power; everything outside is mere advice. Every man must judge himself, and test the doctrines of the Bible, and obey it as he understands it.

1. We should thoroughly understand the New Testament form of church government and from conviction carry out its principles.

2. All ministers and laity should be taught to understand and love these principles.

3. We should more faithfully and affectionately endeavor to put our weak churches on their feet by the wealthier ones assisting them and having more intimate fellowship with them.

4. The increased multiplication of churches at home and abroad should be increased a hundred fold. This most important of all considerations we will consider in our next article. To be scriptural we will positively have to change our policies and increase our endeavors or we will never evangelize the world.

Leesburg, New Jersey.

Writing a paragraph is something like the Christian's experience. There must first be a good start. Then follows the development, which should be clear, purposeful, and as pleasing as possible. And the closing should give the impression of completeness with some definite climax reached during the procedure.

A New Representation of the Christ

Camping--A Growing Movement

By George H. Jones

The best medicine for undernourished youth is fresh air, sunshine and the freedom of the great out-of-doors. The best training for undeveloped youth is regular meals, regular hours and supervised conduct. The best guarantee for the character of adolescent youth, is Spirit-filled leaders with high ideals.

The first of this trinity has received widespread acceptance and the thousands of city-tired boys and girls have migrated to camps to enjoy the woods, streams and open-air in the mountains, along streams in the valleys, and in every place where it is possible relaxation. To feel the refreshing breezes of God's great out-of-doors and enjoy the crafts possible to the camper, makes a medicine to cure many problems of the home.

The second has just as readily been accepted. Regular meals, and regular hours, under orderly supervision, has made camping a national recreation. Girls' camps, Hi-Y, Boy Scouts, Girl Reserves, Y. M. C. A. and hosts of other agencies offer opportunities to thousands of boys and girls to enjoy and profit by this growing habit. Even camps for adults are being made more or less successful. Few of us realize to what extent camping has grown. A glance at the last issue of the Evangelist gives a significant clue to this potent force for training youth. Three camps were presented.

The Leadership was unquestioned and the hope is expressed for a much larger attendance next year. There is no doubt but that a multiplied number will take advantage of the Camp Schools next year. Perhaps some college work might be included, for the benefit of those who are working toward advanced credits. Truly it is a growing institution. In fact in many places it has grown beyond control. "Gypsy Camping," i. e., the unsupervised, indiscriminate groups that have gone where they pleased, often without permission, and have made a nuisance of themselves have discredited the orderly camps.

The innumerable camps along the public highways that have taken the place of many of the old time hotels are housing many thousands every night. Many who have been visiting the Fair have taken advantage of both of the fresh air and economical travel they provide.

However, recurring to the movement in America, it has been estimated that a conservative guess would make five millions, a fair average for the number out camping this summer. Many cities have added an office to supply information within their educational boards. Some boards are even now beginning to plan for the underprivileged or less fortunate children to be taken in large numbers, into these camps, counting the results as amply repaying them in less delinquency and healthier boys and girls.

The National Camp Directors Association includes in its membership trained Camp Counselors, Leaders and Assistants for every phase of campcraft. The Russell Sage Foundation even concerning itself with a well prepared handbook of information for the inquirer. The National Government has for years been providing parks and camping facilities to all, and any, who visited the National Parks. Many States are duplicating the work for the preservation of historic communities and buildings. Many camps are perfecting their staffs for needed woodcraft, campcraft, nature study and aquatic instruction. In fact Life Saving and Canoeing are becoming necessary skills for any large or small groups camping out.

Much of the camping is of religious groups. The Church and Character building organizations seem to have preempted the field. Other less desirable organizations may be expected to enter shortly. Commercialization has already been started.

Increasing care will have to be exercised. We have well prepared programs and adequate leadership so far, and the educational work is of the highest type. More will be added no doubt. Menus are carefully prepared and calories computed even by nationally known food concerns. Play, with the necessary equipment is considered as part of the program; many books are already on the market for camps. First Aid and simple sanitary rules are demanded by state regulation. Hours of sleep are recommended by physicians, according to the age groups to which the camp is devoted. Educators are supplying short nature study courses, including Reptiles, Birds, Plants, Trees, Stars, Insect Life and handicrafts. Campcraft, including site selection, sanitation, fire building, cooking, etc., with handicraft for Bead work, Basketry, Leather work, Rustic comforts and simple whittling, make rich and interesting hours for healthful relaxation.

Lastly, is religious instruction. Many camps are well provided with religious instruction. Some providing for leaders in hymn singing, Bible teaching and prayer groups. Daily schedules give room incidentally only for Nature study and Sports, while the chief purpose is Bible knowledge. Few indeed fail to make provision for Sunday School and Church services. A few of the sources for the information of campers are The National Recreation Association of New York, the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, Yearbook of the Russell Sage Foundation, New York, Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. and others.

Some Valuable Dont's

We give some to our readers gathered from an exchange. If observed they will save many a tear, many a headache, many a character. Encourage your children to read them carefully.

The Civic Reform Union also gives a list of "dont's" which, if observed by all girls, would be a protection from the evil traps that are set for them, some of which are as follows:

Dont lose your temper and run away from home.

Dont permit familiarities with men.

Dont leave the country for the city without arranging for employment and a safe home before going. You can get good advice on this subject from your minister, banker, school teacher, editor, family physician, or the mayor of your town. Be sure to take enough money for all expenses. A stranded girl is in danger.

Dont make dates with young men to meet them away from home without knowledge of your parents.

Dont drink intoxicants or smoke cigarettes.

Dont permit the advances of strange men and women on trains or at railway stations. If you need information or help, ask the conductor, the station agent, a policeman, or a Traveler's Aid worker.

Dont dress or conduct yourself in a way that will invite advances from men. A girl who dresses wantonly is in peril. Men of the underworld assume that she is bad at heart or she would not wear such clothes.

Dont be a heathen on the Sabbath day. Attend Sunday school and the preaching service, and you will learn things that will make you strong in the time of peril and temptation.—Sel.

The Cliff Drive Guard

The highway commission came along Cliff Drive and workmen with them took out the thick posts and the stone wall erected there to keep automobiles from tumbling to the creek below. In place of these strong and formidable protections, the highway commissioners left a white mesh of strong wire. Folks wondered, of course, at such a performance. But one of the commissioners patiently explained:

"This wire mesh is a better protection than the posts or the stone wall. The mesh will yield when an automobile strikes against it. It will give for a bit and then bound back, throwing the car back into the road without damage to the car. A stone wall or a rigid fence would smash the car in trying to save it. It's the yielding of the wire mesh that gives the best protection."

In place of the stubborn, rigid, fixed fences and walls we have set up in our lives for people to bump against, let us put the flexible wire mesh of forgiveness and sympathy and Christian love. Then, when our friends come against us with opposition, we shall be able to come out of our misunderstandings without wrecking our friendships.—Selected.

Christian Brotherhood and Loyalty

It is thrilling to be conscious of belonging to a brotherhood. The very idea of belonging to and with others is big and satisfying. We don't like to be alone, to be set apart from others, with nothing in common, with no fellow-feeling. We want to have those we can be concerned about and who will be concerned about us. That gives richness and meaning to life. The very possessions we have take on value and meaning when we are able to share them with others, and when there are those with whom we have mutual appreciation and understanding. Brotherhood suggests relationship,—common origins and common households, common ideals and common purposes, common customs and common loyalties. It is wonderfully rich—this word brotherhood. And we belong to a brotherhood, by the grace of God—a brotherhood of Christian believers.

Brotherhood Shows in Loyalty

This brotherhood manifests itself in many ways, but especially in loving loyalty one to another. Nothing is more necessary than that. It is an obligation; it belongs to the relation. A loving attitude toward others enters into the very warp and woof of our lives. It is the distinguishing mark of the Christian, for Jesus said: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." If this disposition is wanting, the brotherhood fruit tree is barren. When the tree bears no fruit, it must needs be pruned and cultivated. For by all means the Christian must not do without his most essential characteristic.

The Spiritual Relationship Must be Guarded

This Christian brotherhood is a spiritual relationship. The bond of loyalty is the fruit of the Spirit which flows through the various members, energizing and binding them into one great coordinating, cooperative whole. The spirit must be pervasive and unmarred. Division is forbidden. Partiality is an unwelcome intruder. Envy is an enemy of frightful mien. Pride is a thief which devises cunning schemes and selfishness is an ambitious intriguer who pulls down the house of harmony on the heads of all, causing confusion and disloyalty in the church. These have no place in the brotherhood of the Lamb slain from the foundations of the world. If caught lurking within the shadows of the house of God, or seeking an entrance to its portals, they should be branded, belled and banished. Nothing should be allowed to mar the peace, corrupt the passion, or divert the purpose of God's church. Its brotherhood should be faithfully maintained, its fellowship sanctified and its worship hallowed. Its loyalty should be persistently cultivated and strengthened, guarded against the pollution of worldliness, the poison of selfishness and all the destructive devices of Satan.

Required by Oneness of the Church

There are several reasons why the church is a brotherhood whose irrefragable bond is loving loyalty. First, because the church is a unity, an indivisible organism. Paul does not hesitate to describe the church in these words: "And gave him (Christ) to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all" (Eph. 1:22, 23). The church is the body; Christ is the head, the fullness of whom penetrates and interpenetrates the body. Thus the church, which is the body of Christ, is one and indivisible. To break up the church would be to break up the body. To divide the body would be to divide Christ, for he fills the church with his fullness, a filling that is all in all. Speaking to the disciples one day Christ declared them to be brethren (Matt. 23:8). Thus the church becomes an indivisible brotherhood, no part of which can exist apart from the rest. A cardinal virtue of the members of the human body is impartiality. The ear does not regard the toe with disdain. The head does not say to the foot, "I have no need of you." In strict, harmonious cooperation, they work together to assist in the common purpose of the body. Dare members of the church, which is the body of Christ, become supercilious and arrogant? Dare they loathe one another? Dare some members lose respect for the functions of other members? Or refuse to cooperate because they have some personal grievance against those who are in charge of other tasks and responsibilities? Such practice is absurd, foolish and unchristian. Besides God hath tempered the body together . . . that there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another" (1 Cor. 12:24, 25).

Allegiance to One Lord Requires Mutual Loyalty

Second, the church has one Lord. (Concerning the unity of the church in all things, the fourth chapter of Ephesians is exceedingly rich.) It is the supreme aim of this one indivisible organism to bring glory to that one Lord, and that cannot be brought about where there is no brotherhood that issues in loyalty. Factions in the Corinthian church called forth the most stinging denunciations from Paul. He discovered that worthy ministers and the interests they supported were being made the grounds of division. "Is Christ divided?" (1 Cor. 1:13) was the interrogatory thrust. Before he ends this growing thought with all its horrible implications, he establishes the place and position of Jesus. He seats him upon a throne as the Lord of the church and the universe. He separates him from the creatures and makes him the only one deserving and having the right to receive glory. He finally makes it the duty of man to praise him and him alone. In fact, in 2 Corinthians 5:15, he says that "he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again." This is another block in the foundation which supports an indivisible brotherhood of redeemed souls. This undivided allegiance to one Lord, with one supreme aim to glorify the one Lord, strengthens the bond of loyalty one for another. An attack upon the work and efforts of another member is an indirect thrust at Christ Jesus himself. How essential then it is that with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering forbearing one another in love, we should endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. 4:2, 3).

Having One Task Involves Brotherhood and Loyalty

Third, because the church has one task. When we say the "Nazarene", painting of the Christ by Col. H. Stanley Todd, internationally known American portrait painter, has gained widespread fame in the short time since its completion in 1932. It has been dedicated by the artist, because of his deep interest in the Christian church and in missionary endeavor to the "cause of Christian missions and extension of the kingdom of God" throughout the world. We are indebted to the Missionary Education Movement, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York, to which has been committed the task of distributing it among the churches, for our copy of this beautiful painting. The original painting is on exhibit at the Chicago World's Fair, in the Hall of Religion, where more than 15,000 people view it daily.

It is a rather unusual conception of the Christ, but at the same time it is noble and inspiring. Col. Todd was moved by "a desire to portray the 'Christ Triumphant', the virile Christ who cleansed the temple, attracted strong men and conquered death," to use

Mr. Todd's own words. It has been received with great enthusiasm. In the artist's studio in Huntington, Long Island, 10,000 people viewed it following an Easter Dawn service there. Shown in leading New York churches, it compelled widespread attention on the part of the public and press. It is Todd's hope that it may serve to rally churches of all denominations around the personality of the Christ.

Regarding "Nazarene", a fair haired, blue eyed Christ whose countenance reflects the power, courage and vitality eminent in his life work. Col. Todd explains that there were blonde tribes in Israel, that his conception "represents the glorified man of all races, and that the blonde type is the most radiant in emitting light to all people."

Col. Todd served during the war with the Intelligence Division, General Staff, Washington. Later he was appointed American Red Cross Commissioner to France and Belgium. Among his well known paintings are President Roosevelt and McKinley, Admiral Moffett, Frances Willard and Cardinal Newman.

Reports in Evangelism Through the Year

Following is a summary of the results of the evangelistic efforts of our churches, as recorded in the "Editorial Review" through the twelve months since last national conference. The reports are taken in the order in which they appeared in the Evangelist from week to week. It is impossible to tell from these figures just how many new members were added to the churches because of the indefiniteness of the reports and because not all churches made reports, nevertheless there is much reason for encouragement to be found in them. It would seem that the passion for lost souls is not lost to Brethren people. We may not be universally as zealous as we ought, but let us rejoice in these results:

EDITORIAL REVIEW

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.

We are informed that Brother H. H. Rowsey, pastor of our church at Falls City, Nebraska, just before leaving for General Conference, received nine by baptism and one by letter into the membership of his church. It was no special revival campaign they had. It seems that it is not uncommon to have confessions at their regular services, and as a result of personal interviews. Brother Rowsey has also made his instruction class for church membership a serious thing to the young people taking it, so that hearts are changed and decisions are made for Christ and the church.

The annual Financial Report of the Foreign Missionary Society has been distributed to the members of the Society through the mails, and we discover that the grand total of all funds received for the year closing July 1, 1933 was $37,007.95, which is a decrease under the preceding year of $1,297.28. We do not feel that such a showing is a thing to be apologized for in times like these. That is not to say that we should pat ourselves on the back for what we did for foreign missions, but simply that we should take courage from the fact that there is so much faithfulness left in these dark days and go forward.

A report from South Gate, California, states that the work there is moving forward under the blessing of God. The church attendance has made a substantial gain during the year past, and the increase continues through the last quarter. Three home Bible classes are being kept going, in addition to the others meeting at the church. They are taking care of their young people with four Christian Endeavor societies, also a goodly number of their young folks attended the summer camp. And some of the young men are organized for more definite work in soul winning. We have heard of the College Quartet's visit to a goodly number of the churches in various parts of the brotherhood and now it turns up at South Gate with a four days' meeting and makes a strong impression, as has been the case wherever it has gone.

The First church of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, has enjoyed its ninth annual Daily Vacation Bible School, and it is said to be the best yet. The average attendance was 112, while the highest single attendance was 126. That indicates a very high percentage of regular attendance. The advertisement was uniquely done by means of a parade. The pastor as superintendent, with the cooperation of his efficient corps of teachers held the pupils to a keen interest and led them to the point where twenty-one made confession of Christ. That is a most splendid and unusual result for a Vacation Bible School. We commend them for their fine success, and express the wish that we might hear that more schools are stressing the evangelistic note and seeking very definitely to lead their children, not merely to know the Truth, but also to accept it personally. That is the highest achievement.

The Brethren Church for Such a Time as This

Moderator's Address for the 1933
General Conference held at Winona Lake, Ind.

By Wm. C. Benschoff

Brethren in Christ, Greetings:

After another year of service for our Master, we find ourselves, as a church, assembled in National Conference. Throughout the year the rich blessings of God have been upon us. His goodness and mercy have been manifested toward his people. Our presence here is a proof that material needs have been supplied, and that we are in a reasonable state of health. Many have no bread, are clothed in rags, and have no home or place of shelter; there are those who are afflicted in body, not a waking moment without pain; there are those who are spiritually sick and not disposed to gather with God's people. During the year no great catastrophe has come upon us, no disruption or disunion in our midst, no extensive retrenchment in our work. On the other hand, there is evidence of Divine approval as is seen in the preservation of the church, the numerical and spiritual growth at home and abroad, and the continued and increasing interest seen in the work of the Master. Great is our reason for praise and thanksgiving to our heavenly Father. And this we should ever continue to do as suggested by the Psalmist: "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High; To shew forth thy lovingkindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night" (Ps. 92:1, 2).

Whence Have We Come and Why?

It might be well for us to inquire of ourselves: "From whence have we come, and why are we here?" We have gathered from all parts of our beloved brotherhood, which means that we have come from the ends of the earth. That God has blessed us as a church is evidenced by the fact, that after fifty years, we find ourselves established throughout the length and breadth of the land, and in extremely difficult fields in foreign countries. But to answer the question, "Why are we here?" three things suggest themselves to me. In the first place, we come to National Conference to perfect plans for the carrying on of the Lord's work. Much time must be given to organization, and the programming of our diversified activities. To the task we will give ourselves without stint or favor. But let us keep in mind that we gather for Christian fellowship. Man is by nature a social being. He naturally enjoys the company of others. But there is no fellowship or association among human beings which is so pleasant, so genuinely enjoyable as that which we have in the name of Christ. Christians have much in common. Each is a sinner saved by grace; each, having been cleansed from sin by the blood of Christ, is walking in the light as he is in the light. Truly, they may sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, enjoying a fellowship which has no parallel. Let us, by being truly sociable, make our national gathering a time of real Christian fellowship. But we need especially to remember, that we come to this mountain top to worship God, not forgetting that, "It is he who hath made us and not we ourselves." There is danger that the importance of praise and worship, of the united waiting in his presence, will be overlooked. The National Conference of the Brethren church should be a veritable mountain top experience of spiritual blessing. And how we need it! We need to realize a sense of our oneness with Christ; we need to receive him anew into our lives; we need to get an experience at the throne of grace which will send us forth heralds of the Word of Life. The disciples, on the Mount of Transfiguration, the heavenly visitants having departed, "saw no man save Jesus only." In this expression we have the secret of the power of their testimony among many peoples. As is expressed by another: "The solitary figure on the mountain became the central figure to the eyes and hearts of the apostles. One Person occupied their thoughts; one Person filled all their most effective discourses." The opening part of our sessions is a worship period, but we are not worshipping unitedly and making possible the outpouring of his Spirit upon us if we are scattered throughout the length and breadth of these grounds. There is in this, as in all things, personal responsibility.

World Conditions Present An Appalling Picture

Our subject, "The Brethren Church For Such a Time As This," calls for an interpretation of the times in which we live. It is not too much to say, that conditions in the world beggar description. The tendency of the times is in the direction of selfishness and pleasure loving. And in the world, as such, we see no prospect of improvement "The putrid condition of society is generally conceded. There is much spiritual wickedness in high places. There is a falling away. Men's hearts are failing them for fear. Confusion, dismay, uncertainty in all the avenues of life's interests abound. Earth never knew such pandemonium. Her very foundations seem to be out of their course. What meaning has this apparent confusion?" It would seem to us that the whole world is writhing with various distressing symptoms of some terrible disaster. Fear and suspicion obsess the people of the nations great and small. Economic disaster of the severest kind has permeated our whole national life. Millions, by unemployment, have been reduced to poverty. Among the people of the earth, there seems to be little use for the application of the straightforward principles of the Christian faith. The fact is ignored that the fundamentals of Christianity, if followed, would make for peace and prosperity. Christ is being ignored and set aside. We are trying to get along without God. Little is he considered in the affairs of State. "But", I hear some one say, "it has always been so." There is a sense and a degree to which this is true. That there is faithlessness and unbelief is not peculiar to the day in which we live. As has been said: "The people of God are scarcely facing any new ideals, errors, heresies, new falsehoods and fanaticisms these days, but what the church faced and fought in the first century of the Christian era, as well as down through the centuries; only this may be said: all of these revived and resurrected evils are coming upon the people of God these days with intensified energy and force, because these are the last days of the present age, and Satan is putting forth his most desperate and hellish attempt to offset and hinder the purposes of God concerning human redemption." Perhaps peculiar to our day is the extreme lawlessness abroad in our land, and the rebellion among all classes and ages, against authority. It is apparent that the strong drift of the present age is to deny man's need of regeneration, the authority of the Bible and the Deity of Christ. Within the church is to be found laxity, indifference and irresponsibility. And many who profess membership in our churches yield themselves easily to the life of worldliness.

Does the Church Comprehend Orders?

In the face of the widespread apostasy, and the prevalence of lawlessness, what is the work of the church? In the midst of a humanity fettered by sin, bound by Satan, and destined to eternal destruction what is the Christian's present duty? In finding an answer to these questions we must waive all human opinion. Christ is the actual and should be the recognized Head of the church; and he alone has the right and authority to say what the work of the church shall be. He has saved us, and commands with respect to Christian duty. It should be said, there are some things the Lord has not commanded the church to do. Nowhere is the command given to the church to reform society. Could God's people be led to see this what vast sums of money, immense amount of energy and sacrifice could be used for his specific purpose. Believers are not instructed in Scripture to reform the social order, to uplift the world, nor to busy themselves with the overthrow of iniquity. I am not overlooking the fact that it is the believer's duty, as a Christian citizen, to lend his influence in the direction of moral reform and law observance. Nor am I overlooking the fact that it is the believer's duty to act always and everywhere as a Christian. But it would seem that Satan has many Christian people so busy doing good things, they have no time for doing the best thing. It is just as true, that the church is not commanded to go out and convert the world. It is true that God has commanded men everywhere to repent. And while he tenderly yearns for the salvation of even the vilest of sinners, he knows that many will not come to him and receive everlasting life. It is clear that by social reform we cannot get rid of temptation. Many have tried earnestly to make the world better and safer for humanity, by seeking to remove temptation. But the tempter becomes bolder, temptations more numerous and stronger with every passing day. This may sound like a strong statement, but, if moral reform, social uplift, law observance, the conversion of the masses,—if these things constitute the work of Christ through his church in this dispensation, then it may truthfully be said, that Christ and Christianity have failed.

The Great Purposer Saw the End from the Beginning

God has a program, clear, comprehensive, far-reaching and complete. And let it be said, the age cannot be rightly understood, the times correctly interpreted apart from a clear knowledge of God's plan and purpose in this dispensation of grace. Being God, he knows his program in its entirety. As the great architect sees the massive structure in all its details before work is ever begun; as the skilled artist sees his masterpiece stand out in all its marvelous beauty before he ever touches brush to the canvas, so, the Almighty God knew every detail of his Divine plan and program before he ever began speaking worlds into existence. "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the ages" (Acts 15:18). Being God, he is carrying out his program as planned, down to the minutest detail. But what is God's work through his Son Jesus Christ as it pertains to the church in this day of grace? It is only correct to say, that we cannot work effectively, constructively, and towards the completion of the task unless we know what this work is. I have searched the Scriptures on this point, for it is the business of the minister of Christ to know, in order that he may lead, and it is a conviction of mine, that the work of God in this age is the "calling out" from among the nations of the earth, a people for his Name. It was for this purpose that he gave his only begotten Son as a sacrifice for sin; it was for this that he sent the Holy Spirit to improve the world of sin, and righteousness, and judgment, and to direct the church in her witnessing; it is for this that he hath redeemed us, that we might go forth bearing testimony to the fact that Jesus saves.

In face of Scriptural truth, what is the specific work of the Brethren church in this day of darkness and sin? To me it is clear—it is the PREACHING OF THE WHOLE GOSPEL TO THE WHOLE WORLD. Let it be said to the credit of those who have gone before, we have been a missionary people. It might be of interest and profit, at this juncture, to look back to the time of our beginning. We claim over two hundred years of history, and fifty years as a distinct denomination. The organization of the Brethren church was effected at the "Convention," as it was called, held in old Music Hall, Dayton, Ohio, June 6 and 7, 1883. We observe two things wrought out by these Brethren of which we should not lose sight. They gave to this new denomination a name. After the rejection of a number of suggestions, the name, The Brethren Church, was the one unanimously chosen. This then is our denominational name—THE BRETHREN CHURCH. It may not be true, but, by the increasing use of the prefix FIRST, are we not rapidly losing the name our fathers gave us? Two reasons were given for the choice—a Scriptural reason, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren" (Mt. 23:8). Further, this was the name by which we were known from the time of the organization in 1708 till the Annual Meeting of 1856 when the name was changed to "German Baptist." This matter of name may seem of no importance, but to some among us it is. I personally feel we should take pride in preserving our original cognomen. The second great accomplishment of the organizers of our beloved fraternity, was the adoption of a creed. This was not so difficult, as these Brethren needed only to go back to the act of 1708. Elder P. J. Brown, member of the committee on church government, addressed the convention as follows: "I have the honor to report our views in full. They are here set forth," handing to the moderator a copy of the New Testament. Upon motion, by Elder W. L. Spanogle, the report was unanimously adopted by the whole convention rising and singing with great fervor the Doxology. Their views were more clearly defined as set forth in the following resolution adopted at that time: "Our form of church government shall not be based upon creeds, confessions and mandates of uninspired men, but upon the inspired record of pure truth." We are extremely fortu-

*What of the Harvest?

By Dr. J. C. Beal

Sown seed we must reap
Any sowing will bring a reaping Take care, for you must reap your sowing

There is always much concern about the harvests of nature, the material harvests. But the question up for discussion at this time is far more important, as it is dealing with the SPIRITUAL harvest. Gal. 6:7-8, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap everlasting life."

While this epistle, as all others, is addressed to Saved Folks, yet this message is also for the Unsaved. The words "not mocked", mean "turn up your nose in disdain". In this passage there is truth set forth that no infidel, skeptic or anyone dare deny,—but there are also some things which need no further proof than the plain statement of them to prove their validity. If every copy of the Word of God were destroyed, this text would be verified by the experience of men around us. All we need to do is to read the daily papers.

One time Moody preached from this text and a man got up and said he did not believe it. Mr. Moody said it did not make any difference for it was true BECAUSE GOD SAID SO, and the remarkable thing was that that very night when the man left the meeting, he was arrested and sent to prison for a crime he had committed. No doubt he found out that the text was true!

Did Adam reap results from his sin? Yes, and it was so far-reaching that we are still reaping from that sin. Did Cain reap,—that man who was so determined to have his way? Hebrews, chapter 11, tells us why Cain reaped such disastrous results as to be sent out with the cry on his lips "My punishment is greater than I can bear." It was by FAITH that Abel offered a more excellent sacrifice than Cain. How does faith come? By hearing! How does hearing come? By the Word of God (Rom. 10:17), so we know that Cain did know what God's word was regarding that sacrifice, but HE WOULD HAVE HIS OWN WAY. Did David reap? Yes! In the death of his own child by Uriah's wife, and when his own son Absalom turned against him and he was made to cry, "Absalom, my son—would that I had died for thee." Did Eli reap? He who left his sons go into sin without correcting them? Yes! Did the Jewish nation reap?—the nation to whom the oracles of God were entrusted? Yes, and they have been reaping for two thousand years. They have been scattered among all the nations of the world, and their final reaping will have its culmination in the period known as the Great Tribulation.

There can be no harvest without sowing! This is the law of compensation,—The law of cause and results. There is no bridge between sowing to the flesh and reaping of the Spirit. No one would refuse eternal life if he could be saved by sowing to the flesh. We are much like the child who was asked which he would rather have been, the rich man or the poor man (in the story of Dives). After some thought, the child replied, "I would like to be the rich man while living, and the poor man when dead." BUT IF YOU ARE GOING TO REAP RESULTS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS, YOU MUST live righteously!

What does it mean to sow to the Spirit? It means self-denial, resistance of evil, following the call of the Spirit, obedience to the leadership of the Holy Spirit. If you are refusing to do this,—even though you are a child of God,—you will reap the results. If you are a child of God and are sowing to the flesh, you are building with the materials named in 1st Corinthians 3:12—"Wood, hay and stubble", and when the testing day comes you will find all your works going up in smoke (1st Cor. 3:11-15). That is why Paul gave us those precious words in Romans 12:1-2, "I BESECH you therefore, brethren, By the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your spiritual service, and be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed, by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God". And if you will read the entire eighth chapter of this same book—Romans—you will understand what is meant by the "mercies of God". And the fruit of this sowing to the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" Gal: 5: 22-23).

IGNORANCE OF THE SEED YOU ARE SOWING MAKES NO DIFFERENCE IN THE HARVEST. Many farmers sow seed which they "think" is clean, but to their amazement when it grows they find it is full of weeds. Ignorance of the seed did not change the harvest. Yet in spite of that fact, people go on disregarding God's Word. The Word of God is here FOR YOU and that is the reason for the necessity of KNOWING God's Word. What would you think of a man who was sowing seed, upon being asked what he was sowing, would say he did not know? You would think he had too little sense to run a farm or plant a garden, or whatever he might have been sowing. The same thing is true relative to us! WE SHOULD KNOW what we are sowing, and BE SURE about it. The parents who disregard their opportunity to sow the right seed in the child life will also reap results, not only in the life of the child but in the world to come. The best time to begin sowing is before Satan has had time to scatter his tares and that is why Jesus said, "Seek ye FIRST the kingdom of God and its righteousness"; and the Psalmist said "Train a child in the way he shall go and he will not depart therefrom". That is why Timothy was such a mighty man of God,—he was trained from his youth. If you saw weeds coming up in your garden, when would be the best time to pull them up? If they are pulled soon enough, the space will soon fill in, BUT IF we wait too long there is a barren space where they were. That is why it is so necessary for YOUNG people to come to God.

Sins can be forgiven (1 John 1:9) BUT THERE ARE SOME THINGS THAT CAN NEVER BE RESTORED. If you will remember, the prodigal son was welcomed back home, but the father never did take anything from the faithful elder brother and give it to this wayward one. What YOU have in eternity, depends on what YOU ARE SOWING NOW! Jesus said, "You cannot have two Masters, for you will either love the one and hate the other, or you will cling to one and despise the other". What YOU will BE depends on what YOU CHOOSE NOW! What is the harvest? You may have good intentions and make resolutions, but intentions and resolutions are of no value as far as salvation is concerned. The road to hell is paved with them. As you choose, your eternity hangs in the balance. YOU MUST make the choice.

The way of life and death is before us. YOU must decide which way YOU will travel. What of the harvest? It depends entirely on what YOU choose,—whether you choose to surrender and let HIM have HIS way, or whether you choose the things of the flesh. THE HARVEST IS SURE! There is a sowing time! There is ALSO a reaping time! If only we were as thoughtful of the spiritual things as we are of the material things, life would be so very different. "Be NOT deceived: God is NOT mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap!"

"Sown in the darkness, or sown in the light,
Sown in our weakness, or sown in our might;
Gathered in time or eternity,— SURE, OH, SURE,—will the harvest be."

Canton, Ohio.

Christian Brotherhood and Loyalty

church's task is one, this is not to deny the legitimacy of the several phases of church activity as organized today. They are all parts of the one great task of the church, which is to bear witness to the saving and keeping power of the grace of God to dying men. We recognize the necessity of these several lines of activity and know them to be parts of the whole task of the church. Young people must be educated in the Christian way. The poor and needy must be cared for. The printed page must be supplied. Evil forces must be challenged and wicked men must be warned. New churches must be built in the homeland and missionaries sent to lands afar. All these are parts of the one task of witnessing, or, as in some cases, means of accomplishing the task. We should therefore maintain a sense of the unity of the task and be united in it and devoted to it—the whole of it, and not merely to one particular phase of it. Not every one can exercise himself, or bear his witness with equal effectiveness in all the various phases of the church's activity, but every one can have a spirit of loyalty and cooperation toward all parts. Not every member of the body of Christ has the same spiritual gift, "but unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ" (Eph. 4:8).

In the exercise of that gift Paul very expressly exhorts all Christians to use the way of love, and it should be exercised in cooperation with the rest, realizing the unity of all. The gift came from the Lord; it contributes to the glory of the Lord; and it performs the great task of the Lord,—so who can properly deem himself the possessor of enough authority to use it in condemnation of another or in commendation of self. Remember, it is "not he that commendeth himself (that) is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth" (2 Cor. 10:18). The body of which Jesus Christ is the head, the brotherhood of which Jesus Christ is the master, the church of which Jesus Christ is the foundation shall have no ulterior or selfish motives, nor should any of its participating members, whether leaders or not.

Selfishness with all of its manifestations and all of its severe consequences should have been washed away in the crimson tide which flowed from Calvary's cross. According as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith no one ought to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, nor should he be wise in his conceits; but should think soberly, in honor, preferring another, condescending to men of low estate. Seeking to be freed from selfishness or self-seeking, or desire for personal glory, or place, or distinction, let each member of the church cooperate with loyalty, remembering that the task is one.

Practice Should Accompany Theory.

Church history reveals that not always has orthodoxy of faith and orthodoxy of practice been boon companions. In spite of the fact that Christians belong to one brotherhood indivisible, to one Lord and Master, and are partners in one task, its ministers and its members have in their enthusiasm for correctness of thought and forms, forgotten or neglected kindness and love and unselfishness and loyalty one to another, and have brought reproach upon themselves and the church. Paul was the church's most profound theologian. His epistles are masterpieces in the art of full-fledged presentation of truth. Yet notice that while he begins with doctrine, he ends with the logical issue of doctrine in life. Theory is good, but theory without practice is lop-sided and makes void the good of theory. If the great emphasis of the church through all the years past had been this double aspect, the progress of the church would have been far more rapid.

We Owe Loyalty to One Another

It is not our purpose either to condemn or to condone the past, or any of its measures or leaders. But as General Conference convenes it seems fitting that we should call the attention of the whole church to the fact that we constitute the body of Christ, which is an indivisible brotherhood. Inasmuch as our interests are common; inasmuch as we serve one Lord and glorify one God; inasmuch as we are engaged in one gigantic task: it seems right to impress upon our hearts and minds that we owe loyalty to one another. It is so easy to exalt our own task or our own interests above the work and interests of others. It is so easy to become individualistic and wise in our own conceits, apparently, without even the shadow of a suspicion of our untoward attitude falling across the line of our vision. Almost imperceptibly does this unbrotherly, uncooperative spirit grow upon us. We need to be warned against it and to be reminded of our unity. We must remember that although we are diversified in activity, yet that activity contributes toward one end and all workers are cooperators in one task. How ungracious and improper to commend ourselves! And how thoughtless and inconsiderate to minimize the efforts of others! Let it not be said of our brotherhood—men and women who truly acknowledge the Lordship of Christ and accept the whole Counsel of God—that though we are orthodox in belief, we do not let our orthodoxy issue in practical life. We are a brotherhood, whether we be engaged in foreign missions or in home missions, in educating our youth or in printing and distributing the Truth, in caring for the superannuated ministers or in maintaining a home for the aged, and we should in every case give our loyal and loving support.

FAILING TO SERVE

I and a few of my business friends sat one night and checked the main street of our town of 8,000 population. We found that the business men of a few years ago who were not in business now were gone because they had failed to serve. This man failed to serve because of the quality of his goods; this man failed to serve because of misrepresentation in advertising and so on down the line.—Dave Darrah.

Romans

"How then can a man be justified with God?" Job. 25.4.

"The just shall live by faith." Cf. Hab. 2:4; Rom. 1:17; Gal. 3:11; Heb. 10:38.

Introduction

Rome, in the day of the Apostle Paul, was the governing center of one of the grandest empires which man has ever been privileged to witness. It was a pagan world to be sure, grown old with weariness and restlessness, yet it faced the age old question of the patriarch Job, namely, "How can a man be justified with God?"

That question is answered by the greatest man on earth since Jesus, in a profound and intelligent way. "The just shall live by faith," he cries. Through great churchmen like Augustine, Luther, Calvin, Moody, and hosts of witnesses of the shining Way, that answer has been echoed and re-echoed down through the corridors of time until the twentieth century has regarded it as a commonplace truism.

But that has been the great mistake of the present age of so-called enlightenment. Ours is an age of enlightenments, rather than one of enlightenment. Many orbs shine, but none may be compared to the Light of the Ages. Ours is also an age of enjoyments, rather than one of enjoyment. There are many joyous people, but few know the joy of the Saviour. The faith that issues in righteousness does not belong to our world order. It is Christ's and Christ's alone. He who knows the book of Romans is fully aware of that fact. He is the possessor of eternal life.

Some Heroes of Faith Speak

Luther calls Paul's epistle "the chief book of the New Testament, and the purest Gospel." From this opinion the writer dissents. Any one of the Gospels is a book of higher standing and importance than any single writing of the Apostle Paul. John's Gospel, if any, is the chiefest Gospel of the New Testament. What the great reformer should have said is this: the book of Romans presents the highest argument of the Apostle Paul concerning salvation and faith. Truly Paul is not to be outclassed by any thinker in the realm of theological thought. He leads the vanguard of all the theological thinkers.

Coleridge labels it "the profoundest book in existence." Meyer hails it as "the greatest and richest of all the apostolic works." Godet characterizes it as "the cathedral of the Christian Faith." Tholuck, more modestly, refers to it as "a Christian philosophy of human history." These men appreciated Paul's great letter to the infant Church in Rome, but why should they speak so much in superlatives? Why not call it one of the profoundest works, or one of the richest of the apostolic works, or a book cathedral-like in structure and majestic in meaning? When will the church be done with over-statements? When will high appreciations be curbed to rightful proportions? When will men grow tolerant in love and broad in outlook? When will the four winds bear us an assuring answer to these questions?

It is interesting to note that St. Paul nowhere leads us to believe that he was profound, brilliant, or great. "Unto me, who am less than the least of all the saints, is this grace given." Truly Paul was greater than we may ever hope to become as Christians, yet should we not remember the shining modesty and graciousness which made him great?

The Essential Facts

The Epistle to the Romans was written from Corinth somewhere around 56-58 A. D. He domiciled at the home of Gaius (Rom. 16:23). His letter was sent by Phoebe to Cenchreae, the probable bearer, to Rome. In the meanwhile, Paul departed for Jerusalem from whence he expected to visit Rome and Spain in person.

The keynote of the epistle is sounded in the famous verses recorded in chapter one, verses sixteen and seventeen. Like a statesman, Paul is presenting to a Jewish-Gentile Church, the Gospel which he received as a result of his experience on the Damascus way. Incidentally, that Gospel transformed Rome. Christianity is there today. It pays greatly to serve Christ honestly.

The Argument and Outline Combined

The message of the book to the Romans is interpretative and instructive. It is not polemical as is the case with Paul's Galatian Epistle. He is expounding the universal Gospel to every tribe and nation under the sun.

The argument of the epistle revolves around these four main considerations:

1. All men are guilty before God.
2. All men stand in need of a Saviour.
3. All men may be saved through Christ's death.
4. All men who accept him become one body in him. (Sin is universal; so also is grace).

We are justified by faith; justification becomes sanctification; faith issues in faithfulness; and eternal life in glory is ours.

The classic topical outline—simple and helpful—is appended below. Let us remember that righteousness is the keyword of this writing; that it is to God alone; and that it issues in the exemplary Christian life.

I	Introduction.	1:1-17	(Greetings, etc.)
II	Condemnation.	1:18-3:20	(Gentiles, Jews and the World)
III	Justification.	3:21-5:21	(By Faith, not Works)
IV	Sanctification.	6:1-8:17	(By Change of Relationship)
V	Glorification.	8:18-39	(God's Purpose Fulfilled)
VI	Election.	9-11	(Hindrances of Unbelief)
VII	Consecration.	12:1-15:13	(Humility, Love, Submission, Sympathy)
VIII	Conclusion.	15:14-16:27	(Personal References and Salutations, and Doxology)

The Panorama of History

Dr. Farrar finds, in viewing the outstanding revelation of God in Paul's letter to the Romans a panoramic view of history. Dr. Tholuck, you will remember, discovered the same thing in the epistle. In referring to the phrase "the just shall live by faith," Dr. Farrar comments:

"The verse has already been quoted by St. Paul in Gal. iii.11. In the LXX it is "the just shall live by my faith" in some MSS. In its original context, the verse meant "the just man shall live (i. e., shall be delivered from peril) by his fidelity;" but St. Paul reads a deeper meaning into "faith" and "live." Habakkuk ends where Paul begins.

The religious history of man may be regarded objectively and historically under four phases:

1. The Sin of Adam.
2. The Promise of Abraham.
3. The Law of Moses.
4. The Redemption of Christ.

And subjectively and individually in four phases:

1. Relative innocence.
2. Awakened consciousness.
3. Imputable transgression.
4. Free justification.

The Practical Lessons

1. Consecration is necessary in the church. 12:1, 2.
2. "Gifts" should be properly evaluated. 12:3-8.
3. Love should be without hypocrisy. 12:9-21.
4. Civil Duties must be respected. 13:1-7.
5. Love is the fulfillment of the law. 13:8-10.
6. Christ's personal returning is a purifying hope. 13:11-14.
7. Do not judge others. 14:1-12.
8. Do not tempt others. 14:13-23.
9. Follow the example of Christ. 15:1-3.

These are some of the more important lessons from the ethical and practical section of this epistle. Paul always associates doctrinal belief and Christian conduct together.

The Conclusion

The doxology appearing at the extreme end of this writing is a bit interesting in that Paul usually places it in the body of his letters. But here he is summarizing in an excellent paean of praise the major ideas of his epistle in a final, yet grand flourish. Hear him:

"Now to him that is able to establish you according to my gospel and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery which hath been kept in silence through times eternal, but now is manifested, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the eternal God, is made known unto all the nations unto obedience of faith: to the only wise God, through Jesus Christ, to whom be the glory for ever. Amen. 16:25-27.

TROUBLE

Trouble may begin like dew, and then may trickle in upon us, and then may greatly increase its volume. It may become a river, a torrent, a cataract, and may go on even to become a great sea. Beware of beginnings! That which is simple at first may become awful at last. We talk of a "sea of trouble." The poet was right when he formed and expressed that daring and tumultuous image.—Joseph Parker.

Vanished Empires and Buried Cities in Bible Lands

By Rev. Milton Bennett Lambdin

The Civilization of Egypt

throughout its whole extent of dynasties was superb in its every aspect, as we find Egypt from its historic dawn in the possession of a governmental system, an elaborate hierarchy, a philosophy of life, a literature, an alphabet, in fact, in the all-round grooming of literary intelligence and cultural refinement of manners and morals. "How many uncounted centuries it took to achieve that stupendous result we do not know." And the ancient Egyptian lends no color whatever to the modern fad notion that the primitive or prehistoric man started out as a savage to struggle through the wearisome stages of the cave age, the stone age, the bronze age, whatever the "age" was that came first and ended last, until finally he was chiseled, and pumiced, and sandpapered, and oil-polished into the completed exhibit of an A1 civilized man. On the contrary, "his faintest footprints of the sands of time bear the impress of a sandal," not the unshod feet of a naked savage. Egypt is beyond compare in

The Wealth and Splendor of Its Structural and Artistic Achievements

When Abraham went down into Egypt, some nineteen centuries before Christ, four hundred years before Moses even, possibly during the twelfth dynasty, he looked upon a civilization that was even then incredibly old. Well nigh certainly his eyes rested upon the pyramids of Ghizeh, tipped with the hoar-frost of a venerable age.

And at On, the ancient Heliopolis, the site of which is on the outskirts of modern Cairo, there stood a temple, fronted with two obelisks clear cut and chaste as a poet's dream, that had been erected by Usirtesen I, of the famous twelfth dynasty, a full thousand years before the daughter of one of its after temple priests became the bride of Joseph. And where Moses, just as likely, matriculated and graduated as the foremost scholar in the roll of its alumni "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians."

Those temple obelisks, one of which stands today upon its enduring base in Egypt, its fellow exiled to a foreign site in Central Park, New York, bear eyed and haggard in its broken-hearted sorrow, were erected originally, a full thousand years before Abraham, as it carries our minds back 2,700 B. C., more than 4,600 years before our own times.

And all over the land of Egypt, up and down the reaches of the Nile, from the delta far into Nubia, there are to be seen massive remains of pyramids and tombs and obelisks and statuary and expressions of pictorial art, the wondrous output of the master minds and hands of Egyptian artists and builders. All of this mighty centuries before the Greeks and Romans placed the architrave and wielded the chisel and the brush.

The Egyptian civilization was not only rich and overflowing in its structural and artistic activities, but likewise so in

Its Educational and Literary Pulsation

Education was held in the highest esteem, and schools of learning were maintained in connection with departments of government and in the temples. But mainly, if not entirely, for the higher classes. And there has drifted down to us some of the practical proverbs and axioms current in the scholastic circles, designed to stimulate the student mind. "Give thy heart to learning and love her like a mother, for there is nothing so precious as learning." And if the sluggish student mind needed a stimulus to prod it into activity, we have it in the hint, "The youth has a black, he attends when he is flogged."

The Egyptians had an extensive range of literature that ran far afield into religion, mathematics, astronomy, medicine, magic, travel, adventure, fables, stories, love songs, etc.

The basis, or germ, of some of our stories and romances can be traced by natural inheritance to Egypt. The birthspot of the charming little childhood story of Cinderella can be accredited to the land of the Nile. An eagle flew away with the sandal of a fair maiden as she was bathing in the river, and dropped it at the feet of an Egyptian prince, of course. And you can fill out the finale true to form, as they were "happy ever after."

The root start to the story of Ali Baba is in the story of some Egyptian soldiers, hidden in capacious jars and smuggled into a city that the Egyptian forces were besieging. The Egyptians were the inventors of an alphabet that the Phoenicians improved upon.

She had a High Rank in the Industrial Arts, and was famous for skill in metallurgy. In the goldsmith and silversmith of art. Enormous quantities of rings, nad bracelets, and trinkets of the jeweler's art, so bewitching to the feminine mind, have been found in the tombs. We can readily see where the Hebrews got their skill in the making of the sacred vessels needed for the tabernacle services in the wilderness.

The Egyptian skill in spinning and weaving of fine linen is spoken of in high terms in the Bible, so perfect that a piece found at Memphis revealed no breaks, no knots, when held up to the light, an ancient way of testing fine cloth. You recall that the Pharaoh arrayed Joseph in a robe of fine linen.

She had her prototype Columbus and hardy sailors, who headed off into dangerous seas, passing through the Straits of Gibraltar, sailing down the coast of Africa, around the Horn, and up the Red Sea to their starting point again, starting out on their adventure with the sun on their left, and returning with it on their right.

Among the noted rulers of Egypt was a queen by the name of Hatshoptisu, or Hatusu, of the eighteenth dynasty; the "advanced woman" of her day, who assumed

Book Review

(Title: A Summary of the Gospels, by Lorraine Boettner; Publisher, Wm. E. Firdmans Publishing Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan; Price 75c).

Professor Lorraine Boettner, teacher of Bible in Pikeville College, at Pikeville, Kentucky, has produced another interesting work. His first and major monograph dealt with The Reformed Doctrine of Predestination. The writer knows of no better work before the public on that subject. It is ably treated.

But his newest production is entitled, "A Summary of the Gospels." It is a unique contribution to theological literature and is excellently summarized. With its aid every Bible student will find the difficulties chronological and otherwise, of the Gospel harmonies eliminated. To pastors, Sunday school teachers, and other religious workers, the volume will be very helpful.

A few quotations concerning the nature of the work are now taken from Professor Boettner's introduction. They explain the purpose and nature of the book.

"It is the purpose of this summary to weave together in chronological order and in one continuous account all of the material which is found in the four Gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John,—to include everything without repeating anything which is given by these writers. The dates of events and also the places of their occurrence have been given so far as it is possible. The material is thus systematically arranged, and all that the four writers have to say about any particular event or teaching is brought together in one compact statement. Full Scripture references are given, usually by means of footnotes."

"The work is divided into 137 chapters. In instances where two or more of the writers have told of the same event, the account from the gospel which gives it most fully is printed complete; the additional details which are told by the other writers are inserted in parentheses at the appropriate places. The summary is thus a purely Scriptural account. It is not a "harmony" of the Gospels, for a harmony commonly gives the full account as told by each writer and prints these accounts in parallel columns. And in no sense is this work to be looked upon as a commentary on the Gospels."

"The present arrangement is ideally adapted for Bible classes in which the four Gospels are studied together. In fact, it was in connection with such classes that the author was led to arrange the materials in this order. And since all repetition has been avoided, the summary is about one-fourth shorter than the four Gospels taken together."

"It is of course not claimed that the present arrangement of materials is infallible. The four Gospels, as printed in full in the New Testament, are to be taken as the final authority. But so far as the author is aware no reference has been taken out of its true context, or exhibited in a false light. The American Standard Version rather than the King James Version has been used in this work since it is more accurate. The Table of Contents gives a list of the various events, miracles, parables, etc.; and at the back of the book there will be found a Scripture Index by means of which any particular passage can be located."

(Title: The Old Home Town and Other Poems, by Victor Murray Hatfield; Publisher, Park Publishing Company, Winona Lake, Indiana, 1931; Price $1.50).

While sojourning at his home at Winona Lake, Indiana, last summer, it was the reviewer's good fortune to receive an autographed copy of the poems of Victor Murray Hatfield, the poet of "Winsome Winona." It was a gift from the author.

To those who love the simplicities of the commonplace, this volume will have a rewarding message. Like Dr. Grayson's superb prose, which has made every homely circumstance a palatial experience, so does Mr. Hatfield's poetry adorn the little, simple things of life with an engrossing and transcending beauty. Truly these lines are cameos in the casket of memory.

"The Old Home Town," "Modesty," "Indiana," and "Welcome to Winona" may be chosen as representative selections from the author's volume. At least they seem to be such to the writer.

DAVID

(Lesson for September 3)

Lesson Text: 1 Samuel 16:1-13; Psalm 78: 70-72

MONDAY

David Appointed King. 1 Samuel 16:4-13

As a king, suited to rule over a people whose destiny God had chosen to direct, Saul was a consummate failure. Because of his moral failure and divine rejection Samuel was greatly grieved. But God directed the prophet to go to Bethlehem and anoint one of Jesse's sons to be Saul's successor.

Saul, as ruling monarch, might regard this as high treason with a sentence of death for the traitor; but the divine purpose was not to be thwarted by a faint hearted prophet or a murderous king. The visit of Samuel to Bethlehem was to be strictly religious, and not political.

The journey would be justified by a sacrificial feast, and upon his arrival at the appointed place the prophet would receive divine instructions as to his further course.

TUESDAY

David Chosen of God. Psalm 18:70-72

David's reign was a glorious reign; but the glory belongs to God, as it was God who chose him and placed him in his exalted position.

God had not only called him to this responsible place, but he had given him the capacity to serve well in the place. This shepherd king of Israel had shown the kindness and faithfulness of his heart in his care of the young and tender in his father's flocks. The same traits, under divine guidance would make him an ideal king for an inexperienced people in the way of national development who needed watching over even as does a flock of sheep.

WEDNESDAY

David Conquers Goliath. 1 Samuel 17:41-49

The incidents in connection with the destruction of this great giant at the hands of a stripling youth illustrate that familiar saying, "Pride goeth before a fall."

Goliath was proud of his strength, and looked with contempt on this ruddy youth who had come forth to battle him with the toy sling of a shepherd boy. But it was not the boy nor his toy sling that was to be the conqueror of this hulking piece of human flesh, but it was the name of Jehovah that was to prove the undoing of the one who defied any one who came in the name of the Lord. The victory was not David's but God's.

THURSDAY

David's Sin. 2 Samuel 12:1-7

"There is none righteous, no not one." It must be with regret that anyone who loves purity and holiness reads this account of the sidestepping of a character so admirable as the character of David. But it only shows that no man is absolutely sure of himself, unless he has a more abiding faith and trust in God than many of the elect of mankind seem to have, for how often are we shocked by the report of the dereliction of some one in "high places" whom we have greatly admired. The old saying, "The king can do no wrong" is not true. Kings do sin, and their sins seem all the more flagrant because of their high place in human society.

FRIDAY

David's Repentance. Psalm 51:1-13

One redeeming trait in the character of David was brought to the fore as a result of this transgression, and that was his readiness to acknowledge his sin when it was pointed out to him. Too many men refuse to acknowledge their sins when they know they are guilty, and even have been discovered in their guilt. David not only acknowledged his guilt, but he also repented with repentance and tears will not obliterate bitterness and tears.

at the scars of sin, and no matter how circumspetly the king may walk after his repentance, it still may be said, "The bird with the broken pinion never soared so high again."

SATURDAY

A Psalm of David. Psalm 23:1-6

This shepherd psalm of David is supposed to be memorized by every pupil in the primary grades of our Sunday schools, and is often repeated from memory, as a prayer, by adults. I know there have been some most marvelous expositions written on this psalm, and some of these are masterpieces of literature, but I would suggest that any reader of these notes, who can not repeat this psalm from memory, should immediately make an effort to memorize it.

SUNDAY

An Upright Man. Psalm 101:1-8

The upright man is approved of God; but it must be remembered that no man can walk in perfect uprightness in his own strength. He must lean upon God through his acceptance of Jesus as Savior, and depend upon the Holy Spirit to lead him in the way of uprightness.

The Psalmist says, "I will behave myself wisely in a perfect way: * * * I will walk within my house with a perfect heart." And, furthermore, he promises that he will give recognition and preference only to those who are faithful and persevering in seeking after perfection.

A Tramp Party

By Dorothy McMasters

The invitations are written on wrapping-paper, in crude lettering, with the words misspelled. The wording can be something like this:

"Hear the call of open spaces,
Join the tramps in all their paces,
Don your garments bright in hue.
To the Trail I'm asking you."

The invitations should be put in crude brown envelopes. Have the guests meet at a certain corner, such as the end of a street car line, and keep it secret what is to be done or where they are to go when they get there.

In advance, distribute in the homes of about five friends food such as tramps eat, —baked beans, buns, wieners, cookies,—and take your guests to the back door of these homes and ask for handouts, which the guests put in a bandanna handkerchief that you have given them and tied to a stick. You have previously collected enough sticks for each of the guests, and have put them in a pile in an alley, down which you go to get the first handout.

When the food has been collected, the guests are taken to the back yard of the hostess, where the handouts are eaten. Coffee is boiled in a kettle hung over a fire of twigs. Partners for the feast are determined upon by matching the gay colored bandanna handkerchiefs, or by giving each girl a slip bearing some word suggestive of the art of hoboing, such as blind baggage, backdoor spread, bulldog, handout, woolpile, strawpile, or tramp. To the boys give the same names; thus a boy and a girl will each have the words "blind baggage," and so on.

Divide the group into groups of fours or fives, and give to the captain of each group an envelope containing pieces of remnants of goods, and see which group finds all the pieces that belong to their original piece that was fastened on the outside of the envelope.

On brown wrapping paper sketch the grotesque, life-sized figure of a tramp. Fasten it to some post or wall. Distribute to the players various colored advertisements of food, plates of soup, sandwiches, coffee pots, or pie. The object of the game is to pin the food on the tramp's hand.

Hide in the yard candy objects representative of tramp life, such as candy sticks, and the guests are divided into groups and are told to hunt for these objects. The groups are given names of objects of tramp life, and the leaders only can pick up the candies when found. The persons of the respective groups call out the name of their group, then the leader answers the call and picks up the object.—C. E. World.

home missions would be a fine work for the objective. As you all know, our own denomination has supplied banks to be used for home missionary offerings until Thanksgiving. The plan is working out very well in our church, and especially are the young people interested. When the idea was presented to our Christian Endeavorers they very eagerly voted to get two banks to use in that society, and when they are filled we plan to get more. It is the young people who will become interested in work of this nature, and when we realize that we are really the older people of tomorrow it is necessary that we begin working with a definite purpose for Christ and the Church.

Young men have gone out and started missions, young people have been attracted and won for the Lord, and they in turn have labored until a church is built up. Offerings are taken in this church for mission work elsewhere, and in that way the borderlines of the cause of Christ are continually extended.

When we realize that many churches have been built up in this manner, we know that the labors of the past have not been in vain, and from this knowledge we should gain new courage and strength to continue this work throughout our country.

The story is told of a man who set out in a yacht to circumnavigate the globe with the sole purpose of showing the world that the feat could be accomplished single-handed and alone. He manned the yacht and cooked his own meals. Many times during the trip he was forced to labor with a storm, battling with the elements of wind and water. The purpose of the whole thing was merely one of personal pride and personal achievement. There was no real objective but it was purely a selfish motive to satisfy a personal whim which was without beneficial results.

We have been commanded to go into the whole world and preach the gospel to all nations, being Jesus' witnesses in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria and the uttermost parts of the world. Our world tour has the benefit of every creature at heart, the bringing to each one the thing that will build in him that which God would have built in every creature.

Young People and Home Missions

By Jane Artz

(Address at Young People's session of the Southwestern District Conference).

If I were choosing a text I know of no better than Matt. 28:19-20, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Jesus gave this Great Commission to his disciples, and it has come on down through the ages until it is still a challenge to us today. We are just as responsible for heeding this command as the disciples were in those days. It is a command with promise. "and lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," he said.

Our first duty is at home right here in our own United States. Jesus was a home missionary. He preached in Jerusalem and the outlying districts, and then he expected the disciples and others who followed after to carry the message to the uttermost parts of the world." Jesus told the disciples that they should be his witnesses first Jerusalem, then Judea and Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the world. Jerusalem to them meant home, so applying these words to ourselves it means home to us also.

Our forefathers heeded this command and felt the responsibility very keenly. They settled in the East when they first landed in this country, but were they content to keep to themselves and not spread their religion? No, theyoung men and young women pushed out to other points and built up new settlements, trusting in God and spreading the gospel as they went along. If it would not have been for them we would not be enjoying the Christian life today. It is up to us as young people to see that the underprivileged and less fortunate than we hear about Jesus and his wonderful saving power.

In all walks of life, those who are particularly blessed in any way are expected to share with others. Those who are rich share with the poor—the educated are responsible for teaching others—and so it is that we who are enjoying salvation and church homes are obligated to pass the gospel along.

We can accomplish this task in many ways. Of course, we cannot all go and teach, but there are so many ways to help. First of all, we can think home missions and talk home missions, becoming acquainted especially with the program of our own denomination. There is plenty of literature available for us to read, and when we are familiar with our own program we might broaden out and study other fields. Let us put home missions on our prayer list and ask God to bless those who labor in the fields and also others who help in these many ways. Remember too that it takes money for this work, and we can all give a part of our income for its support.

Nothing stimulates young people to work more than a definite project or goal, and

Young People and Foreign Missions

By Mrs. Leonard G. Mason

(Address at Young People's Session of Southwestern District Conference).

We, as young people of the Brethren Church, are thankful for the opportunity of being members of a church that has for its motto, "The Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible." Because we have this for our motto, we believe in fulfilling all the commands of Jesus as far as we are able to do so with God's help. Since the topic assigned to me is "Young People and Foreign Missions." I wish to base my facts on the commands given in Matthew 28:19-20. "Go, ye, therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." We believe that this command of Jesus is just as important as others, therefore, we stress Foreign Mission work as a very vital work in our church.

Listen, God had but one Son and he was a Foreign Missionary.

The followers of Jesus were first called Christians in a Foreign Missionary Church.

Every Book in the New Testament was written by a Foreign Missionary.

Every Epistle in the New Testament was written to a convert of Foreign Missions or to a Foreign Mission Church.

The Book of Revelation was written to seven Foreign Mission Churches.

The Gospel of Luke was written by a Foreign Missionary Convert.

The Book of Acts describes the first Foreign Missionary journeys.

Every Apostle but one became a Foreign Missionary. The only one who did not become a Foreign Missionary was a traitor.

Not only because we are commanded, but because they are pleading "Come over and help us," do we want to tell the story. If we name the name of Jesus and profess to be followers of him, we must either give him out to others or give him up. If "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have eternal Life" instead, isn't the pardon worth giving to those who know it not?

How unmindful we are that all our blessings, the comforts of home, of relatives, and friends are ours only because of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Shall we who enjoy the love of Christ and his blessed salvation deny to those in darkness the light that has been given to us?

A little girl in India, who visited the mission school for the first time, and heard the story of the Cross, lingered behind after all the others had gone. A missionary saw her and asked if there was anything she could do for her. The girl replied, "Did Jesus do all this for us just because he loved us?" And the teacher had to say, "Just because of his great love." Then the little girl said, "I want to ask him if he won't help me to love him too." And the story goes on to tell that so great became her love for him that in a few years she was one of the greatest native workers, bringing many, many souls to her Saviour. So when we too, become concerned about those in darkness, we want them to know the love of our Saviour.

Just how can we as young people help others to know of the love of Christ? First, we can give ourselves to field work. Allen Lee Bennett, our youngest missionary, who gave his life for the African work was only twenty-two years of age when he went to the field. He was a talented young man, full of ambition for the Lord. We know not why a life of such suffering and devotion should have so early culminated in death. We know not why talents so extraordinary should have been so early obscured to earthly vision. We question not. Like Enoch, Allen Bennett walked with God and he was not for God took him. May it be that through his death, not one, but many others shall go forth to dark Africa.

God doesn't intend that all should go to the Foreign Field. Young people are needed here at home to keep the home fires burning. Just how can we help in the Mission cause and remain at home? There are several ways: Be it remembered that our prayers are needed at all times. Then to support the missionaries and keep up the mission stations money is also needed. We, as young people can deny ourselves many things, even at a great sacrifice, so God's work will not have to suffer for lack of funds.

I am proud to be a member of the Sisterhood Society because I think if we meet our goals, and carry out our devotional programs and do the other things for which the Sisterhood stands, we will, in our humble way, have a very definite part in Foreign Mission work, even though we stay at home. I wish it were possible for the young men of the church to have an opportunity to belong to a like organization for young men. May this possibility be a reality soon.

When we are conscious of the great need, and are personally interested, then follows more intense prayer on our part then are we first moved to give of our wealth and ourselves, that this great work may be carried on and Light be scattered to the uttermost parts of the world.

Will they say,

"Is it because our skin is dark

Our souls are darkened too?

White brothers, do you have a Light

Our fathers never knew?

We heard it whispered, there is One

Could turn our night to day.

It must be that he died,—at least

He never came our way.

We even heard it said that he Could wash us white as snow.

If we but knew the way to him,

How gladly we would go!

Some said that he was lifted up,

A Light upon a hill!

A cross, a crown! O can it be

That Light is shining still?

Was it for us as well as you?

It cannot be. We know

That you are fair,—were it for us

You would have told us so!

White brothers, we whose skins are dark

Whose souls are darkened, too.

Must we forever plead in vain

For Light? We're trusting you!

—Martha Snell Nickolson.

acles of Calvary." We can't see how anyone, hearing those messages, could continue in indifference to the cross of Christ. We were brought closer to him than ever before.

We have four Christian Endeavor Societies: The Adult, Senior Young People, Intermediate Young People, and Junior. They hold a service once a month at the Sailors' Rest Mission in San Pedro, furnishing speakers, music, and a meal for the men. Men have been wonderfully saved through these meetings. Just last month a young man accepted Christ after much persuasion by those in charge. He couldn't understand how he could be saved from the burden of sin on him but finally saw that Christ took that sin on himself at the cross; and this month when our meeting was held he was there happy to be in the service of the Lord.

Fourteen of our young people attended the Brethren Young People's Conference at Camp Bethel and came home much enthused and more willing that Christ should have the pre-eminence which was the conference theme. The young men have recently been organized into a Fishermen's Club and are meeting once a week learning how to do personal work.

We just finished a four days' meeting with the Ashland College Quartet. We are glad to have had these young men with us even for so short a time. Their message in song and testimony are certainly worth while, Christ being the center of both.

We are planning for a two weeks' revival campaign in the fall if the Lord tarries and request your prayers that many might be saved and that many others might fully surrender to him.

OUR DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA

As has been our custom, for nine successive years, we again conducted our Summer Bible School.

Each preceding effort along this line was always successful, but this summers' work crowned them all. Everyone capable of judging will agree that this vacation school was the best we have ever had. There were fewer inducements offered this year than ever before owing to the financial conditions but even then the attendance was larger than at any other time reaching some days as high as one hundred and twenty-six with an average of one hundred and twelve for the term of three weeks. There were some community church schools not far from ours representing several different denominations that could not cope with ours for attendance and they offered longer play periods and other attractions aside from Bible study.

The school was well advertised by the women of the church who canvassed the homes in our immediate vicinity for prospective pupils and in this way brought many from the neighborhood who do not attend our Sunday school. The week preceding the opening of the school we had our annual parade of enrolled scholars. The parade was led by detailed police in a red automobile and was followed by a band car of music playing hymns and the children followed in private automobiles with banners flying and flags waving and horns tooting. The children enjoyed the parade very much and the people of the neighborhood knew

Great Correspondent*

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF SOUTH-GATE, CALIFORNIA

We of Southgate have much to be thankful for. We thank and praise him for all the many blessings we have received. More and more of our members are seeing the necessity of putting God first and are being blessed abundantly.

At our last business meeting, July 11th, our pastor reported that our church attendance had made a substantial increase in the past year and especially in the last three months. The average attendance for the past twelve months is as follows: Sunday A. M. services, 91; P. M. services, 86; and prayer meeting 41; and for the past three months: Sunday A. M. 105; P. M. 92, and prayer meeting 50. Our prayer meetings are services of definite prayer and Bible study.

We now have three Home Bible Classes a week. We ask your prayers for these and that more might volunteer to teach other classes.

A prophetic Bible conference was held April 2 to 9 with Rev. Geo. Hunter and Rev. W. H. Pike of the American-European Fellowship and the Bible Research Society. The subject of the conference was God's great time piece "Israel." Following this our pastor continued the meetings until Easter, using as his theme, "The Six Mir-that something was happening at Tenth and Dauphin.

The school began on July the fifth with an enrollment of one hundred and thirty pupils, eleven efficient teachers and our good pastor as principal of the school. This was truly a Bible school for everyday was spent in learning Gospel songs, Scriptures, Great Bible Themes and the Way of Salvation. This school was a splendid proof of the fact that young people and very young people, can be attracted and held by the Word of God when presented by consecrated teachers, who know the Word and have a desire for lost souls. We cannot give too many thanks or too much praise to all our splendid teachers who gave their time and energy gratis for such great work for the Master. Many of our teachers came a great distance each day to teach in the school and some have been serving faithfully in this work for nine successive summers. Our greatest day was "Decision Day", a day set apart toward the close of the sessions when the older boys and girls were given the opportunity by our pastor to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour and we are thankful to say that twenty-one took their stand for Christ. Surely this is worthwhile aside from the work among the smaller children and the contact with the parents through the school.

On Wednesday evening July the twenty-sixth, the closing exercises were held in the church auditorium. The congregation was large and many new faces were among it but all enjoyed and appreciated the service. The program rendered was indeed wonderful for we saw how these children from six to sixteen years of age had worked and in the short time learned much of the Word of God and its great truths. Their note books were placed on tables for inspection and I am sure the older folks would have found it quite a task to answer the Bible questions, recite the verses and whole passages of Scripture and prepare the note books which these young people did so efficiently. Surely this precious seed sown in these young people's tender hearts by the patient teachers, will bear much fruit in the days to come.

On Thursday, July the twenty-seventh, the entire school enrollment were taken in automobiles to one of our parks where lunch was provided for them and in this pleasant way, ended the greatest Daily Vacation Bible School in our history.

The Brethren Church for Such a Time as This

nate in the clearly defined Scriptural position taken by these founders and organizers, and, that after fifty years, our position remains unchanged.

The Task of the Church has not Changed

It is apparent that the work of the Brethren church in this day of need, is EVANGELISM. But what is evangelism? The definition is, "The preaching or promulgation of the gospel." It might be defined as the church at work, busy at her divinely appointed task; it is the continuing of that which had its beginning nineteen hundred years ago when the disciples went everywhere preaching the Word. No one can thoughtfully read the New Testament without being persuaded that this is true. The early disciples never questioned the obligation resting upon them to preach the Gospel as a Witness to all nations. Through the Great Commission our Lord and Master is placing great obligation upon us. As if he were here speaking, we hear him say: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:18-20) This then is our task, but until we are all agreed on this point, no great results can be realized. It is the work of the whole church; all her resources must be brought into action; all the institutional and auxiliary activities of our beloved brotherhood must be made to contribute to this end. Through leaders trained over a long period of time, through the printed page speaking the truth in Christ, through numerous gifts large and small and made at great sacrifice, the story of redeeming love, of cleansing from sin, of eternal hope through faith in Christ must be told at home and abroad, yea, even to the uttermost parts of the earth. Conditions existing over the world, among all peoples, requires haste. However much the conditions of the present are like other times, this must be admitted: Never has there been such widespread organized opposition to the cause of Christ as at the present. The purpose of Satan is apparent—the setting aside of Jesus Christ and the exaltation of Man. What is done in the way of evangelizing must be done quickly. Many world rulers, denying the existence of God, are closing the door of opportunity.

A Rotten Core Endangers the rest of the Apple

It is apparent, that if we as a people, are to be used mightily of God in our evangelistic and missionary endeavor, we must experience a spiritual revival within the church. An extreme condition within the economic world does not make for greater spirituality. There is little evidence that the low mark of the depression caused God's people to return to their altars of prayer and sacrifice, and to holy and righteous living. There is within our country at present a seeming return to material prosperity. But though we should come back to a normal condition economically, this is no guarantee of increased spirituality. Admitting that the supreme need of the hour is a revival of religion, it is to be noted that revival means life again, and can occur only where there has already been life; or, a revival is something which must take place within the church. But how is this to be brought about? In Israel, a revival was repeatedly brought about through the forsaking of the altars of Baal, and the reconstructing of the altar of prayer and sacrifice to Jehovah; in the early church, the fires of spiritual life and activity were kept burning by faithfulness in prayer and the preaching of the Word. The same spirit of forsaking sin and turning to the Lord, of faithfulness in prayer and testimony, will make for a revival of religion today. It was while they were praying that the place was shaken where they were, and the Holy Spirit was poured out upon them with power.

Men Must Hazard their Lives for the Faith

Without presuming to instruct the church, there are a few things which, in my humble judgment, I feel should take place within in our fold if we are to be more largely used in the Lord's service. Not least among these, is the possession of the spirit of sacrifice. An aggressive and progressive work of evangelism and missionary endeavor can be carried on only at great cost. A willingness to sacrifice is the one thing needed. The early church evangelized under adverse and unsettled conditions. Persecution, hardship and privation were the lot of those who went forth with the Gospel story. These men of God were imperiled but faithful; they were steadfast in things fundamental, obedient to heavenly visions, and gave to the cause their earthly possessions. They rejoiced being counted worthy to suffer for their Lord, and counted not life dear unto themselves. The cause they had espoused was bigger than life; they could suffer persecution and even death, but they could not be faithless and unbelieving. As has been pointed out: "The historians of the Roman Empire have written the record of those tragic years, through which the early Christian church passed when its saints died their martyr deaths and all the hopes and promises they had surely believed seemed false. It was an age when life was hard and brutal and cruel; when not only shame and loss and contempt, but pitiless torture caught the humblest Christian folk in its grasp."

And all along the line from the days of these disciples to the present we find the same spirit of devotion to the cause of Christ; the same loyalty and heroic sacrifice. There has been throughout Christendom a willingness to march or halt, to endure much, to live or die as the cause demanded. It was this spirit of duty and devotion, of faith and fidelity, of sacrifice and service which gave Protestantism to the world, and the Bible to the common people. And it is this spirit which has given to the world Brethrenism. And let it be said without any fear of contradiction that this is the only spirit which will continue it. It is not too much to say that the founders of our beloved church were men who were willing to sacrifice and die if necessary for their convictions.

As a people, we need to adopt some effective method of advertising. It is generally conceded that we are poor propagandists. Many are not with us because they do not know about us. Or, if they have heard, their knowledge is incomplete or incorrect. If people at large come to know what we believe and why we believe it, we are the ones to make the facts known. William Wrigley says: "The secret of successful salesmanship can be stated in five words,—Believing something and convincing others."

Extreme Ecclesiasticism and Congregationalism

Though we, as a Whole Gospel People, stand upon a foundation eternally secure, we need from time to time to determine our security upon this foundation. The Brethren Church, to be consistent, must avoid the extremes of ecclesiasticism on the one hand and congregationalism on the other. Ecclesiasticism interferes with individual liberty. Centralization of power in the church is dangerous as we note from the history of Christendom. On account of the frailties of humanity, too much authority must not be centered in any individual or group of individuals, as the temptation to misuse power is too strong. Let us realize that history repeats itself, and prevents the centralization of ecclesiastical influence. Elder Brown in an address before the 1883 convention made this statement: "Had the penitential system of obedience to Elders and Councils, as inaugurated about the middle of the second century . . . remained unbroken, it would have left the world without a Luther, a Huss, a Wesley, a Knox, a Mack, a Holsinger. All would have remained in serfdom."

But a great danger confronting our beloved fraternity, in my opinion, is extreme congregationalism. No one church is complete in itself; each is a part of the whole. "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body" (1 Cor. 12:13). This fact means great privilege and responsibility. To belong to that body of which Christ is Head over all things, and we are members in particular; to be fused by the power of the Holy Spirit into a oneness with Christ, is the most unique relationship known among men. In the human body we have a perfect illustration of what is possible through the coordination of members. I realize the fact that, as a people, we are widely scattered, and to get together is extremely difficult, but the gains are worth the effort. It occurs to me that every church should be represented at National and District Conference by at least the pastor and one lay delegate. Each local unit would then participate in all matters of interpretation and in the formulating of the policies governing the church. With firsthand information many misunderstandings would then be cleared up; with knowledge more widely distributed, with facts more generally known, there would be a more unanimous support of the church's program. It is a dangerous thing to criticize a project where not all the facts are known. Woodrow Wilson once said: "If the American people do not govern themselves, they must submit to being governed." Which means if American citizens do not go to the polls they are in no position to find fault with what has been done. Many a righteous cause has been lost because of failure at the ballot-box. Being congregational in government, the church has the last word in all matters; but in our conferences and local congregations the action is often that of the minority, because the majority is not present to voice its opinion. We are certainly agreed on this point, no one is sufficient within himself. Each of us needs that something which comes through the fellowship and counsel of others. "It is the magnanimous spirit of unanimity which has made possible the extensive carrying on of the actual work of the church at home and abroad."

Brethrenism Should Find New Homes

The Brethren Church must give more attention to the conservation of her membership. In order to promote and preserve, special attention must be given to our isolated groups. At whatever cost, our beloved faith deserves, and must be established in new localities. We are not overlooking the very faithful work being done in this direction, but we need greatly to multiply our efforts. In accomplishing this work, no small burden of responsibility rests upon Brethren people living in communities where we have no church. Groups of Brethren laity should work for the organization of the local church. Let such get together and organize into a class. The mission boards will assist to the extent of funds entrusted to them, but it is not necessary to wait for this help. Sunday school and even preaching services can be carried on with but little financial outlay. The Methodists built up their great denomination by the aid of the class leaders, who, in the absence of the preacher, got the people together for prayer, and eventual organization. And our own church, in its early history, depended upon the local group, with their elders, to keep the church going and start new ones. A number of our best churches have grown out of just such small but determined efforts. There are several things essential to the successful carrying on of such a work. Those who constitute the group must be established in the faith, must be separated from the world, and must be at peace among themselves. Such may expect heaven's blessing. God will not disappoint, but through the power of the Holy Spirit will multiply the numbers, increase the influence and eventually establish the church. Who, among our isolated members have the initiative, the faith and the courage?

The Endtime is Evidenced in a Falling Away

But there is a still greater loss among us than that above to which we referred. It is something which is taking place within each congregation, the falling away of those who once professed the name of Christ. The apostasy within the Brethren church is indeed alarming. The fact that this condition is not peculiar to the Brethren, but is found among all denominations, is little comforting. The extent of this falling away and its evil influence is best known to the ministry and to those closely associated with them in the work of soul saving. Many there are who, though they have united with the church by confession of faith and baptism, and were at the time apparently sincere, have departed from the faith and are seen no more. Wherein is the church at fault and what is the remedy? We would not decry evangelism, but in our eagerness to add numbers, wrong methods have at times been used; but, perhaps, our greatest weakness lies in our failure to nourish and instruct. The new convert should be taught the true meaning of the Christian life. He should be made to realize that his acceptance of salvation carries with it serious obligations, that he is voluntarily agreeing to certain moral obligations. He should be reminded of the fact that he is agreeing to support the work and services of the church with his presence and his offerings; that he is agreeing to participate in the work of the church in keeping with his spiritual gifts and opportunities. He should be impressed with the place of Christian stewardship, and made to realize that his allegiance to Jesus Christ must be transferred into action. He should be told that he will be expected to support the good name of the church, that wherever he goes he must guard zealously her reputation as he would the character of one he loves. It is not too much to say that the bitterest foe of the church comes not from without but from within. That foe is indifference, neglect of the means of grace, spiritual paralysis, a falling away. This condition does present a serious problem to the church which cannot be passed over lightly. It may be an easy way out of the dilemma to say: "Let them go, we will find others to take their places." But is this the way of a mother with her child; is this the way of Christ for the believer? The lambs of the flock wandering away from the fold do constitute an obligation. As pointed out by another: "The spiritual house must inspire her own to live nobly and above reproach in all relations, in secret, in private with all men; and she must cultivate in them the fruits of the Spirit. The church shall be prompt in stating her position, in exercising reasonable discipline; and will speak with no uncertain sound against evil, especially within her folds." It is the duty of the church to do her best in the conserving of her membership, not alone for the sake of those who are drifting away, but for the sake of the church herself, for her standing in the community and for influence over others. The benefit of the church and its institutions must be measured by the fidelity, truthfulness, purity, courage, and self-sacrifice manifested in the lives of those coming out from it. Special attention needs to be given to the care and proper training of our youth of whom we have many. The dropping away from the church on the part of the teen-age folks is indeed appalling. It is apparent that, where the youth are taught by precept and example in the home and the church, many are saved for Christ and his cause.

The Needs of the Hour

It is the opinion of many among us that the need of the hour is the adoption of a definite program as an incentive and guide to the furtherance of the Lord's work in our midst. The outlining and promoting of such a program would be no new experience for us as a church. It might be a difficult matter to sum up the results of recent efforts, but there is sufficient evidence of substantial gains having been made to justify another effort in this direction. The Ohio District, at its recent Conference, has taken a forward step, and in this has challenged the entire brotherhood. I would recommend that this Conference adopt a promotion program along the lines of loyalty and evangelism with a view to setting the whole church at work with renewed energy. There are abundant spiritual resources in the church to meet and stem the tide, and set in operation spiritual power. But if we are lacking in spiritual strength, such an effort would reveal the fact. Weakness or strength are disclosed in times of testing. P. T. Forsyth once said that the ancient prophet responded to the summons with the quick answer "Here am I." But the modern prophet speaks out of confusion and despair, and asks: "Where am I?" Where are we in keeping with our claims as a Whole Gospel People? If our position is Scriptural, this fact should be reflected in large results. The day of testing is upon us as a people.

Beyond that which has already been stated, I have no recommendations to make to this Conference. The program has well provided for the consideration of each interest. I beg the privilege, however, of making an appeal to the church at large for a more adequate support of the institutions and general interests of our beloved fraternity. May I speak concerning our publications? The making of a literature is one of the supreme tasks of the church. We need to give ourselves more whole heartedly to this particular phase of our work. The printed page addresses itself not alone to the day in which it is written, but to future generations. Our fathers were makers of history, and many of the things which they did are preserved on the printed page and inspire us to Christian duty. We, too, are makers of history, and may be an inspiration to those who follow through the literature which we make in our day. Our publications are of a high rank and merit a larger patronage. No Brethren church, or Brethren home is complete without our literature. There is nothing which so tends to unify thought and belief as the reading of the same thing. Our editors are men of God, they are sound in the faith, and through the various publications are leading us to a high plane of unified faith and practice.

Our educational institution has been brought, through much toil and sacrifice, to a place of high rank, good standing and widespread influence. That our College and Seminary are essential must be conceded. Their contribution in the past to the general work of the church cannot be estimated, and they promise still greater things for the future. The support which has been given needs not only to be continued, but should be greatly increased. Are we giving to the cause of Christian education as it is carried on, by us as a church, the support it merits? The number of Brethren students in the College should be greatly increased. It is possible for some to send sons and daughters, and here is the best place for the training of our young people. Adequate support means the continuation of financial contributions—large gifts should be made, no gift is too small to be of value.

We, of the present day, are greatly indebted to the past. "Others have labored and we have entered into their labors." At the time of the organization of our beloved church the membership was about three thousand; these were without buildings, equipment or the means of providing the same. Today we have a membership nearly ten times as large, and modern buildings with their adequate equipment. Nor have we become what we are in numbers and possessions without great cost. Upon a passing generation did the heavy burden fall. Some of these are still with us. They sit in retirement waiting the summons to the life beyond. We can never repay them for their services, except, as we, like them, through much toil and sacrifice, contribute to the future. We speak of our contribution to these in retirement as a benevolence; I prefer to think of this as a pension which they have rightly earned. They are not objects of charity. When a man and his good wife have labored for the cause of Christ, perhaps over a long period of years, that which is given them when their services have ceased, is only their just dues. We should greatly increase our gifts to the Old Folks' Home and the Superannuated fund. Such gifts should be made cheerfully as an expression of gratitude for blessings from the hand of God through his faithful servants.

The work of the Lord as it is being carried on by the Brethren Church through her mission boards has been going forward with marked success. We have great reason to thank God and take courage. The secret for victories won is not hard to find; the fundamentals of the Christian faith have been preached; there has been much waiting before the Lord in prayer; life has been poured out in great sacrifice upon the altar; there has been a mighty going forward in faith and obedience. It seems to me that the great need of the hour, is the voluntary enlistment on the part of Brethren people who have in the past been indifferent to the cause of Christian Missions. The call of Christ is not to the few, but to the church to go forward in the work of preaching the unsearchable riches of his grace. The supreme sacrifice of our missionaries on the foreign field; the hard work and faithfulness of our missionary pastors in the home land, should shame us out of our lethargy. We need to enter with them into the fellowship of suffering with Christ. Let us then, through much prayer, unite our efforts in a great program of Evangelism and Missionary endeavor. Paul says: "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God" (Acts 20:27). God's anger and wrath, on account of sin, are as real as his grace and love, and both must be preached at the foot of the cross. It must not be said of us, as Dr. Joseph Parker affirmed of many religious teachers of his day: "Hell gone, the devil gone, and God Going." These words are prophetic of our times. To offset the unbelief and base denial so prevalent everywhere, we need the exultant testimony of a multitude of believers who have had the glorious experience of being saved through faith in the Son of God.

Separation to The Great Task

May I bring this message to a close with a plea for loyalty to Jesus Christ. We have named his name, espoused his cause, and accepted his salvation. Having accepted him, Christ has certain claims upon us. We are his by right of purchase; he has bought us with his precious blood. Christ calls upon his followers to live the separated life: "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord" (2 Cor. 6:17). A separated life is defined: "As one that finds the center of its interests, its plans, and ambitions outside the circle of the world's principles and practices, so that the believer will not be involved in the world's schemes, and ambitions, and therefore will be able, as a faithful witness, to bear a fearless and consistent testimony against all forms of sin." Let it be noted that we are called not alone to the hope of glory; not alone to the joys and privileges in Christ; but to a faithful and consistent life of Christian service. In a very literal and true sense, the believer has become a new creation, even the workmanship of God, created in Christ Jesus for good works "in righteousness and holiness of truth." We who are thus favored should see to it that the peace of God rules in our hearts, and that the word of Christ dwells in us richly in all wisdom; and whatsoever we do, in word or deed, we shall do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, according to the spirit of the Master, who did all things that pleased the Father. God is calling upon the Brethren Church to do a great and eternal work. It seems to me that our heavenly Father has made us what we are for just such a time as this. Allow nothing to interfere with your loyalty to Jesus Christ and you will be happy as the days go by that you have kept the faith.

masculine attire, with closely cropped "bobbed hair", a false beard, called herself King Makeri, grasped the scepter of authority from her young husband, and brother, the Pharaoh Thutmosis II, and lorded it

She dispatched an elaborate expedition of five galleys down the Nile into the far distant and mysterious and fabled land of Punt for commercial and explorative purposes. The expedition, after its long absence of many months, returned successfully to Thebes, bringing back a precious cargo of gold, sycamore, incense, trees, dwarfs, and other miscellaneous products and curios, as the rich reward of their hazardous adventure.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

TIGER-WEIR—At the First Brethren church of North Vandergrift on Thursday evening, July 27, 1933, occurred the marriage of Mr. Harry T. Tiger and Miss Mary Irene Weir. These young folks are both consistent Christians, and both members of our church here. A host of relatives and friends crowded the church for the ceremony and to wish them well on their voyage of life together.

One of the great pleasures in pastoral work is to see these young folks come to Christ in youth and come to manhood's and womanhood's estate with a deep and abiding faith in Christ. Surely they are fortified against the storms that best life's pathway. SAUEL H. BUZARD, Pastor.

MACK-HELSER—The marriage of Lloyd R. Mack and Valeria May Helser was solemnized on June 24th in Glenford, Ohio. Both are residents of this place and intend to make their home here. They are willing church workers. Miss Helser has served several years as our capable church pianist. The ceremony was read by the writer.

NORMAN H. UPHOUSE,

IN THE SHADOW

SHEELY—Mrs. Mary J. Sheefr, widow of Issiah E. Sheely, died at her home, 369 South Locust Street, Hagerstown, Maryland, Saturday evening of complications, after an illness of one week, aged 82 years.

She was born and reared in the Beaver Creek district and was a daughter of William and Charlotte (Miller) Kinsey. She was a member of the First Brethren church and the last surviving member of her family.

Funeral services were held at the home by the Rev. Frank G. Coleman, interment in Rose Hill cemetery.

LESLIE—Within the confines of the Ashland, Ohio congregation on Sunday, August 13, 1933, occurred the translation of Brother Guilford Leslie from sicut terrestria to sicut celestia. Brother Leslie's demise came in the 80th year of his earthly pilgrimage, and as a fitting close to a life that long years ago had been surrendered and dedicated to the service of him whom Brother Leslie loved to salute as "Gracious Master and Lord." Death came as the result of a cerebral hemorrhage suffered some four weeks previous.

Guilford Leslie was born in Elkhart county, Indiana, January 13, 1854, the oldest child of John and Sarah Leslie. Four children were born to his parents, and two boys and two girls, and of the four Brother Leslie is the first to answer the summons of the death messenger. The brother, Mr. T. C. Leslie, of Nappanee, Indiana, the two sisters, Mrs. H. B. Meyer, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Lillie Tillman, of Nappanee, Indiana, are the surviving members of his father's family.

On September 28, 1876 Brother Leslie took unto himself as life's avowed Miss Sarah C. Early, of North Manchester, Indiana, and for almost fifty-seven years they have shared the joys and vicissitudes of this mortal existence, the union being broken by Brother Leslie's passing to be with the Lord. To this union six children were given of the Lord. Of this number five still remain, together with the wife and mother, to sorrow at the loss of a faithful and devoted husband, a true and sympathetic father, a consistent and devoted Christian. Ten grandchildren and one great-grandchild also survive him; one son having preceded him in death.

Early in life, Brother Leslie united with the Brethren fraternity, and throughout the years has remained true to the teachings and practices of that fraternity. For some thirty years he has been a resident of Ashland and a member of the First Brethren church of this city. Repeatedly he has served on the Official Board of the church, serving many of the members of the Ashland congregation. His adherence to the principles and teachings of his Lord as he understood them, Guilford Leslie was always the courteous, kindly, consistent Christian gentleman, and those who knew him best admitted the sincerity of his motives and the fine consistency of his Christian life.

Funeral services for Brother Leslie were conducted at the First Brethren church on Tuesday afternoon, August 15, in the presence of a large concourse of relatives, friends, neighbors and members of the Ashland congregation. The services were in charge of the undersigned as pastor, and assistance in the services was given by Dr. J. Alton Miller and Dr. R. B. Teeter. "Adventure or Departure" was the subject of the pastor's address, based on II Tim. 4:6-8. Burial was made in the Ashland cemetery in the family plot, there to await that great and final reunion that shall be ushered in with the trumpet blast and the arch-angel's shout, and shall reveal him for whom our hearts long. God bless and keep the bereft. "Till he come". DYOLL BELOTE.

Pray for the Spirit's Presence in the New Church Year

Prayer for God's Spirit and Tasks

*Lord of life and death,
Save us from contentment with things that perish;
Save us from entanglement in delusion and desire.*

*Make us pure with thy purity,
Hating, as thou hatest, sin and oppression,
Seeing with thine eyes the fatal tragedy of self-indulgence,
Hungering and thirsting after thy righteousness.*

*Make us humble and obedient to thy voice;
Teach us to find our life by losing it;
Give us the will to follow thy guidance
Wherever it may lead us, in loneliness, in pain, and in grief.*

*Form in us thine own likeness, the image of thyself;
May we be clothed continually with thy nature of love.
Vouchsafe unto us the perpetual sacrament of thy grace;
The perpetual sharing of thine own redemptive purposes.*

*If we sleep, awake us mercilessly from our lethargy, Stir us to desperate faith,
Drive us to the undertaking of impossible tasks for thee;
Use us this day and every day for the salvation of thy world.*

—From a Book of Prayers For an Indian College.

Spirit of God, Descend upon my Heart

By George Croly

*Spirit of God, descend upon my heart;
Wean it from earth, thro' all its pulses move;
Stoop to my weakness, mighty as thou art,
And make me love thee as I ought to love.*

*Teach me to feel that thou are always nigh;
Teach me the struggles of the soul to bear,
To check the rising doubt, the rebel sigh;
Teach me the patience of unanswered prayer.*

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS OF THE DAY

Il Popolo d' Italia, Mussolini's own personal newspaper, declares itself in favor of the creation of a "completely autonomous Jewish State" in Palestine. The only solution of the vexing Jewish problem, the paper says, is to give the Jew the ancient homeland where they can maintain their own government, army and navy, without the restrictions of the English mandate. It sees no reason why the new Jewish State should not have at least 5,000,000 Israelites in its population, which would compare favorably with its population during the ancient glory.

In certain respects this is the most important piece of news of the century. Mussolini, despite predictions of the wise men to the contrary, has reached a place of power which enables him to obtain whatever he wants in the Mediterranean region. If Mussolini wants the Jews to have the land of Palestine, it is probable that the Pope wants the same thing. And what Mussolini and the Pope want they are quite likely to get. For that matter, England would doubtless be glad to get rid of her troublesome mandate if her eastern interests are properly protected.

Surely the end is near! Remember the prophecy uttered by the Lord of Glory: "JERUSALEM SHALL BE TRODDEN DOWN OF THE GENTILES UNTIL THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES BE FULFILLED" (Luke 21:24). The passing of Jerusalem from beneath the last vestige of Gentile dominion will mean the end of the present age and the translation of the Church. Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh.

THE POPE MAKES HAY

Along with the rise of political dictatorships in Europe one notices a corresponding activity at the Vatican. Following the triumph of Mussolini in Italy, the hierarchy almost immediately began negotiations which resulted in an iron clad treaty giving to the Roman Church some remarkable rights. No sooner had Hitler met success in Germany than the prelates of Rome began to discuss possible agreements with him. The result is the signing of a concordant of thirty-five articles between the two.

Rome never sleeps. It was always rather difficult for her to deal with democracies. She is more at home with monarchies and dictatorships. The dictators need her influence to maintain their power, and they are willing to make concessions in order to secure that influence.

The Woman will yet ride the Beast, but there is no love between them. The peace between them is a peace of expediency. At the last the horns of the Beast shall hate the Woman and burn her flesh with fire. (See Revelation 17).

DOES TRUTH HAVE DIFFERENT SIDES?

Professor Zwicky of the California Institute of Technology has recently presented to the scientific world what is termed a new theory of truth. He points out that just when the scientist feels that he has a truth which is absolute and universal, some one discovers an exception to it. This does not mean that all so-called truth is merely relative and there is no final truth, but rather that truth has various sides which may sometimes seem to contradict one another. This theory of truth is called by Professor Zwicky "many-valued truth."

Such a theory of truth is interesting, but is not wholly new. For a long time Christianity has presented a similar view of truth, and has been scoffed at for alleged inconsistency and irrationalism. For example, the Bible teaches the absolute sov-

About this utterance two remarks should be made. First, it proclaims the perversity of fallen human nature. And second, it should teach us the utter folly of trying to change human nature by passing laws against things.

The Apostle Paul discovered the same thing long ago when he wrote of himself: "When the commandment came, sin revived." Better preach the Gospel instead of the commandments of law, if you want to change men. And remember that some men have not yet discovered, namely, that the Gospel is GOOD NEWS, not a system of commandments.

DO THE ANGELS WEEP?

Not many days ago I sat down to glance at the news on the front page of a daily newspaper. This is what caught my eye:

A large cartoon pictured effectively the starving people in Russia and beneath it we were informed that the famine-stricken dead there would number millions this winter. In another column the pitiful details of another Chinese famine were given. No rain had fallen in this region since 1928, thousands were already dead, many had turned to banditry, others to cannibalism, and many half-starved were being carried off by wolves.

With these matters before my mind I turned to another column of the same front page and read there of our Government's efforts to raise prices: cotton was being plowed under; men were being paid to stop raising wheat; pigs were being killed to keep them from growing up.

Surely the angels must weep and the devils laugh at the spectacle of a world like ours. Once before, we are told in Isaiah 59, Jehovah saw the state of mankind "and it displeased him that there was no justice . . . therefore his own arm brought salvation—"

Jehovah is still the only hope of the world.

PROGRESS OF "CIVILIZATION"

While in the West I was asked whether I noticed any marked changes in the country through which we had passed on our recent trip. One rather vivid impression received was the astonishing number of ereignty of God and the freedom of man side by side. To the human mind the two are irreconcilable. More than one thinker has tried to solve the problem and ended by holding to one and denying the other. The Bible teaches, both and makes no attempt to reconcile them. Perhaps now that science has found some antinomies in its own field, it will display more sympathy toward the problems of Christian theology. At any rate, the scoffing should cease. "We know in part."

WHEN THE COMMANDMENT CAME

A friend of mine some time ago remarked that much of the syndicated "humor" in our daily newspapers was really SAD. Undoubtedly there is much to be said for this writer gets off something that is both humorous and true. Here is a case in point. "A LOT OF PEOPLE NEVER KNOW WHAT THEY WANT UNTIL THEY HEAR A SERMON AGAINST IT."

General Conference and Some Things It Did

Another General Conference has passed into history, and there was widespread satisfaction and not a few who were ready to say it was our best conference. One is always tempted to say that about the last conference, particularly if he has been strongly affected by it. That would be a difficult thing to prove, but it is a good way to feel about the last conference. It indicates not only that it was a good conference, but that the individual thus speaking was in the proper attitude to appreciate it and consequently to do his part toward making it a good conference. And when practically all delegates are speaking highly of a conference, it indicates that not only their attitude was right, but that the conference itself really had the quality to make a worthwhile impression. And that was true of our recent conference. The officers, the speakers, the leaders, and all who participated, gave good account of themselves and helped to make the conference a really inspiring and profitable event.

The Organization of Conference

The Tuesday morning business, the first of the Conference, showed the unusual interest in organization and there was considerable freedom exercised by the delegates in participating in the organization. Out of a goodly number of nominees, the following persons were elected officers of the conference: Prof. Alva J. McClain was elected the new moderator and his ability is too well known to require comment. Suffice it to say that he presided with his customary courtesy and fairness. Prof. M. A. Stuckey was elected to the position of vice moderator, and it is needless to say that he proved a very capable and helpful assistant. The office of secretary requires more real work during conference than any other position, if we have them judged aright, and Brother J. L. Gingrich, having won the confidence of conference through several years of faithful service, was re-elected, and we are indebted to him for providing us with an account of the business sessions promptly for publication in this issue. The assistant secretaryship was given to Brother Lester V. King, who has had secretarial experience on more than one occasion in district conferences. Brother Ira C. Wilcox, well known layman from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, who has filled the treasury position perhaps more often than any other person, was again selected to handle the finances and succeeded in bringing the conference to a close with all debts paid. Brother Geo. E. Cone, for a number of years the persistent and persevering statistician, was re-elected to that position. We imagine he has the most nerve-trying position within the gift of the delegates, for it seems that nothing is more difficult to get than prompt and accurate statistical reports. The Committee on Committees has come to occupy a very important place in the set-up of General Conference, inasmuch as it brings in nominations not only for all the regular standing committees, but for all special appointments, unless otherwise decided by Conference. Consequently great care is exercised in its election. It is composed of three persons and the three men selected this year are Brethren A. V. Kimmell, K. M. Monroe, and C. L. Anspach.

Conference Attendance Encouraging

The attendance was not large, but it was encouraging from several standpoints. The number of delegates registered during the week was far below the number for last year, there being 216 against 282 for the preceding year. But conditions are too well understood to require any explanation. But the attendance was quite representative, there being delegates present from every part of the brotherhood, and every district being well represented. It is good that it was so, and has been for several years, for this coming together and the sharing and consideration of common problems helps wonderfully to make the various sections of our church into one brotherhood. Then the number of young people, both boys and girls, gave cause for encouragement. The church has a future when the young people can be brought to take a vital interest not merely in the social features of church but in its business and conference life as well, and this the young people are being brought to do,—largely, we think, through the service of Christian Endeavor. The Sisterhood organization has done a great work in bringing together the girls of our churches at our conferences and building up in their hearts a lively interest in the general activities of the church. And with the new interest in boys' work that promises to develop, there will be an added interest for boys at our conferences.

Some Things Conference Did

The Conference did many things of importance, but a few things stand out as of unusual significance and contribute to this as a history-making conference.

1. A Paper Merger

First, it was decided to merge the several departmental magazines into the church paper; that is, the Brethren Missionary, the Brethren Witness and the Woman's Outlook have all agreed to combine with the Brethren Evangelist in one large publication. It is planned that the enlarged paper will contain 32 pages, which will furnish ample space for these special interests to promote their particular tasks at least as effectively as they are now able to do, and at the same time will bring to the brotherhood the news and the messages regarding all the interests in one publication. We have been preaching such a merger for years. Others have seen the importance of it and urged it. Sentiment is ripe for it. The merger is to go into effect the first of May in 1934, and at that time the old publication board will go out of existence and the new board constituted at the recent conference will take over the publishing interests. The merger plan was worked out by a committee composed of representatives of the Publication Board and the other boards concerned. The personnel of that new board is as follows: five members from the old publication board—J. C. Beal, E. G. Mason, R. D. Barnard, L. T. Black and N. G. Kimmel—and two members from each of the cooperating boards—from the Foreign Mission Board, J. Allen Miller and A. J. McClain; from the Home Mission Board, R. Paul Miller and Freeman Ankrum; and from the Woman's Missionary Society, Mrs. U. J. Shively and Mrs. K. M. Monroe. These eleven persons constitute the new board. The remainder of the reorganization has not yet been effected, but will be accomplished by this new board in the near future, we are told.

2. A Program of Evangelism and Loyalty

A second thing of significance launched by the recent conference was a program of evangelism and loyalties, fashioned after the program launched in June by the Ohio Conference. This was definitely recommended by the retiring moderator, Rev. W. C. Benhoff, in his masterful address delivered before General Conference and published in the last issue of The Evangelist. That is aiming right at the heart of progress and if the churches of the brotherhood shall take seriously this program, which will be set forth more definitely next week, we shall soon find ourselves entering upon a period of advancement that will bring rejoicing to the heart of the great Head of the church. Nothing is more important to the advancement of the kingdom of God and to the extension of the church than evangelism and nothing is more important to the strengthening and empowerment of the church than the building up of souls in knowledge of and loyalty to all the teachings and practices and activities of the denomination. It is a simple program with which conference has challenged the brotherhood, but it is most vital and comprehensive and deserves the cooperation of every leader and worker of every congregation. Doubtless our readers will hear much about it through the columns of this paper in the days to come. A promotion committee was appointed by conference and Dr. Charles A. Bame is chairman of that committee, as he is also chairman of the Ohio District promotion committee, and he will be coming to you with plans, setting forth the ideals and objectives of the program. These are the days of great opportunity and challenge because of the world's dire and unparalleled need, and if we fail to do what we can, they shall turn out to be days of judgment to us. Conference caught the vision, will the brotherhood see it and follow it?

3. New Organization for Boys and Young Men

One of the real needs of the Brethren church for a number of years has been some uniform and popularly accepted means of promoting work among the boys as the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha is operating among the girls. Time after time effort has been made to devise a scheme that might prove to meet this need, but not until this year has conference agreed upon any such proposal. A very simple organization and one that is very responsive to local needs and desires is proposed. It is to be known as the NATIONAL BOYS' AND YOUNG MEN'S BROTHERHOOD

EDITORIAL REVIEW.

Brother Lester V. King was elected the new treasurer of the Brethren's Home Board and all money for the Home at Flora should be sent to him. Address him at New Lebanon, Ohio, during September and after that at Mexico, Indiana.

Brother J. L. Bowman informs us that he is beginning an evangelistic campaign of three weeks' duration in his church at Linwood, Maryland, under the leadership of Dr. Charles A. Bame, our Sunday school editor. The meeting is to begin November 12th.

A line from Brother Lester Myers, of 3407 W. Van Buren St., Chicago Illinois, states that he will be glad to arrange for lodging in Christian homes for any Brethren people who may be contemplating attending the World's Fair in Chicago. He says good rooms may be had for the very modest sum of 75 cents. He will be glad to perform this service merely as an accommodation to our own people.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes from Argentina concerning the Lord's work in that mission field. An epidemic of influenza is hindering temporarily the attendance. Brother Sichel is engaged in evangelistic meetings in the different missions. Brother Yoder held a few services in an independent mission in Buenos Aires and baptized fourteen with Gospel baptism and conducted communion service. These people want to become a distinctly Brethren mission.

Our good correspondent from Limestone, Tennessee, tells us that the work at that point is going forward under the leadership of Brother Hill Maconaghy. Some baptismal services have been held this summer, but we are not told the number of persons baptized, but that three children await baptism. Bible instruction is being emphasized, and the training of the young people is being taken care of by means of two Christian Endeavor societies. Brother W. C. Benshoff is to conduct another evangelistic meeting for them during October.

Brother Alan S. Pearce, the efficient secretary of our Southern California Conference, supplies us with an interesting report of an unusually interesting conference. It was held in the First church of Long Beach, as usual, and is said to have been the "finest conference" yet held and was most largely attended. Dr. Bauman, pastor of the entertaining church, was also moderator and brought a challenging message which will shortly be published in the Evangelist. Prof. Alva J. McClain was the special Bible lecturer and his messages were keenly appreciated. This thriving district now numbers 2,614 members, divided among eight congregations, and has a church property valuation of $418,761.36.

The editor enjoyed the privilege of preaching in Dr. G. C. Carpenter's pulpit in Smithville, Ohio, on Sunday morning, September 3rd to a good sized audience. Again we made our trip in company with Brother J. C. McBride and his Ford coupe, and this time his son acted as the chauffeur. Brother McBride entertained the evening congregation delightfully with his stereopticon pictures of Southern California. He has a collection of very beautiful pictures and after he got through showing them and telling his story, some of the people expressed a desire to go in person to see the beauties of Southern California. The Smithville church is going forward under Brother Carpenter's leadership and the people are a loyal and cooperative group, truly Brethren, and faithfully supporting all the interests of the Brotherhood. The church is on the Evangelist Honor Roll and the Sunday school is making use of our own publications.

Sample copies of The Evangelist will be sent to churches wishing to distribute them among their members with a view to securing new subscribers. Many of the members of our churches not now taking their church paper, do not realize the value and benefit that it would mean to them, because no one has brought it to their attention. The editor has visited a number of churches in recent weeks and distributed papers among the members and has been greatly reassured by the appreciation expressed and the response to his appeals for subscriptions. Following is an excerpt from one of the very encouraging letters recently received, which we pass on not for any selfish reason, but for the sake of The Evangelist, which is the agent and organ of the church, and which is made what it is by the splendid cooperation of leaders throughout the brotherhood. This writer, under date of August 21, says: "The Brethren Evangelist, issue of July 22, was handed out in our church August 26, and I have just read for the second time your article, 'A Preference for Hot Christians' and I just want to say if there was a writeup like that in every issue and everybody could be gotten to read it, surely people would wake from sleep." Other correspondents have made mention of other features of the paper as being specially appreciated by them. We believe the paper can sell in any congregation on its merits if the pastor and other leaders will take the pains to point out the immense value of the Bible studies, discussions, sermons, special departments and the news from the field. It is to the interest of every church to give your church paper real support.

SHALL WE DISPLAY THE NRA IN OUR CHURCHES?

Some of our ministers have received requests to preach in support of the National Recovery Act and to display the "NRA" in their churches. This matter was up for discussion before the National Ministerial Association meeting at Winona Lake, Indiana, recently, and after much discussion the following resolution was passed by a majority vote:

"We appreciate the liberties we enjoy under the government of the United States. We are grateful for every lawful and wise effort our President is making toward the solution of our present economic problem. But as the Brethren Church is a spiritual institution employing neither political nor industrial methods in her work; be it resolved that we do not favor the display of the NRA emblem in our churches as such."

As implied in our introductory statement to the quotation there was considerable difference of opinion as to the proper attitude for the church to take toward the government's desire for cooperation. There was no feeling expressed on the part of any of the ministers present other than that of cooperation and obedience on the part of every Christian citizen to every lawful and right measure the government may launch. But the feeling was quite widely expressed that the government had no right to make any encroachment on the rights and liberties of the pulpit's message and influence, nor to use any pressure to bring the church as such to support any particular political or industrial measure it might devise. In the discussion of this particular problem, it must be said in fairness, that many were not ready to take any definite stand because of insufficient information at hand as to just what the government was asking and also because of insufficient time to consider it in the light of Scripture. It should also be said that in taking the action that the Association did, there was no desire to compel conformity on the part of any minister or church, but merely to discover if possible what most of the ministers might feel to be the proper attitude for the church to take, and to prepare the way if possible for a united stand on the matter.

My Impressions of the Late Conference

By L. G. Wood

Home Mission Pastor at Fort Scott, Kansas

There is no doubt in my mind whatever, as to the recent conference being the outstanding assembly of the Brethren church in recent years.

In fact, I believe, it will prove to be, history-making by the permanent influence it left on the minds and hearts of those in attendance.

How much of that sweet spirit of harmony, loyalty and devotion, which so beautifully characterized each session, may be traced to that quiet but wonderful 45 minutes of prayer and praise in the early morning, no mortal can know. But we all know such a beginning of a day is the biggest asset to a day's achievement, that one can avail himself of, in conference or otherwise.

These early morning services were conducted, just as indicated on the program. "Prayer and Praise" was the center of each service, in which men and women could and did unburden their hearts to the Lord in an atmosphere of sympathetic devotion.

Certainly it seemed a mountain top experience, and also featured that spirit of "one accordness" of the upper room.

These services were held in the Auditorium from 6:30 a. m., to 7:15 a. m., and were well attended and the general response to the leader, in prayer and testimony was fine.

The leaders were: Wm. H. Schaffer, Robert Ashman, A. L. Lynn, Ray Klingensmith, Wm. H. Clough, and W. S. Crick.

All of these leaders, I am sure, were to be commended not only for the excellent manner in which they led these morning devotions, but also for their promptness in keeping the meetings entirely within the time allotted by the program committee.

These services furnished an inspirational and devotional slant to the entire day's program.

May the delegates be able to pass on to their respective peoples many of the things which so stirred our hearts with earnest zeal, for Christ and the Brethren church, throughout the year.

The Impressions Made Upon a Missionary by the General Conference

By John W. Hathaway

Missionary on Furlough from French Equatorial Africa

All the space allotted for this article could be used in telling of the joy received in meeting the brethren in the Lord; of the whole-hearted way in which they received us back to the homeland and the refreshing to our own soul's after having been shut up for the last five years in the heart of Africa from such privileges, in being permitted to settle down and listen to the faithful preaching of the conference speakers. However, desiring to enumerate in part the impressions that the conference made, will do so by four simple statements.

1. THE SPIRIT OF UNITY that existed through the entire conference made the first great impression. Never has the writer been at a conference of equal size where this was more manifest. It reminded one of the first great Christian conference on the day of Pentecost when all were of one accord.

2. LOYALTY TO THE OLD BOOK we mention as the second impression. Something very uncommon in these days of falling away from the faith is to find a denominational conference where the message of every speaker rings true to the teaching of the Book of Books. This was true of this conference to the extent of not even leaving a doubt as to the loyalty of each speaker to the Word of God.

3. CHRIST AND THE CROSS AS THE ONLY CURE FOR INDIVIDUAL, CHURCH, OR NATIONAL PROBLEMS, so greatly emphasized by the speakers, we mention as the third. It is gratifying to find such a large body of people who recognize our responsibility to God, the ultimate misery of those who forget God, and back to God as the only permanent relief from the financial, economic and religious complications in which humanity is now immersed.

4. JOY WITH WHICH ALL DELEGATES RECEIVED THE SOUND WORD, we mention as the fourth great impression made upon the writer by this conference. Nothing is more encouraging than to find a people who love sound doctrine. There can be no question as to the future growth and spiritual prosperity of any people that loves God's book and hides his word in their heart.

There were seven thousand in Israel who had not bowed the knee to Baal during the terrible apostasy of Elijah's time. May we become (if we are not) and remain (if we are) the chosen few of faithful ones who love the pure Word of God, and delight in doing his will during this terrible apostasy that now engulfs us.

Echoes from Winona Bible Lectures

By J. L. Bowman

Pastor of the Brethren Church at Linwood, Maryland

The Brethren church is very fortunate in having in her number men of ability who are able to instruct others in the deeper things of the blessed Book. These inspirational Bible lectures are greatly enjoyed by those privileged to hear them. They are also very beneficial to the casual Bible reader as well as the diligent Bible student. They throw light on and give inspiration from difficult passages. They make Bible reading most fascinating. They make Bible reading less difficult. They enable the hearer to trace out causes which produce legitimate results. The Bible becomes a living message to a dying world. These messages help the hearer to know how solidly fundamental the teachers of Ashland Seminary and others are.

The church is safe as long as her leaders do not drift into modernism and formalism. Here in these wonderful Bible lectures you are privileged to judge whether our leaders bring messages that are true to the Book, true to the distinctive doctrines of the church or not, true to the faith of our fathers, true to a faith that we have learned to love and cherish with a devotion that is dearer than life. I am glad to say that so far as the writer is able to judge every Bible lecture, sermon, song and prayer was strictly true to the teaching of the Book, no sign of drifting, no sign of modernism in any of its forms. There is real comfort in this fact.

Perhaps an additional word as to how these Bible lectures are received may not be out of order. I am glad to pass this word along, and those of us who were permitted to attend this conference know that it is true, that no part of our conference was attended by larger numbers than these prophetic and didactic lectures. This to me is significant. It shows that our people are hungry for the very best things that God has in store for his children. In these days of apostasy, false teaching and loose interpretation, men and women have become tired of feeding upon husks and shells and really desire the kernel and meat of the inspired Word of God and in these lectures you get the conclusions of men who have studied long on the subjects assigned them.

To mention the name of one of these instructors and not the others is not quite fair. They were all good, though not equally good. They were all strong and showed intensive preparation and careful thought. You sometimes hear that we are a small church which is perhaps relatively true but the statement I am about to make is positively true, that if we are a small church we have a big message for this age and the message is more important than numbers.

One thought more and I am through. Perhaps no one thing has more power in shaping and molding the future of our church than these fundamental Bible messages. If this sentence is true then the future trend of our church will be along lines that God can own and bless. A glorious future is ours if we believe and obey the whole Gospel.

A Few Outstanding Impressions of Our General Conference

By C. C. Grisso

Pastor of the Brethren Church at Lanark, Illinois

The writer has been in attendance at our general conferences for nearly thirty years. These years have brought many changes in the personnel of our conference. We miss today many of the leaders of the church of those days, especially in the ministry; a loss indeed, were it not for that splendid group of young men who have recently entered the ministerial ranks and who are carrying on so splendidly the work as it has been handed down to them. This suggests to me the first of four outstanding impressions that I want to mention briefly.

First, The presence of so many young people. The young men were there. The young women were there. If any one failed to look in on the sessions of the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha they surely missed one of the bright spots of the conference. Their sessions will be reported by those in authority to do so, and I only want to say here that their work has been one of the outstanding features of our conference. It was the writer's privilege to speak to them Saturday morning. The atmosphere had been created by previous sessions, and the interest was intense. At the close of our message when the invitation for reconsecration and definite life-work and also for a public confession of Christ was extended eight of them came forward, one accepting the latter invitation. The future of our church I believe is assured if the lives of these young people are directed aright.

Second, I was impressed with the emphasis that was laid upon the fundamental teachings of the Word. Any person inside or outside of the church attending this conference could quickly discover that the ministry of the Brethren church is determined at any cost to set forth in these last days the great fundamentals of our common faith, and are attempting, as our Lord's representatives, to call the world back to Christ, and to his final authority in all things. The slogan of the entire conference could well have been, "Set for the defence of the Gospel," and it would have been true to its slogan. To the writer it seems a great privilege to be a member of such a body of believers.

Third, I was impressed by the spirit of optimism in spiritual things. These are trying times for most people. But withal there seemed to be that spirit of deep settled peace. Although through the year past there had come many trials and testings, financial and otherwise, there did not seem that disposition to become discouraged, to give up and to quit, but rather to "Go forward." It may be a day of real testing for us, but God forbid that we should surrender until we have at least done our best. God has highly favored us as a church. He will continue to pour out his blessings upon us if we are true to him even "In a time like this."

Fourth and last. We cannot fail to mention the interest on the part of our leaders and laity being manifested toward church extension and evangelism. The spirit of the conference was voiced by the moderator in the beginning and emphasized throughout. It was this, "that the whole church be set to work with renewed energy at the task of evangelism." Plans were outlined and adopted for an aggressive evangelistic effort in every church this year which I believe will prove to be more than sentiment. This is possibly the most important duty to be placed upon the church at this time, and every possible means should be employed to get every unit of the church into line for its accomplishment. I believe that the goal and program as outlined for us will help us if we follow their plans for us.

All of this and very much more that we have seen and heard at our late conference cheers our hearts, gives us increased hopefulness for the church's future and spurs us on to greater faithfulness in all that our Lord has entrusted to us.

My Impressions of the Evening Sessions

Some Modern Educational Ideals as applied to the Denominational College

A General Conference Address By

Dr. Martin Shively

Bursar of

Ashland College

It is a well known fact that education,—the training of youth, had its birth in the minds and hearts of the religious leaders of the world. Before the rise of Christianity, the priests were universally the teachers, and while one object must have been the general training of the student, the chief purpose was the training of religious leaders. Religion was the center round which everything revolved, including the state and all of its activities. This fact was not materially altered with the coming of Christianity, and the church was everywhere the all but sole factor in this field of endeavor. And so far as the church was and still is concerned in the matter, the object was, and remains, the training of leaders for both the pulpit and all fields of endeavor, whose acts shall be influenced by knowledge of the Word, and motivated by a devotion to man, as a creature formed of God, and responsible to him.

With the desire that men may know him, and love and serve him, the church launched the school movement, and with this purpose still uppermost, the church continues its work in this field. Almost, if not without exception, every school in the world, until in comparatively recent years, was launched for these purposes. The public school, from primary department to university, is an American institution, but even here, originally, the aim and goal remained the same. The Bible as well as the spelling book had an honored place there, until comparatively recent times. But now the Bible has been dethroned, not only as a text book, but too largely as an authority in any field. In fact it is to be deplored that in far too many of the tax supported institutions of learning in our land, men and women often preside who do not only say they do not believe it, but are too ready to go out of their way to speak contemptuously of the Book, and of those who profess to believe it, or to live according to its teaching.

And by the very fact that such teachers occupy so prominent a position in the field of learning, and in the employ of the state, by their position as well as by their attitude toward religion, they weaken, if not entirely destroy, the faith of those who sit in their class rooms. Many a young man or woman, coming from a Christian home, and themselves adherents of the church, have returned from such a school, not only with no faith, but a real menace to the society in which they move. Their mental training has only made them the more dangerous, for it has made them to be accepted as leaders in the communities into which they come. I am not disputing the assertion that not a few students do return from such institutions with a faith undimmed, but feel sure that they are the exception rather than the rule.

The situation thus described, has compelled the church to expend vast sums of money for the erection, equipment, and support of the denominational colleges, and this in spite of the fact that Christians have contributed their full share in taxes for the establishment and support of the state institutions. They have been forced to yield their hope that the church can fill its pulpits and man its congregational programs with men who have received their training in such institutions. There are exceptions, of course, but in far too many instances the leaders accepted from such schools, have been men who preach a devitalized gospel, and the church dies under their ministrations.

Modern Educational Ideals, so far as the church is concerned, can only be realized, as training is offered under positive Christian influence. I do not mean by this that either students or faculty need be fanatics in religion, but that those who impart instruction shall be acknowledged believers in Christ, and lead such lives as will reflect that faith. That situation we have realized. We have a place where the Bible occupies an honored position, and a definitely religious service is held daily; a place in which men or women of unquestioned ability and training still believe in the Book, and find no contradiction between its declarations and the actual facts as revealed by the sciences. That place is Ashland College; for all reports to the contrary, I have been associated with it long enough, and am sufficiently familiar with its heart and soul, to say truthfully, that it is an institution which is loyal to the Book, as well as to the highest order of scholarship.

I have already mentioned the fact that to achieve such ideals, it is necessary that there be adequate buildings and equipment, and a faculty of unquestioned ability and character. Thanks to the generosity of the friends of such an education as Ashland College seeks honestly to give, the buildings and equipment are already provided and paid for. And with all my heart, I believe the faculty is also provided. One other thing is fundamentally essential, and that is consecrated money, to meet the legitimate needs of the institution.

So far as I am acquainted with its aims and ideals, it is not the desire that it shall ever become a really large college, with thousands of students on its campus and in its class rooms, but rather it shall be large in the quality of the men and women whom it turns out from its halls. To meet the needs of such a goal, it should be necessary to have an endowment of $500,000.00, the income from which at 6 per cent would amount to $30,000.00 annually. For let it be understood that no denominational college can live in competition with tax supported schools, on its tuition income. At Ashland where tuition is $170 per year, a more moderate charge than in practically every other college of its grade, the actual cost of student training to the school, is something more than $300 per year. If fees at state schools are less, do not deceive yourself into thinking that we are extravagant, for the actual cost in the state school is far more, but the tax payer has furnished the difference.

In the case of Ashland College, thanks to the generous help of our Brethren and friends, we have an endowment fund of something more than $350,000.00, which yields an income of round $17,000.00 per year. And that is $13,000.00 less than is absolutely necessary to satisfy the needs of the school. This accounts for the fact that an annual Educational Day is observed in the church, by action of the General Conference, and appeal is then made for the support of the College. We cannot ask for the additional $150,000.00 to bring the endowment to where it would take care of the needs, and thus we ask for the Educational Day offering, which, if capitalized at 5 per cent, it is hoped will bring the total to such a figure as will satisfy the accrediting agencies, and keep the college out of debt.

If the doctrines and policies of the Brethren Church were dear enough to our fathers to lead them to willingly sacrifice much that men ordinarily hold dear, and then to offer freely of the means with which God had blessed them, to build and equip such an institution as we have at Ashland, and if other denominational schools will not train men for our pulpits or pews, then it seems to me that we ought not even to dream of stopping so near the end of the road, but we ought enthusiastically to go on until the task is finished. Your servants at the college, for they are your servants, deeply appreciate your loyalty as expressed in what you have done for the college, and pledge themselves to continue to give of their best to carry out the purpose you had in mind as you made your gifts, and they earnestly ask that you give them a place in your thought as you pray. You will help more and be less suspicious as you approach the Throne of Grace in their behalf. Ashland, Ohio.

My Impressions of the Evening Sessions brought by Robert F. Porte, pastor of our South Bend church. He used as his theme, "The Obedience of Christ." The message voiced the position of our distinctive plea and it was a masterly presentation of the theme. Thus with a setting of such high order, the evening sessions following kept the pace.

Tuesday evening was given to emphasizing "The Progress Realized in Christian Endeavor." Brother Riddle, pastor of our church, at Waterloo, Iowa, gave a splendid discourse in the theme indicated above. This address was based upon facts gathered by Brother Riddle and set forth the accomplishment of real Christian service. Brother J. L. Gingrich followed the above with a searching inspirational message upon the theme of, "The Divine Indwelling."

Wednesday evening service stressed Sunday School endeavor. Brother Whetstone, pastor of our Goshen, Indiana Church, brought a helpful message on "Some Needs of Brethren Young People." Prof. Kenneth Monroe followed this address by a striking message on, "The Art of Teaching." His message was directed to the teaching function and qualifications essential to effective teaching. These two addresses were followed by our Brother, A. T. Wirick on the subject, "A Whale of a Difference, or a Modern Jonah." This message was delivered in the characteristic style of Brother Wirick to the edification of all.

Thursday evening witnessed a Candle Light Service given by the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha which proved very impressive. This was followed by an inspirational session by members of the Foreign Missionary Society. "Have we Done Our Best?" was ably presented by Mrs. U. J. Shively, president of the Woman's Missionary Society. Brother A. V. Kimmell of Philadelphia, Pa., brought a challenging message on the subject, "Is the Day of Missions Over for a Whole Gospel Church?" This was followed by a forceful sermon by our Brother E.

L. Miller of Maurertown, Va. Usually we think of the speaker as "Brother Ed." Notwithstanding the serious accident which befell our brother during the year he delivered a searching message on the theme, "Christianizing, Civilizing, or Modernizing the Heathen."

Friday evening was devoted to our College and Seminary. Appealing Messages from Brethren Shively, J. Allen Miller and Charles Anspach.

Saturday evening session was given to the Home Mission Interests. President of the Board C. L. Anspach brought a forceful message on the theme of "Great Lessons 1933 has Taught as to the Value of Home Missions to the Brethren Church." This was followed by a sermon on "The Glorification of the Church," by Freeman Ankrum, vice president of the Board.

The Sunday evening session was devoted to Christian Endeavor and the closing message of the Conference was brought by C. A. Bame, editor of our Sunday School literature.

There was no uncertain sound uttered in any of these interests emphasized in the evening sessions as to its loyalty to Jesus Christ. The messages were of a commendable type, in style and content. The attendance was splendid and we are of the conviction that the seed sown will produce an abundant harvest in the coming year.

OF THE BRETHREN CHURCH. It is stated that "the purpose of the National Brotherhood shall be to supply an Annual Brotherhood Conference Program at the time and in connection with the National Conference, . . . and whenever possible in conjunction with the program of the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha." Also it shall be the purpose of the national organization to give "helpful advice" to "all boys' groups that are members of the Brotherhood," and to suggest "goals or points of emphasis," to the local organizations. It is not necessary to disrupt any existing boys' or young men's organization in any local church or Sunday school. Any such organization "may be a member of the National Brotherhood." The suggested age limits for membership are 9 and 25. It is suggested that local organizations shall meet as they may determine and that such meetings shall "minister to the four-fold needs of life—physical, mental, social and spiritual." In addition to the local and national meetings, it is suggested that there shall be state or district meetings in connection with state and district conferences. More detailed information will be given in a later issue concerning the organization. The General Conference made provision for the expense of launching this new movement by means of a generous offering.

I Corinthians

Of late, the city of Corinth has enjoyed a new resurrection from the dead. This ancient center, once called the "star of Hellas," "the gate of the Peloponnese," and the "bridge of the seas," has been a treasure house for the archaeologist. Recent excavations have resulted in rich discoveries and today the thought and imagination of the world have been stirred anew at the remarkable material splendor of the maritime center immortalized by the writings of St. Paul.

Corinth, in Paul's day, was one of the most important cities of Greece. It was the capital of Achaia, and surpassed the cultured Athens in commercial and political importance. Julius Caesar was chiefly responsible for its great wealth, beauty, and power, having built it anew following its destruction in 146 B. C., at the hands of Mummian.

The inhabitants of the "City of the Two Seas" were cosmopolitans. Greeks, to be sure, outnumbered the incoming foreigners from all points of the compass. Jews and all sorts of Gentiles sought the cultural and commercial advantages which were freely offered to its inhabitants. Halls of rhetoric and schools of philosophy abounded everywhere; workshops and studios were widely scattered; wickedness and moral corruption, an adjunct of pagan culture, prevailed nightly; Corinthian banquets and Corinthian drinkers ate and drank in Epicurean style and then turned to Worship Venus and the Egyptian and Asiatic cults of impurity.

The Church of God in Corinth

To this pagan city, the intrepid Paul came after a stormy session with the cultured Athenians. He tarried there alone, friendless, companionless, comfortless, in the midst of godlessness and licentiousness, until he met two welcome members of his own race—Aquila and Prisca. They were fellow-sufferers with the mighty apostle, having been driven from Rome because of their faith. The comfort of their home and the satisfaction of tent making with them must have refreshed the missionary greatly.

Upon the arrival of Silas and Timothy, Paul's friends and companions in the faith, the greatest men on earth since Jesus began a preaching campaign which resulted in the formation of a new church. There were numerous hardships to be endured during his stay of eighteen months, but none the less the work was greatly honored by the Spirit of God. Honor him and he honors his work as well as his workers.

He left the infant church in excellent condition and later revisited it. In the meanwhile, however, certain facts of a disturbing nature reached his ears while he sojourned at Ephesus on his third missionary journey. It seems that factions arose, discipline became lax, differences led to legal entanglements, immoralities pervaded the social life, problems arose concerning marriage, meats offered to idols, and "gifts" of the brethren; and, in addition, the Lord's table was profaned and the resurrection was denied. Paul was shocked beyond measure. His letter is his answer to queries arising in the church which he established under God.

The Seat of the Trouble

As in the first century, likewise in the twentieth century, when the world enters the church instead of the church entering the world, the Gospel of Christ is impeded in its progress. The Corinthian church members—many of them—were carnal, not spiritual. They were saying no doubt something like this: what we need is to catch the spirit of this great age and build our church upon modern moorings free from the Puritanic conceptions of that narrow-minded Jew, Paul. Our wisdom must be supplemented with the wisdom of the Gospel. Well, that way laid defeat. It was defeat for the Corinthian church members and it means defeat for the modern church members who ride the Corinthian train.

What the church needs and always has needed it not more of the Spirit of the age within its borders but less of it; we absolutely need more of the Spirit of God within and around the Church. To say that the city should enter the church and not the church invade the city, is to forget the high responsibility and privilege of the church in the world. Can our cities make our churches better? Shall the sour-grapes say to the sweet grapes, "sweet grapes, you become sour in order that you may become better sweet grapes?" Nay, a thousand times, nay!

The church, if it descends to the inferno of the modern city may expect to lose its power and lose it permanently; but if the church separated from the world, preaches its Gospel fearlessly in the modern city, she will find the city rising to her level. Surely that way leads to God and not to the Devil.

The Remedy of Love

The remedy prescribed by the Apostle Paul for every wrong condition in the Corinthian church is to be discovered in his fa-
